And in the day of the new moon it shall be a young bullock without blemish; and six lambs, and a ram; they shall be without blemish: 7. and he shall prepare a meal offering, an ephah for the bullock, and ephah for the ram, and for the lambs according as he is able, and an hin of oil to an ephah. 8. And when the prince shall enter, he shall go in by the way of the porch of the gate, and he shall go forth by the way thereof. 9. But when the people of the land shall come before the LORD in the appointed feasts, he that entereth by the way of the north gate to worship shall go forth by the way of the south gate; and he that entereth by the way of the south gate shall go forth by the way of the north gate: he shall not return by the way of the gate whereby he came in, but shall go forth straight before him. 10. And the prince, when they go in, shall go in in the midst of them; and when they go forth, they shall go forth together. 11. And in the feasts and in the solemnities the meal offering shall be an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram, and for the lambs as he is able to give, and an hin of oil to an ephah. 12. And when the prince shall prepare a freewill offering, a burnt offering or peace offerings as a freewill offering unto the LORD, one shall open for him the gate that looketh toward the east, and he shall prepare

16–18. The Prince's Estate

16. give a gift. The Prince was at liberty to give part of his estate inalienably to his own sons.

17. of his servants. If he presented any gifts to them, this gift reverted to the princely estate in the year of Release.

18. shall not take of the people's inheritance. The Prince is to be subject to property-laws, like any other citizen. He is prohibited from appropriating, under any pretext whatsoever, land of the common people. The story of Naboth's vineyard was never again to be enacted in Israel. The Prophet thus ends his Book with the double ideal of Holiness in Worship, and Justice to Fellow-man.

his burnt offering and his peace offerings, as he doth on the sabbath day: then he shall go forth; and after his going forth one shall shut the gate. 13. And thou shalt prepare a lamb of the first year without blemish for a burnt offering unto the LORD daily: morning by morning shalt thou prepare it. 14. And thou shalt prepare a meal offering with it morning by morning, the sixth part of an ephah, and the third part of an hin of oil, to moisten the fine flour: a meal offering unto the LORD continually by a perpetual ordinance. 15. Thus shall they prepare the lamb, and the meal offering, and the oil, morning by morning, for a continual burnt offering. (Sephardim end here.)

16. Thus saith the Lord GOD: If the prince give a gift unto any of his sons, it is his inheritance, it shall belong to his sons, it is their possession by inheritance. 17. But if he give of his inheritance a gift to one of his servants, it shall be his to the year of liberty; then it shall return to the prince; but as for his inheritance it shall be for his sons. 18. Moreover the prince shall not take of the people's inheritance, to thrust them out of their possession; he shall give inheritance to his sons out of his own possession: that my people be not scattered every man from his possession.

PREFATORY NOTE

The nature and purpose of this commentary on the Pentateuch for use in Synagogue, School and Home are fully stated in the Preface to Genesis.

The Revised Version is printed by permission of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and the Letteris Hebrew text by the courtesy of the British and Foreign Bible Society.

About one-third of the commentary on this volume is taken from notes on Leviticus by the Rev. Dr. A. Cohen, M.A., and on the Haftorahs by the Rev. S. Frampton, B.A. I am also much indebted to Prof. I. Epstein and the Rev. M. Rosenbaum for helpful criticism; and to Dayan H. M. Lazarus, M.A., Rabbi Mishcon, the Rev. J. F. Stern, C.B.E., and Mr. J. H. Taylor, B.A., for useful suggestions and for kindly reading the book in proof. To all my collaborators and helpers, I would here express my heartfelt thanks.

The publication of Leviticus is due to the wise-hearted generosity of Mark Ostrer, Esq., who desires to dedicate this volume as a memorial to his Parents, the late NATHAN and FANNY OSTRER. I owe a deep debt of gratitude to those who enabled me to undertake this edition of the Pentateuch—Mr. and Mrs. Leo Shaerf; as well as to those who are making it possible for me to look forward to its completion—Mr. Mark Ostrer, and Mr. B. T. Globe, of Liverpool. May their idealism be rewarded by an increase of religious knowledge, and a consequent strengthening of religious conviction, among English-speaking Jews.

LEVITICUS

NAME. The oldest name for the Third Book of Moses is תורת כהנים, "The Law of the Priests," i.e. the Book which describes the functions of the Priesthood and the duties of the priestly Nation. The Jewish name Vayyikra is from its opening Hebrew word. The current title, Leviticus, is derived from the Septuagint.

FUNDAMENTAL CONCEPTS. All the laws and commandments of the Book of Leviticus are designed to realise the ideal set before Israel at Sinai, "And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests and an holy nation." One half of the Book deals with sacrifice and the laws that safeguard the priestly character of Israel; and the other half with Holiness and the sanctification of human life.

I. SACRIFICE. The study of the origins of human worship has shown that animal sacrifice is an immemorial institution among virtually all races of men. It was therefore essential to raise this universal method of worship to a purely spiritual plane (Maimonides). This is done in Leviticus. All magic and incantation are banished from the sacrificial cult, and everything idolatrous or unholy is rigorously proscribed. With very few exceptions (Lev. v, 1, 20–26), deliberate sins are excluded from the sphere of sacrifice: but in all cases, whether the sin be deliberate or involuntary, repentance and restitution of the wrong done must precede the sacrificial act. And thus, while there are resemblances between sacrifice in Israel and sacrifice among other peoples, there are also fundamental differences that transform sacrifice as ordained in the Pentateuch into a vehicle of lofty religious communion and truth. The burnt-offering expressed the individual's homage to God and entire self-surrender to His will; the peace-offering, gratitude to God for His bounties and mercies; the sin-offering, sorrow at having erred from the way of God and the firm resolve to be reconciled with Him. The congregational sacrifices, furthermore, taught the vital lesson of the interdependence of all members of the congregation as a sacred Brotherhood, and kept alive within the nation the consciousness of its mission. It is clear that the spiritual and ethical ideals of which the sacrifices are the exponent, must remain for all time the kernel of Religion.

II. Holiness. The other fundamental thought of the Book is Holiness, i.e. purity of life, purity of action, purity of thought, befitting a priestly Nation. All the precepts in Leviticus are merely a translation into terms of daily life of the Divine call, "Ye shall be holy; for I the Lord your God am holy" (xix, 2). Holiness is an active principle, shaping and regulating every sphere of human life and activity. In Chap. xix, the demand, "Ye shall be holy," is included in a series of sublime ethical doctrines; in Chap. xi, it is embodied in the dietary laws. The rule of Holiness governs the body as well as the soul, since the body is the instrument through which alone the soul acts. The Holy People of the Holy God was to keep itself free not only from moral transgressions, but also from ceremonial defilement which would weaken the barriers against the forces of heathenism and animalism that on all sides menaced Israel.

Influence. In ancient times, the Jewish child began the study of Scripture with Leviticus; "because little children are pure and the sacrifices are pure, let those who are pure come and occupy themselves with pure things" (Midrash). And we may well judge this Book by its influence in the education of Israel. As a result of its stern legislation, Israel's sons and daughters were freed from the ignoble and the vile—from all brutality and bestiality. As a result of its sanctifying guidance, no people ever attained to a higher conception of God, or a saner appreciation of the vital significance of health and holiness in the life of men and nations.

Divisions. Chaps. i-vii define the laws of sacrifice for the individual, for the congregation, and for the priests. Chaps. viii-x describe the inauguration of worship in the completed Sanctuary. Chaps. xi-xvii deal with the laws of clean and unclean, of purity and purification, culminating in the institution of the Day of Atonement. Chaps. xviii-xxvi legislate on marriage, personal and social ethics ("Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself"), the Sacred Festivals, land tenure, and conclude with a solemn exhortation on the connection between Religion and national welfare. Chap. xxvii is a supplementary chapter on vows and tithes.

called. According to an ancient regulation, the last letter of the word ויקרא is in miniature. The Sacred Text was in ancient times written in a continuous row of letters, without any division between the words. When the last letter of a word was the same as the first of the next, as is here the case, one character would often serve for both (Luzzatto). When at a later time both letters were written out, one of them was in smaller size to show that it did not originally occur in the Text—an illustration of the profound reverence with which the Sacred Text was guarded by the Scribes.

2. unto the children of Israel. Chaps. I–V form a manual of the ritual of sacrifice for the use of the laity; and deal with voluntary private sacrifices, for expression of gratitude, prayer, spiritual communion or desire for expiation, on the part of the individual. v. 2 is a general introduction, containing some essential principles of sacrifice. These laws closely affected the life of all the children of Israel, and were not of exclusive interest to the priests. The Sanctuary was the property of the entire people, who had all of them, men and women, young and old, voluntarily and generously contributed the materials for its construction.

any man. Heb. adam. Even a heathen may bring an offering, if he is moved to do so. A man's faith, not the accident of birth, is regarded by God. An apostate is therefore denied the privilege of bringing an offering at Israel's Sanctuary (Sifra). God would accept the offering of a heathen who turned to Him (I Kings VIII, 41f), but not the sacrifice of a disloyal Israelite.

offereth. The custom of sacrifice is here pre-supposed, and is not introduced as something novel and hitherto unheard of. Otherwise, terms like "burnt offering" (v. 3) and "meal offering" (II, 1) would have been defined and their purpose stated, as was done in the case of the Passover sacrifice (Exod. XII), and of the sin and guilt-offering in Chaps. IV and V. Nowhere in the Hebrew Scriptures "is the significance of sacrificial ritual formally explained; it is treated as self-evident and familiar to everyone . . . being the natural and, like prayer, universally current expression of religious homage" (Wellhausen). Sacrifice was thus an immemorial custom in Israel, and held to be coeval with mankind; Gen. IV, 3.

offereth an oblation. Better, bringeth an offering (AJ). A voluntary, as distinct from the obligatory, sacrifice later to be described. The individual is left free, according to the occasion or according to his feelings, to decide the kind of prescribed sacrifice he wishes to bring. The Heb. word (korban) denotes "that which is brought near" to God by presentation upon the Altar; but, "alongside of this literal meaning, it likewise implies that the offering, if brought in the right spirit, is the medium whereby man attains to closer nearness to the Divine" (Abarbanel).

unto the LORD. A main purpose of the Levitical laws was to free the whole conception of sacrifice from all heathen associations (cf. XVII, 7). Hence, it was necessary clearly to indicate Who was to be the Israelite's sole object of devotion. The Name of God largely used in Leviticus is Adonay, the Deliverer and Guardian of Israel, and not Elohim, the term for "God" used also by non-Israelites; cf. Exod., XXII, 19.

herd . . flock. Domestic animals only are to be used, as these alone represent a real sacrifice to him who offers any of them. Wild animals, which cost nothing, are excluded; and the bringing of a stolen animal constituted a desecration (Isa. LXI, 8). Clean and domesticated animals, furthermore, neither prey on other creatures nor live by killing. Even as the use of iron was forbidden in the construction of the Sanctuary (Exod. XX, 25) because it was symbolic of the sword, so every animal that was associated with uncleanness or violence might not be offered on the Altar. A domestic animal that had mortally injured a human being was likewise declared by the Rabbis to be unfit as a sacrifice.

3. burnt offering. Embodies the idea of the submission of the worshipper to the will of God in its most perfect form, as the entire animal was placed upon the Altar to be burnt. The Heb. name for burnt-offering, olah, signifies "that which ascends," symbolising the ascent of the soul in worship. "By making the offering ascend to heaven, the one who offers it expresses his desire and intention to oblation unto the LORD, ye shall offer your oblation of the cattle, even of the herd and of the flock.

3. If his oblation be a burnt offering of the herd, he shall offer it a male without blemish:
he shall offer it at the door of the tent of meeting, that he may be accepted before the LORD. 4. And ascend himself to Heaven; i.e. to devote himself entirely to God and place his life in God's service" (Hoffmann). Some Semitic scholars derive עולה from עול, "wrong," and place it in the same class with חטאת and אשם, sin and guilt-offerings. Whatever its derivation, the burnt-offering is the oldest and commonest form of sacrifice for the community and individual, and it remained the chief spontaneous offering of the individual. It was brought whenever a man's conscience prompted him to do so from a feeling of estrangement from God, in expiation of evil thoughts or unwitting sins (Job I, 5). It was open to all men, even heathens from foreign countries (cf. Shekalim VII, 6, עכו״ם ששלח עולתו ממדינת הים), and was the most striking form of the Israelite's communion with God. But since communion with the Most High was impossible to anybody who was tainted with sin (cf. Isa. LIX, 2, "your iniquities have separated between you and your God"), and since no man could be sure of being sinless, the rite of the burnt-offering first had an expiatory effect (see on next v.), before the worshipper's yearning for fellowship with God was fulfilled.

3–9. From the Herd

of the herd. Burnt-offerings might also be taken from the flock (v. 10) or from fowls (v. 14). All alike are acceptable to God: He does not look to the quantity or cost of the sacrifice, but to the spirit in which it is offered (Talmud).

without blemish. As alone suitable for God's Altar.

at the door. lit. "at the entrance"; in the Court, in front of the Sanctuary, where the Altar of sacrifice and the Laver were placed. In this way, centralisation and unity of worship would be secured, and idolatrous rites rigorously banished. This injunction was, alas, too often disregarded in the course of Bible history, with calamitous spiritual and moral results. It is interesting to note that Plato likewise that he may be accepted. Or, "that it may be favourably received for him" (Leeser); see next v.

4. lay his hand upon. Press, or lean, his hands between the horns of the animal. By means of this act the animal was designated as the representative or substitute of the man who brought the sacrifice. This explanation is based on Num. XXVII, 18 and 23, where Moses placed his hands upon Joshua to denote that Joshua was to take the place of Moses as leader of the nation. Another explanation is that by laying his hands on the animal, the offerer indicates it to be his property, and hereby devotes it as his offering.

It does not seem probable that the sacrificial acts were ever performed altogether in silence. In Scripture, the Temple is spoken of as both "a house of sacrifice" (II Chron. VII, 12) and "a house of prayer" (Isa. LVI, 7). Prayer and confession accompanied the imposition of hands on the Day of Atonement (XVI, 21). There must, therefore, from the first have been prayer and confession in connection with every case of laying on of hands, such as have come down to us from the days of the Second Temple. To the Rabbis, sacrifice, without such prayer and confession, was devoid of all spiritual significance; and some applied to it the Scriptural verse, "The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord" (Prov. XV, 8).

accepted. . . . to make atonement. The Heb. word for "atonement" usually derived from an Arabic root, meaning "to cover" (the sin), is now connected with the Assyrian kupparu, "to purge away sin." In view of the yearning for God's favour manifested in the bringing of the offering, accompanied by confession and humble prayer, God would, as it were, wipe out the offence from His sight. כפר thus means to reconcile; to restore by atonement that inward sense of close relationship with God which is lost through sin, evil desire, or constant brooding upon sinful things. In English, the word "atone," which now means "to make amends," originally meant "to set at one, to reconcile, persons at variance."

5. he shall kill. The subject is either the priest, or the offerer, or anyone deputed by them. The Heb. word used is not והמית "put to death," but ושחט "slaughter," in the swift and painless way of Shechitah, which brings with it greatest effusion of blood and instant unconsciousness.

sprinkle. Better, dash. The blood was thrown against the north-east and south-west corners of the Altar. For the association of the blood with the idea of atonement, see note on XVII, 11.

6. and he shall flay. From II Chron. XXIX, 24, XXXV, 9–11, it appears that priests and Levites performed these duties. The hide was not part of the burnt-offering.

cut it into its pieces. The animal was to be dismembered, but the limbs were not to be broken. The flame would thus pass between the pieces, and symbolise the covenant established between God and the offerer; see Gen. XV, 10.

7. put fire upon the altar. The regulations concerning the fire upon the Altar are given in VI, 2f. Since the flame on the Altar must never be allowed to be extinguished, some fresh pieces of wood must be added for each sacrifice. Others refer it to the occasion when the fire was kindled for the first time. Malbim takes this verse to refer to the period of the Wandering in the Wilderness, when, according to Sifra, the fire was put out whenever the Altar was transmitted.

a sweet savour. Like the term "food" (III, 11), it is a survival in language of the early conception of sacrifice as affording physical pleasure to the deity. But this stage is long passed in Scripture, and nowhere are such phrases understood literally. "The burning of the offering is called a sweet savour unto the LORD; and so it undoubtedly is, since it serves to remove sinful thoughts from our hearts. The effect of the offering upon the man who sacrificed it is pleasant unto the Lord" (Maimonides).

14–17. Fowl as Sacrifice

14. turtledoves . . . young pigeons. The regulation that the sacrifice must be a male and without blemish did not apply to fowl, except that no limb must be missing. Birds were the poor man's offering (v, 7 ; xii, 8), and the Torah did not wish to place an undue burden upon him. The dove is the most inoffensive of birds ; and, though attacked by other birds, it never attacks in return. It is a symbol of Israel, say the Rabbis ; and teaches the offerer that he should rather be of the persecuted than of those that persecute.

15. the priest shall bring it. There was no rite of imposition of the hands when a bird was offered. " Possibly in order to enhance the importance of the poor man's offering, the whole ceremonial was performed by the priest " (Kalisch).

16. crop with the feathers thereof. Unlike the entrails of the animal which are to be washed and offered on the Altar (v. 9, 13), those of the bird were to be thrown away. " The ox or sheep is fed by its owner ; but the bird obtains its food wherever it can. The undigested food in its stomach meal offering. Heb. minchah; sacrifice, not involving the slaughter of an animal, but on that account not less ancient or important. Originally the term minchah was used in a wider sense and embraced any offering made to God, whether of animals or earth's produce; Gen. IV, 3. The two constituent parts of this offering—flour and oil—were the common articles of food. They are not natural products, but are obtained as the result of toil. The meal-offering typified the consecration of man's work to the service of God.

the memorial thereof. Or, "the memorial-part thereof" (AJ); the portion of the sacrifice which was actually used as an offering, as distinct from the part which became the property of the priests. It has been suggested that the Heb. azkarah, which is usually translated "memorial," is an ancient Semitic sacrificial term, signifying the "male," i.e. the best and finest, portion of the meal (Hommel).

3. most holy. The meal-offering would, therefore, be eaten only by the priests, and within the precincts of the meal offering unto the Lord, his oblation shall and put frankincense thereon: 2. and he shall bring it to Aaron's sons the priests: and he shall take thereout his handful of the fine flour thereof, and of the oil thereof, with all the frankincense thereof; and the priest shall burn it as the memorial thereof upon the altar, an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord: 3. and that which is left of the meal offering shall be Aaron's and his sons': it is a thing most holy of the offerings of the Lord made by fire.

4. And when thou offerest an oblation of a meal offering baken in the oven, it shall be unleavened cakes of fine flour mingled with oil, or unleavened wafers anointed with oil. 5. And if thy oblation be a meal offering of the baking pan,
it shall be of fine flour unleavened, mingled

11–13. Leaven, Honey and Salt

11. leaven . . . honey. The prohibition extended only to their being burnt upon the Altar. Leaven was regarded as a symbol of fermentation and corruption; and man's tendency to sin was later viewed as a process of moral fermentation (שאור שבעיסה). Honey was deemed in heathen cults a favourite food of the gods, and its prohibition was intended to free the mind of the Israelite from any degrading notion that sacrifices might be the food of God (Maimonides, Hoffmann).

12. as an oblation of firstfruits. Cf. xxiii, 17. Leaven and honey might be presented at the Sanctuary, though not on the Altar as a sacrifice, as were the ordinary first-fruits (Deut. xxvi, 2).

13. salt. Was to be used with every cereal offering: leaven and honey with none. Salt prevents putrefaction, while leaven and honey produce it. Salt is a preservative, and typifies that which is abiding; cf. "an everlasting with all thine offerings. Also with animal and bird offerings. And, as according to the Rabbis, a man's table has the sacredness of the Altar, this law led to the custom of dipping bread in salt for the Grace before meals.

14–16. OF FIRST-FRUITS

14. meal offering of firstfruits. A further instance of the class of meal-offerings. "Parched ears" were a common article of food among the poor. The Rabbis identify this offering with the bringing of the Omer (XXIII, 10f).

Chapter III. The Peace-Offering

1–5. From the Herd

1. peace offerings. Or, "thank-offerings," Heb. zebach shelamim, or merely zebach or zebachim, sacrifice made in fulfilment of a vow, or in gratitude for benefits received or expected. It would thus be an occasion when man seeks and obtains peace with his Creator. In the peace-offering there was inherent a feeling of joyousness, either in celebrating a happy occasion in the people's life (I Sam. xi, 15), or some important event in connection with a family or individual (Gen. xxxi, 54). Unlike a burnt-offering, a peace-offering could be either male or female; and only a small part of the peace-offering was burnt on the Altar. All the rest, with the exception of portions reserved for the priests, was eaten by the offerer, his kinsmen and guests, at a solemn meal which followed the offering of the sacrifice. "It promoted the feeling of solidarity in the nation or family, and also pointed to dependence unto the LORD, thou shalt offer for the meal offering of thy firstfruits corn in the ear parched with fire, bruised corn of the fresh ear. 15. And thou shalt put oil upon it, and lay frankincense thereon : it is a meal offering. 16. And the priest shall burn the memorial of it, part of the bruised corn thereof, and part of the oil thereof, with all the frankincense thereof : it is an offering made by fire unto the LORD.*iv

CHAPTER III

3 1. And if his oblation be a sacrifice of peace offerings ; if he offer of the herd, whether male or female, he shall offer it without blemish before the LORD. 2. And he shall lay his hand upon the head of his oblation, and kill it at the door of the tent of meeting : and Aaron's sons the priests shall sprinkle the blood upon the altar round about. 3. And he shall offer of the sacrifice of peace offerings an offering made by fire unto the LORD ; the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards, 4. and the two kidneys, and the fat that is on them, which upon God for protection and for all the blessings of life" (Chapmann-Streane).

2. sprinkle the blood. To obtain atonement for the offerer, in case he has done anything that rendered him unworthy to partake of the sacrificial meal. It was a rite of purification.

3. the fat. The fat which is attached to the stomach and extends over the intestines is forbidden to Jews as food, and has to be removed from the animal by "porging." It is here commanded to be devoted to the Altar.

4. the caul. Better, the lobe; attaching the liver to the kidneys.

5. burn it. i.e. all that has been mentioned in the preceding verses.

6–17. From the Flock

9. the fat tail. Of certain breeds of sheep in the Orient.

11. food of the offering. lit. "bread of the offering." The phrase is identical in meaning with a similar phrase in v. 5 and 16. The Heb. לחם, "bread," has here its primitive Semitic meaning "flesh"—another indication of the hoary age of the sacrificial system and its technical vocabulary.

Aaron's sons shall burn it on the altar upon the or female, he shall offer it without blemish.

and the fat that is upon them, which is by the

the offering made by fire unto the LORD.

12. And if his oblation be a goat, then he shall offer it before the LORD: 13. and he shall lay his hand upon the head of it, and kill it before the

12. goat. The treatment is the same as that of the lamb, with the exception of the fat tail. Birds were not accepted as a peace-offering, because they were not deemed sufficient to constitute a sacrificial meal.

17. a perpetual statute. The Sifra explains the verse thus: "a perpetual statute"—the prohibition of eating fat and blood applied not only whilst the Israelites were in the Wilderness when the sacrificial fat was burnt on the Altar in the Tabernacle, but also during the period of the Temple. "Throughout your generations"—the prohibition applies also to later times when sacrifices were no longer offered; "in all your dwellings"—and it applies to all lands, even those outside Palestine where sacrifices could never be offered. See on xvii, 10.

Chapter IV, 1–V, 13. The Sin-Offering

Prescribed for sins committed unwittingly, it made the offender against the holiness of God fit to receive the Divine forgiveness. The animal sacrificed varied according to the rank of the offender, provision being made for simpler offerings on the part of the poor.

2. sin. This Heb. root חטא means in its simplest form, "to miss the mark." As a metaphor for wrong-doing, it is most vivid and appropriate. The sinner misses the true aim of human living.

kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, which is by the loins, and the caul upon the liver, with the kidneys, shall he take away. 16. And the priest shall burn them upon the altar: it is the food of the offering made by fire, for a sweet savour: all the fat is the LORD'S. 17. It shall be a perpetual statute throughout your generations in all your dwellings, that ye shall eat neither fat nor blood.*v

CHAPTER IV

4 1. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2. Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If any one shall sin through error, in any of the things which the LORD hath commanded not to be done, and shall do any one of them: 3. if the anointed priest shall sin so as to bring guilt

through error. Or, "unwittingly" (RV Text). The regulations here prescribed did not apply where the offence was committed deliberately, and sacrifices were not ordained for the expiation of such offences; see, however, next chapter.

3–12. OF THE HIGH PRIEST

Details are now given as to whom the sin-offering applies.
3. the anointed priest. The High Priest. Upon his head alone anointing oil was poured at the ceremony of consecration (VIII, 12).

so as to bring guilt. By any involuntary offence. The High Priest was the teacher and leader of his community. Consequently any error he committed would tend "to bring guilt on the people."

a sin offering. Heb. חטאת. Its real meaning is something that will purge, purify and wash away the sin. Its proper translation would be, "purgation-offering."

6. the veil of the sanctuary. i.e. the veil which separated the Holy Place from the Holy of Holies (Exod. XXVI, 33). The priest stood in the Holy Place and sprinkled the blood not on the veil, but in its direction.

7. horns of the altar. Of incense; see Exod. XXX, 2. They were corner-pieces rising upwards. Their significance lay in the fact that they pointed heavenward; and the application of the blood to these horns directed the thoughts of the sinner to God.

on the people; then let him offer for his sin, which he hath sinned, a young bullock without blemish unto the LORD for a sin offering. 4. And he shall bring the bullock unto the door of the tent of meeting before the LORD; and he shall lay his hand upon the head of the bullock, and kill the bullock before the LORD. 5. And the anointed priest shall take of the blood of the bullock, and bring it to the tent of meeting: 6. and the priest shall dip his finger in the blood, and sprinkle of the blood seven times before the LORD, before the veil of the sanctuary. 7. And the priest shall put of the blood upon the horns of the altar of sweet incense before the LORD, which is in the tent of meeting; and all the blood of the bullock shall he pour out at the base of the altar of burnt offering, which is at the door of the tent of meeting. 8. And all the fat of the bullock of the sin offering he shall take off from it; the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards,
9. and the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, which is by the loins, and the caul upon the liver, with the kidneys, shall he take away,

of peace offerings: and the priest shall burn them upon the altar of burnt offering. 11. And the skin of the bullock, and all its flesh, with all the blood. i.e. the remaining blood.

8. fat of the bullock. Removal of fat applied to every sin-offering.

12. a clean place. The sacrifice was not burnt on the Altar, lest the offerer imagine he was purchasing forgiveness from God by offering up the animal. It was removed outside the camp. The carcase had been used in the Sanctuary, and had to be treated reverently. The most appropriate place to which it could be removed was the ash-heap near the Sanctuary. Haupt and Ehrlich suggest that the phrase is an euphemism, and " unclean place " is intended.

shall it be burnt. As the High Priest is himself one of those who have to be reconciled to God, he cannot, therefore, partake of the sacrifice. The holy meat must in consequence be destroyed by fire outside the camp, in a place free from ceremonial defilement.

13–21. Of the Community

13. the whole congregation. An error on the part of the High Priest could easily result in the entire community going astray.

its head, and with its legs, and its inwards, and its dung, 12. even the whole bullock shall he carry forth without the camp unto a clean place, where the ashes are poured out, and burn it on wood with fire: where the ashes are poured out shall it be burnt.

13. And if the whole congregation of Israel shall err, and the thing be hid from the eyes of the assembly, and they have done any of the things which the LORD hath commanded not to be done, and are guilty; 14. when the sin wherein they have sinned is known, then the assembly shall offer a young bullock for a sin offering, and bring it before the tent of meeting. 15. And the elders of the congregation shall lay their hands upon the head of the bullock before the LORD: and the bullock shall be killed before the LORD. 16. And the anointed priest shall bring of the blood of the bullock to the tent of meeting: 17. and the priest shall dip his finger in the blood, and sprinkle it seven times before the LORD, before the veil. 18. And he shall put of the blood upon the horns of the altar which is before the LORD, that is in the tent of meeting, and all the blood shall he pour out at the base of the altar of burnt offering, which is at the door the eyes of the assembly. Its leaders; eye being used in this sense in Rabbinic literature (Ehrlich).

make atonement. Or, "make expiation for."
shall be forgiven. Because God is plenteous in mercy, forgiving iniquity and transgression.

22–26. Of a Ruler

22. ruler. Or, "a prince of a tribe" (Ibn Ezra). "Happy is the generation whose prince publicly confesses a sin committed by him in error, for how much more would he do so in case of a deliberate sin," is the comment of the Rabbis. His moral courage will serve as an example to the ordinary man.
and is guilty. Or, "and become guilty" (Leeser).
23. a goat. As the sinner descends in status, so his offering decreases in cost.
26. as concerning his sin. The meaning of this verse can thus be expressed: "The priest shall perform the of the tent of meeting. 19. And all the fat thereof shall he take off from it, and burn it upon the altar. 20. Thus shall he do with the bullock; as he did with the bullock of the sin offering, so shall he do with this: and the priest shall make atonement for them, and they shall be forgiven. 21. And he shall carry forth the bullock without the camp, and burn it as he burned the first bullock: it is the sin offering for the assembly.

22. When a ruler sinneth, and doeth through error any one of all the things which the LORD his God hath commanded not to be done, and is guilty; 23. if his sin, wherein he hath sinned, be made known to him, he shall bring for his oblation a goat, a male without blemish; 24. and he shall lay his hand upon the head of the goat, and kill it in the place where they kill the burnt offering before the LORD: it is a sin offering.
25. And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin offering with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt offering, and the blood thereof shall he pour out at the base of the altar of burnt offering. 26. And all the fat thereof shall he burn upon the altar, as the fat
of the sacrifice of peace offerings: and the priest shall make atonement for him as concerning his sin, and he shall be forgiven.*vi

27–35. Of a Commoner

27. of the common people. Heb. am-ha-aretz. It has been urged that in view of the fact that this case comes immediately after the ruler, am-ha-aretz might here be the technical term for the Council of the People; see Genesis, p. 192. In that case, however, there would here be no provision for the unwitting transgression of the commoner.

27. And if any one of the common people sin through error, in doing any of the things which the LORD hath commanded not to be done, and be guilty; 28. if his sin, which he hath sinned, be made known to him, then he shall bring for his oblation a goat, a female without blemish, for his sin which he hath sinned. 29. And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the sin offering, and kill the sin offering in the place of burnt offering. 30. And the priest shall take of the blood thereof with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt offering, and all the blood thereof shall he pour out at the base of the altar. 31. And all the fat thereof shall he take away, as the fat is taken away from off the sacrifice of peace offerings; and the priest shall burn it upon the altar for a sweet savour unto the LORD; and the priest shall make atonement for him, and he shall be forgiven.

32. And if he bring a lamb as his oblation for a sin offering, he shall bring it a female without blemish. 33. And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the sin offering, and kill it for a sin offering in the place where they kill the burnt offering. 34. And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin offering with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt offering, and all the blood thereof shall he pour out at the base of the altar: 35. and all the fat thereof shall he take away, as the fat of the lamb is taken away from the sacrifice of peace offerings; and the priest shall burn them on the altar,

1–13. Others who Bring a Sin-Offering

1. if any one sin. The Torah proceeds to describe special cases in which a sin-offering is required, viz. a witness who fails to give testimony (v. 1); one who contracts impurity v. 2 and 3); one who omits to fulfil his vow (v. 4). No distinction is here made between "wittingly" and "unwittingly,"; see iv, 2.

adjuration. Addressed to a person in possession of evidence to come forward and offer testimony. This adjuration was known as an אלה, "curse," probably because it was accompanied by the pronouncement of a curse upon the person should he maintain silence. Having interfered with the execution of justice, he required expiation through a sin-offering.

2. unclean thing. The law on this subject is given in chap. xi, 24-43.

upon the offerings of the LORD made by fire: and the priest shall make atonement for him as touching his sin that he hath sinned, and he shall be forgiven.

CHAPTER V

5 1. And if any one sin, in that he heareth the voice of adjuration, he being a witness, whether he hath seen or known, if he do not utter it, then he shall bear his iniquity: 2. or if any one touch any unclean thing, whether it be the carcase of an unclean beast, or the carcase of unclean cattle, or the carcase of unclean creeping things, and it be hidden from him, and he be unclean, then he shall be guilty: 3. or if he touch
the uncleanness of man, whatsoever his uncleanness be wherewith he is unclean, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty: 4. or if any one swear rashly with his lips to do evil, or to do good, whatsoever it be that a man shall utter rashly with an oath,

and he be unclean. Better, that he became unclean.

then he shall be guilty. According to the Rabbis, only if, forgetting his impurity, he partakes of sacrificial food or enters the Sanctuary.

3. uncleanness. e.g. the dead body conveying impurity to those who touch it.

4. rashly with his lips. Better, uttering with his lips, in contrast to a silent oath (Rashi).

to do evil, or to do good. To his advantage or otherwise (cf. Ps. xv, 4). It may also mean "to do anything whatever" (see note on Gen. III, 22; XXXI, 29).

shall make atonement for him as touching his sin

priest's, as the meal offering.

14. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

he shall bring his guilt offering unto the LORD, a ram without blemish out of the flock, according to thy estimation in silver by shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, for a guilt offering:

hath done amiss in the holy thing, and shall add the fifth part thereto, and give it unto the priest: and the priest shall make atonement for him with the ram of the guilt offering, and he

This paragraph refers to what the Rabbis term אשם תלוי, the guilt-offering brought by one who is in doubt whether he has broken a law the infringement of which involves the bringing of a sin-offering.

19. he is certainly guilty before the Lord. Render, he hath made complete restitution to the Lord. That is to say, even if eventually guilty, so long as he is not certain, the trespass-offering secures atonement for him.

20–26. Guilt-Offering for Breach of Trust

21. against the Lord. Rabbi Akiba considered these seemingly superfluous words to be of great significance. They teach that the man who falsely denied that he possessed his neighbour's property denied God who was witness to the deposit. Philo's comment on this phrase is similar: "He who deposits anything with his neighbour depends upon the good faith alone of the man who receives it. There are no witnesses present except God, the most unerring and infallible witness who sees all the actions of men, whether they are willing that he should do so or not."

deal falsely. A second class of מעילה, viz. embezzlement and misappropriation of property. The law here applies to cases which would not bring the offender within the jurisdiction of the civil courts. He had denied his guilt and sworn falsely. Later his awakened conscience caused him voluntarily to confess his wrongdoing. Though the Rabbis regarded a false oath as among the very gravest crimes, they accounted free confession of sin as a heroic moral act (Büchler).

*20. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
21. If any one sin, and commit a trespass against the LORD, and deal falsely with his neighbour in a matter of deposit, or of pledge, or of robbery, or have oppressed his neighbour; 22. or have found pledge. Security for a loan or the like. The rightful owner has no receipt to show that he had handed over the article. The accused, in the absence of witnesses, was only required to take an oath that he had not received the article, and then was exempt from repayment. Should he subsequently confess his guilt, the procedure described in this paragraph applies.

robbery. Includes theft. In the Prophets the word "robbery" includes any injustice based on law, any legal pretext or trick by which the poor is deprived of what is his. The Rabbis gave an even wider application to the term "robbery." Thus, the owner of a field was not allowed to assign to his own poor relative the corner of the field that was to be left to all the poor, as he thereby would rob the other poor of their share.

oppressed his neighbour. The withholding, on any pretext, of money due. Thus, the hired servant accuses the master of not having paid him his wages, and the latter asserts that he has paid.

When, on the destruction of the Second Temple, all atoning sacrifices ceased, and repentance, confession and prayer, in connection with the Day of Atonement took their place, Rabbi Eleazar ben Azarya formulated the same principle; "The Day of Atonement atones for sins between man and God, but does not atone for sins between man and his neighbour, until the sinner has made restitution to his neighbour and conciliated him."

When the atonement of the offender's grave sin against God and his fellow man had been secured by confession, by full restitution and payment of the fine, by sprinkling the blood and the performance of all the rites of the guilt-offering, the stain of the sin was washed away and the offender felt relieved of the burden of his transgression. Man, having cleansed himself, is thereupon completely purified by God's loving forgiveness, which turns the gravest sinner, if repentant, into a new man, free from all the transgressions of the past, at peace with man, at peace with his Father Who is in Heaven (Büchler).

NOTE A

THE SACRIFICIAL CULT

I

SACRIFICE: HEBREW AND HEATHEN

According to Bible and Talmud, the institution of sacrifice is as old as the human race. The study of primitive man, likewise, traces its origins back to the very beginnings of human society, and declares sacrificial worship to be both an elementary and a universal fact in the history of Religion.

There are many theories as to the rise of sacrifice. Those associated with the names of W. R. Smith, H. Spencer and J. G. Frazer, though highly ingenious, are now generally regarded as untenable. Apart from these unconvincing theories, there are two simple explanations as to the fundamental meaning of sacrifice.

The first of these takes sacrifice to be an act of homage and submission to the Heavenly Ruler, or of thankfulness for God's bounties; even as the suppliant expresses his submissiveness and his gratitude to an earthly ruler by gifts. The other declares that sacrifice arose from primitive man's yearning for reconciliation with the Deity. If for some reason the worshipper feared that he had forfeited Divine favour, he sought to propitiate it; and the giving up of things dearest to him—his first-born, his cattle, his possessions—were intended to effect this propitiation.

The instinct for the expression of gratitude and self-surrender to God, and especially the need for reconciliation with Him, are not limited to primitive man.

The existence of animal sacrifice as a virtually universal custom of mankind from times immemorial proves that the expression of religious feeling in this form is an element of man's nature and, therefore, implanted in him by his Creator. To spiritualise this form of worship, free it from cruel practices and unholy associations, and so regulate the sacrificial cult that it makes for a life of righteousness and holiness, was the task of monotheism. In heathen Semitic religions, sacrificial worship was cruel, often requiring human victims. It was foul—licentious rites being an essential element in many kinds of sacrifice. It was immoral—covering crimes and deliberate iniquities against fellowmen. It was irrational—steeped in demonology and magic. In absolute contrast to this degrading heathenism, the Torah banishes everything cruel, foul and unholy from the sacrificial cult. Moreover, the sphere of the efficacy of sacrifice is strictly limited; and, with few specified exceptions (Lev. v, 1, 20–26), sacrifice atones only for sins committed unwittingly, if no human being suffers by them; viz., if restitution precedes the sacrifice. "A deliberate moral obliquity is not to be obliterated by sacrifice. It must be punished under the penal law or forgiven by repentance, and for the individual there is no other means of atonement" (Montefiore).

Moderns do not always realise the genuine hold that the sacrificial service had upon the affections of the people in ancient Israel. It is sufficient to refer to the opening chapters of I Samuel and of the Book of Job. Indeed, the worship of God by sacrifice and offering was for ages the main outward manifestation of religion, as well as the vehicle of supreme spiritual communion. The Central Sanctuary was the axis round which the national life revolved. The Temple was the forum, the fortress, the "university" and, in the highest sense, the spiritual home of ancient Israel. The people loved the Temple, its pomp and ceremony, the music and song of the Levites and the ministrations of the priests, the High Priest as he stood and blessed the prostrate worshippers amid profound silence on the Atonement Day. As for the choicer spirits, their passionate devotion found expression in words like those of the Psalmist:—

"How lovely are thy tabernacles, O Lord of Hosts,
My soul longeth, yea, fainteth for the courts of the Lord....
Blessed are they that dwell in thy house."

"As the hart panteth after the water brooks,
So panteth my soul after thee, O God.
My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God:
When shall I come and appear before God?"

"O send out thy light and thy truth; let them lead me:
Let them bring me unto thy holy hill,
And to thy tabernacles.
Then will I go unto the altar of God,
Unto God, my exceeding joy."

Religious ecstasy has rarely found nobler expression than in these lines of the Psalmist; and that words like these reflected the sincere and earnest faith of god-fearing men is beyond question. However, "bad men also confided in sacrifice as an effective means of placating God, just as a gift might serve to corrupt a judge. This confidence in the efficacy of sacrifice involved an immoral idea of God and Religion. Against it, therefore, the Prophets direct their attack" (Moore).

II

Do the Prophets oppose Sacrifice?

Wide-spread misunderstanding exists in regard to the attitude of the Prophets to the sacrificial cult, which attitude is often represented as an uncompromisingly hostile one. This is far from being the case.

The Prophets do not seek to alter or abolish the externals of religion as such. They are not so unreasonable as to demand that men should worship without aid of any outward symbolism. What they protested against was the fatal tendency to make these outward symbols the whole of religion; the superstitious over-estimate of sacrifice as compared with justice, pity and purity; and especially the monstrous wickedness with which the offering of sacrifices was often accompanied.

Thus, Amos denounces the people for their oppressions and impurities, warning them that as long as these are adhered to, the multiplication of sacrifices will not avert God's threatened judgments.

> "I hate, I despise your feasts, and I will take no delight in your solemn assemblies. Yea, though you offer me your burnt offerings and meal offerings, I will not accept them: neither will I regard the peace offerings of your fat beasts. Take thou away from me the noise of thy songs: for I will not hear the melody of thy viols. But let judgement roll down as waters, and righteousness as an everflowing stream." (v, 21–24).

God would not be the God of Holiness if He did not "hate" and "despise" sacrifices, hymns and songs of praise on the part of unholy and dishonourable worshippers.

But there is no intimation that sacrifice, prayer and praise will continue to be "hated," if the worshippers cast away their vile and oppressive deeds. In the same exhortation, he pleads :—

> "Hate the evil, and love the good, and establish judgement in the gate; it may be that the LORD, the God of Hosts, will be gracious unto the remnant of Joseph" (v, 15).

ISAIAH declares that the most elaborate ritual, if unaccompanied by righteous conduct, is both futile and blasphemous. In his opening arraignment of contemporary Israel, he proclaims :—

> "Ah sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity . . . .
> "To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me? saith the LORD: I am full of the burnt offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts.
> "When ye come to appear before me, who hath required this at your hand, to trample my courts?
> "Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me; new moon and sabbath, the calling of assemblies—I cannot away with iniquity and the solemn meeting.
> "Your new moons and your appointed feasts my soul hateth; they are a trouble unto me; I am weary to bear them.
> "And when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you: yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear: your hands are full of blood.
> "Put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well; seek judgement, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow" (Isa. I, 4, 11–17).

If this is to be taken as an absolute condemnation by Isaiah of all sacrifice, then that absolute condemnation must also include Sabbaths and Festivals; solemn Assemblies, i.e., public gatherings for worship, and the appearing before the LORD in the Temple: for all these are classed by him with "blood of bullocks" and "fat of fed beasts." But, of course, to Isaiah, prayers and Sabbaths and solemn assemblies and Temple were noble and sacred institutions, indispensable to religious life, and it was only their intolerable abuse which he condemned. The same thing applies to his view of sacrifices. The Prophet's call is not, Give up your sacrifices, but, Give up your evil-doing.

A fair examination of the above words of Amos, the first of the literary Prophets, and of Isaiah, who utters what is taken to be the most sustained condemnation of sacrifice, bears out the considered opinion that "there was use, a seemly and beneficial use, of sacrifice, but there was also an abuse, a vile and God-dishonouring abuse. The Prophets made war upon the latter, but it does not follow that they objected to the former" (Baxter).

The Prophets were orators, and made occasional use of hyperbole, in order to drive home upon the conscience of their hearers a vital aspect of truth which those hearers were ignoring. And when they were confronted by the pernicious belief that God desired nothing but sacrifice, and saw sacrifice being held to excuse iniquity, heartlessness and impurity—they gave expression to their burning indignation in the impassioned language of vehement emotion. (See on Jeremiah VII, 22, p. 345f).

The lesson which the Prophets laboured to impress upon the soul of Israel was nevermore forgotten. It is repeated by the sacred singers to whom we owe the Book of Psalms, "the hymn-book of the second Temple"; by the Sages, who teach that "the sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the LORD" (Prov. XV, 8), that offerings made of goods wrung by exortion from the poor are like murder (Ecclesiasticus XXXIV, 20); as well as by the Rabbis, who declare that obedience to God and love to men are greater than sacrifice.

THE RABBIS AND THE SACRIFICIAL CULT

To the Rabbis, the institution of sacrifice is a mark of the Divine love unto Israel. Its purpose is to bring peace to the world. Nevertheless, the sacrificial cult is not to them of pre-eminent importance, but is co-ordinated with the knowledge and study of the Torah, with Prayer, and with the performance of good deeds. To the details of the sacrificial requirements they give symbolical meanings, and draw from them deep ethical and spiritual teachings. Thus, the sacrificial ordinances prove that God is with the persecuted. Cattle are chased by lions; goats, by panthers; sheep, by wolves; but God commanded, "Not them that persecute, but them that are persecuted, offer ye up to Me." In similar manner, Philo taught that "the perfection of the victims indicates that the offerers should be irreproachable; that the Israelites should never bring with them to the altar weakness or evil passion in the soul, but should endeavour to make it wholly pure and clean; so that God may not turn away with aversion from the sight of it. The tribunal of God is inaccessible to bribes; it rejects the guilty, though they offer daily 100 oxen, and receives the guiltless though they offer no sacrifices at all. God delights in fireless altars, round which virtues form the choral dance."

The Rabbis proclaim the cardinal importance, well-nigh the omnipotence, of Repentance in the spiritual life of man. "Men asked Wisdom, 'If a man sin what shall his punishment be?' Wisdom answered, 'Evil pursueth the evil-doer.' Men then asked Prophecy, the Torah, and God, 'If a man sin what shall his punishment be?' Prophecy answered, 'The soul that sinneth, it shall die.' The Torah answered, 'Let him bring a guilt-offering, and his sin shall be forgiven him.' God answered, 'Let him repent and it shall be forgiven him.'" Henceforth, Repentance becomes the sole condition of all expiation and Divine forgiveness of sins: "Neither the sin-offering, nor trespass-offering, nor the Day of Atonement is of any avail, unless accompanied by Repentance." With the cessation of sacrifices, study of the Torah, Prayer and Beneficence definitely take the place of the Temple Service. It is for this reason that the disappearance of the Temple did not in any way cripple Judaism. When the Temple fell, there still remained the Synagogue—with reading and exposition of the Torah, and congregational worship without priest or sacrificial ritual. The Temple was only in Jerusalem, while the Synagogue was in every village, the expression of the Jew's religion day by day and week by week. "The Temple was the altar, the Synagogue was the hearth, and the sacred fire burned on each of them. With the fall of the Temple, the fire was quenched on the altar, stamped out under the heel of the conqueror; but it still glowed on the hearth. . . . In all their long history, the Jewish people have done scarcely anything more wonderful than to create the Synagogue. No human institution has a longer continuous history, and none has done more for the uplifting of the human race" (Herford).

Jewish Interpretations of Sacrifice

Rabbinical Judaism accepted the law of sacrifices without presuming to find a satisfactory explanation of its details. "The sacrificial institutions were an integral part of revealed religion, and had the obligation of statutory law. It was of no practical concern to inquire why the divine Lawgiver had ordained thus and not otherwise. It was enough that he had enjoined upon Israel the observance of them" (Moore). Sometimes, the Rabbis resorted to symbolism, though to a far lesser extent than Philo. Their attitude towards sacrifices has remained that of the main body of Jews in all generations, and has found eloquent expression in the writings of Yehudah Hallevi during the Middle Ages, and of S. R. Hirsch and D. Hoffmann in modern times. According to the last-named, sacrifices are symbols of man's gratitude to God and his dependence on Him; of the absolute devotion man owes to God, as well as of man's confidence in Him.

Alongside the symbolic interpretation of sacrifice is the so-called juridical. It is advocated by Ibn Ezra and to some extent by Nachmanides. Its essence is: As a sinner, the offender's life is forfeit to God; but by a gracious provision he is permitted to substitute a faultless victim to which his guilt is, as it were, transferred by the imposition of hands. Many Christian exegetes adopted this interpretation, and built the whole theological foundation of their Church upon it.

Quite otherwise is the rationalist view of sacrifice held by Maimonides and Abarbanel. Maimonides declares that the sacrificial cult was ordained as an accommodation to the conceptions of a primitive people, and for the purpose of weaning them away from the debased religious rites of their idolatrous neighbours. (See on Lev. XVII, 7). Hence the restriction of the sacrifices to one locality by which means God kept this particular kind of service within bounds. By a circuitous road, Israel was thus to be led slowly and gradually up to a perception of the highest kind of service, which is spiritual. Abarbanel finds support for Maimonides' view in a striking parable of Rabbi Levi recorded in the Midrash. "A king noticed that his son was wont to eat of the meat of animals that had died of themselves, or that had been torn by beasts. So the king said, 'Let him eat constantly at my table, and he will rid himself of that gross habit.' So it was with the Israelites who were sunk in Egyptian idolatry, and were wont to offer their sacrifices on the high places to the demons, and punishment used to come upon them. Thereupon the Holy One, blessed be He, said, 'Let them at all times offer their sacrifices before Me in the Tabernacle, and they will be weaned from idolatry, and thus be saved.'"

Notwithstanding these views, the Rabbis and such thinkers as Maimonides and Abarbanel did not cease to look forward to a restoration of the sacrificial cult in Messianic times. "Even those laws which have been enacted by human authority remain in force till they are repealed in a regular and legal manner. Whether any of these laws of the Torah will ever be abrogated we do not know, but we are sure that in case of such abrogation taking place, it will be done by a revelation as convincing as that on Mount Sinai. On the other hand, the revival of the sacrificial Service must, likewise, be sanctioned by the divine voice of a prophet" (M. Friedlander).

The Rabbis, however, hoped that with the progress of time, human conduct would advance to higher standards, so that there would no longer be any need for expiatory sacrifices. Only the feeling of gratitude to God would remain. "In the Messianic era, all offerings will cease, except the thanksgiving offering, which will continue forever" (Midrash).

burnt offering. The sacrifice described in Chap. I is a free-will offering of an individual. Here the burnt-offering is the continual sacrifice brought every morning and evening in the name of the community (Exod. xxix, 38-42). Hence its name tamid, the perpetual offering. The evening sacrifice is to be kept burning through the night until the flames can be used to kindle the wood for the morning burnt-offering.

In later times, this burnt-offering was regarded as an atoning sacrifice for the community, and hence a national institution. The Pharisees, therefore, insisted that the whole Jewish people, and not merely a few wealthy donors, should share in the privilege of defraying its cost. They, furthermore, arranged for direct spiritual participation of the entire nation in the actual offering of these daily sacrifices. For this purpose, Palestine Jewry was divided in 24 "Watches"

With each priestly Watch, there was also a corresponding delegation (מעמד) of Israelites, part of which stood by the priests, reciting prayers during the performance of the sacrificial rites. The remainder of the delegation would gather in their local synagogues and read the portions of the Torah relating to the sacrifice. peace offerings. Mentioned only as an example.

6. continually. By means of the two daily burnt-offerings a perpetual fire was kept burning on the Altar. A continuous fire was also maintained on some heathen altars. Their fire, however, was looked upon as either the symbol of the deity or as identical with it; whereas, on the Hebrew Altar, the perpetual fire, like the Ner Tamid (Exod. XXVII, 20), was but a witness of Israel's unremitting zeal in the service of God and typified its Religion, which embraces the whole of life and is not limited to certain special times or places. This principle, fundamental in Judaism, is translated by the Rabbinic codes into terms of everyday duty.

shall put off his garments, and put on other garments, and carry forth the ashes without the

the altar shall be kept burning thereon, it shall not go out; and the priest shall burn wood on it every morning: and he shall lay the burnt offering in order upon it, and shall burn thereon the fat of the peace offerings. 6. Fire shall be kept burning upon the altar continually; it shall not go out.

7. And this is the law of the meal offering: the sons of Aaron shall offer it before the LORD, before the altar. 8. And he shall take up therefrom his handful, of the fine flour of the meal offering, and of the oil thereof, and all the frankincense which is upon the meal offering,
and shall burn it upon the altar for a sweet savour, as the memorial thereof, unto the LORD.

In the time of the Second Temple, there was a special day set apart "when it was customary for everyone to bring wood for the Altar, that there might never be a want of fuel for that fire which was unquenchable and always burning" (Josephus). This is confirmed in the Talmud.

whosoever . . . shall be holy. Better, whatsoever . . . shall become holy. As ritual impurity was infectious, even so could ritual holiness be conveyed from one thing to another. Any food, coming in contact with holy food, itself becomes "holy," and is subject to all the regulations of קדשי קדשים or קדשים קלים (II, 3) as the case may be. Many modern commentators take the phrase "shall be holy" to imply some form of consecration to the Sanctuary or obligation to do service at it. In that case, however, the Text should have been יתקדש, as in Exod. XIX, 22, instead of יקדש (Wessely).

9. And that which is left thereof shall Aaron and his sons eat: it shall be eaten without leaven in a holy place; in the court of the tent of meeting they shall eat it. 10. It shall not be baken with leaven. I have given it as their portion of my offerings made by fire; it is most holy, as the sin offering, and as the guilt offering. 11. Every male among the children of Aaron shall eat of it, as a due for ever throughout your generations,
from the offerings of the LORD made by fire:
whosoever toucheth them shall be holy.*ii

12. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
13. This is the oblation of Aaron and of his sons, which they shall offer unto the LORD in the day
when he is anointed; the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a meal offering perpetually, half of it in the morning, and half thereof in the evening. 14. On a baking pan it shall be made with oil; when it is soaked, thou shalt bring it in: in baken pieces shalt thou offer the meal offering for a sweet savour unto the LORD.

12–16. THE HIGH PRIEST'S DAILY MEAL-OFFERING

13. in the day when he is anointed. This Heb. phrase (as again in VII, 35, 38) may mean, "from the day when he is anointed onwards" (Ibn Ezra). After his ordination Aaron was to bring a daily meal-offering at his own expense, not on his behalf alone but for the priesthood as well (minchath chabittim). Likewise every priest, but only at the commencement of his ministry, offered a meal-offering (minchath chinnuch, "the meal-offering of initiation").

14. soaked. lit. "well mixed."

in baken pieces. Or, "in broken pieces" (AJ). "The meaning of the Hebrew word is uncertain" (RV Margin).

17. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 18. Speak unto Aaron and to his sons, saying, This is the law of the sin offering: in the place where the burnt offering is killed shall the sin offering be killed before the LORD: it is most holy. 19. The priest that offereth it for sin shall eat it: in a holy place shall it be eaten, in the court of the tent of meeting. 20. Whatsoever shall touch the flesh thereof shall be holy: and when there is sprinkled of the blood thereof upon any garment, thou shalt wash that whereon it was sprinkled in a holy place. 21. But the earthen vessel wherein it is sodden shall be broken: and if it be sodden in a brasen vessel, it shall be scoured, and rinsed in water. 22. Every male among the priests shall eat thereof: it is most holy. 23. And no sin offering, whereof any of the blood is brought into the tent of meeting to make atonement in the holy place, shall be eaten: it shall be burnt with fire.

Chapter vii, 1–10. The Guilt–Offering (cf. v, 14–26)

1. guilt offering. Unlike the sin-offering, it did not bring complete expiation. It was brought either as penalty for a "trespass" (see v, 14–16, 20–26), when it had to be offered besides the restitution; or in doubtful cases (see v, 17–19), where its purpose was to suspend the effects of sin.

most holy. See on ii, 3.

2. in the place where. See i, 11.

shall he sprinkle. The blood of the sin-offering was sprinkled in the direction of the base of the Altar or applied to its horns (iv, 6f) as a rite of complete expiation. But the guilt-offering served no such purpose, see on v. 1; hence the blood was simply dashed round the sides of the Altar.

7. that maketh atonement. The officiating priest.

8. skin. The burnt-offering was to be flayed (i, 6).

Chapter VII

7 1. And this is the law of the guilt offering: it is most holy. 2. In the place where they kill the burnt offering shall they kill the guilt offering:
and the blood thereof shall he sprinkle upon the altar round about. 3. And he shall offer of it all the fat thereof; the fat tail, and the fat that covereth the inwards, 4. and the two kidneys, and the fat that is on them, which is by the loins,
and the caul upon the liver, with the kidneys,
shall he take away: 5. and the priest shall burn them upon the altar for an offering made by fire unto the LORD: it is a guilt offering. 6. Every male among the priests shall eat thereof: it shall be eaten in a holy place: it is most holy.
7. As is the sin offering, so is the guilt offering:
there is one law for them: the priest that maketh atonement therewith, he shall have it. 8. And the priest that offereth any man's burnt offering,
even the priest shall have to himself the skin
of the burnt offering which he hath offered.
9. And every meal offering that is baken in the oven, and all that is dressed in the frying pan, and on the baking pan, shall be the priest's that offereth it. 10. And every meal offering, mingled with oil, or dry, shall all the sons of Aaron have, one as well as another.*iii

10. or dry. Without oil; being the sin-offering of the poor man who brought fine flour instead of an animal (v, 11); see, however, Num. v, 15.

11–21. Peace-Offering and Thank-Offering
(cf. Chap. iii)

11. peace offerings. See on iii, 1. This class falls into three divisions; 1) thanksgiving-offerings for deliverance from sickness or danger (Ps. cvii); 2) those in fulfilment of a vow made in time of distress (Ps. cxvi); and 3) free-will offerings, when the heart is moved at the remembrance of God's tender mercies (Ps. ciii, 1–5).

12. thanksgiving. The Rabbis regarded the thank-offering as a supreme type of sacrifice; and they declare that, in the Messianic era, all sacrifices will be unnecessary except the thank-offering. All sacrifices shall have completed their educational mission—all save the one inculcating the duty of gratitude. That sacrifice is to continue forever; because men and women as we know them are rarely grateful enough, even to their Father who is in Heaven. The Prophets rank ingratitude as a sin that reduces man below the level of a dumb animal (Isa. i, 3). Since the cessation of sacrifices, the Jew instead pronounces Benedictions of thanksgiving for special mercies shown him by his Creator. Persons who have been in peril of life during journeys by sea or land, in captivity or sickness, upon their deliverance or recovery, publicly utter the Gomel-blessing (Authorised Prayer Book, p. 148), when called to the Reading of the Law.

11. And this is the law of the sacrifice of peace offerings, which one shall offer unto the LORD.
12. If he offer it for a thanksgiving, then he shall offer with the sacrifice of thanksgiving unleavened cakes mingled with oil, and unleavened wafers anointed with oil, and cakes mingled with oil, of fine flour soaked. 13. With cakes of leavened bread he shall offer his oblation with the sacrifice of his peace offerings for thanksgiving. 14. And of it he shall offer one out of each oblation for an heave offering unto the LORD; it shall be the priest's that sprinkleth the blood of the peace offerings. 15. And the flesh of the sacrifice of his peace offerings for thanksgiving shall be eaten on the day of his oblation; he shall not leave any part of it until the morning. 16. But if the sacrifice of his oblation be a vow, or a freewill offering, it shall be eaten on the day that he offereth his sacrifice: and on the morrow that an heave offering. "As a select portion" (Moffatt).

15. on the day of his oblation. Cf. VIII, 32, "that which remaineth of the flesh and of the bread shall ye burn with fire."

16. vow, or a freewill offering. When a man says, "I take upou myself to bring an offering," without specifying the animal, it is a "vow"; a "freewill" offering is, when he says, "This animal shall be an offering" (Talmud).

on the morrow. They were more frequently brought than the thank-offerings; and if the same law had applied to offerings for a vow as to peace-offerings, much of the flesh would have been wasted. In no case, however, could the flesh be eaten on the third day.

bear his iniquity. Stated in XIX, 8, "that soul shall be cut off from his people." "Death through Divine agency is meant, not punishment inflicted at the hands of the community" (Driver). Certain heinous offences, both moral and ceremonial, carried the sentence of כרת "excision," as their penalty. In some cases, however, כרת seems to be equivalent to outlawry. The man who refused to enter the covenant (Gen. XVII, 14), or the man who would not join in the celebration of the Passover—the Nation's birth-festival (Exod. XII, 15)—was looked upon as a traitor, and exile was not too severe a punishment for him (Sulzberger).

him that offereth it : it shall be an abomination, and the soul that eateth of it shall bear his iniquity. 19. And the flesh that toucheth any unclean thing shall not be eaten ; it shall be burnt with fire. And as for the flesh, every one that is clean shall eat thereof : 20. but the soul that eat-eth of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace offerings, ness upon him, that soul shall be cut off from his unclean beast, or any unclean abomination, and

27. eateth any blood. See on XVII, 10.

28–34. PRIESTS' SHARE OF THE PEACE-OFFERINGS

30. wave offering. The prescribed part of the offering being laid upon the offerer's hands, the priest placed his own hands beneath those of the offerer, and moved them first forward and backward, and then upward and downward—symbolising the consecration of the gift to God, the Ruler of heaven and earth.

of that which is torn of beasts, may be used for the LORD, even the soul that eateth it shall be manner of blood, whether it be of fowl or of beast, in any of your dwellings. 27. Whosoever it be that eateth any blood, that soul shall be cut

LORD out of the sacrifice of his peace offerings:

LORD made by fire; the fat with the breast shall he bring, that the breast may be waved for a wave offering before the LORD. 31. And the priest shall burn the fat upon the altar: but the breast shall be Aaron's and his sons'. 32. And the right thigh shall ye give unto the priest for an heave offering out of the sacrifices of your peace offerings. 33. He among the sons of Aaron, that offereth the blood of the peace offerings, and the fat, shall have the right thigh for a portion

31. the breast. The fat only was for the Altar, the breast being the portion of the priests.

32. right thigh. Considered one of the best parts of the animal and was reserved for the most distinguished guest (I Sam. IX, 24).

INAUGURATION OF THE SANCTUARY-SERVICE

CHAPTER VIII. CONSECRATION OF AARON AND HIS SONS

The appointment of Aaron and his sons to the priesthood

34. For the wave breast and the heave thigh have I taken of the children of Israel out of the sacrifices of their peace offerings, and have given them unto Aaron the priest and unto his sons as a due for ever from the children of Israel.
35. This is the anointing-portion of Aaron, and the anointing-portion of his sons, out of the offerings of the LORD made by fire, in the day when he presented them to minister unto the LORD in the priest's office; 36. which the LORD commanded to be given them of the children of Israel, in the day that he anointed them. It is a due for ever throughout their generations.
37. This is the law of the burnt offering, of the meal offering, and of the sin offering, and of the guilt offering, and of the consecration, and of the sacrifice of peace offerings; 38. which the LORD commanded Moses in mount Sinai, in the day that he commanded the children of Israel to offer their oblations unto the LORD, in the wilderness of Sinai.*iv

2. basket of unleavened bread. See Exod. XXIX, 2.

3. all the congregation. Some commentators (e.g. Ibn Ezra) understand the phrase to mean merely the heads of tribes and the elders; others, that every man was summoned. The vast majority would have had to stand outside, probably upon the slope of Mount Sinai, at the foot of which they were encamped.

5 this is the thing. The consecration which is to commence is by the expressed will of God. The purpose of the general assembly witnessing the consecration was, likewise, to avoid a revolt against the privileges of Aaron and his sons. An attempt to foment one was made later by Korah (Num. XVI).

6. Moses brought. i.e. to the entrance of the Tent of Meeting, where the Laver was placed.

washed. i.e. he commanded them to wash their hands and feet (Ibn Ezra). According to the Sifra, the priests were also to bathe first the entire body, as the High Priest did on the Day of Atonement (XVI, 4). Ordinarily they washed only the hands and feet on entering the Sanctuary

2. Take Aaron and his sons with him, and the garments, and the anointing oil, and the bullock of the sin offering, and the two rams, and the basket of unleavened bread ; 3. and assemble thou all the congregation at the door of the tent of meeting. 4. And Moses did as the LORD commanded him ; and the congregation was assembled at the door of the tent of meeting. 5. And Moses said unto the congregation, This is the thing which the LORD hath commanded to be done. 6. And Moses brought Aaron and his sons, and washed them with water. 7. And he put upon him the coat, and girded him with the girdle, and clothed him with the robe, and put the ephod upon him, and he girded him with the cunningly woven band of the ephod, and bound it unto him therewith. 8. And he placed the breastplate upon him : and in the breastplate he put the Urim and the Thummim. 9. And he set the mitre upon his head ; and upon the mitre, in front, did he set the golden plate, the holy crown ; as the LORD commanded Moses. 10. And Moses (Exod. xxx, 19) ; but on the day of consecration complete immersion was required. The spiritual significance of the act of immersion, as the first stage of their consecration, is obvious.

7. upon him. Upon Aaron. The garments of Aaron and his sons are described in Exod. xxviii, and the investment of the priests in Exod. xxix. The clothing of Aaron and his sons was the next step in the actual induction into their sacred offices ; it invested them with the visible emblems of their holiness and their functions ; see Exodus, p. 342.

8. Urim and Thummim. See on Exod. xxviii, 30.

10. anointing oil. Its components are described in Exod. xxx; 23–25. The soothing effect of oil on skin scorched by the burning sun made it symbolise comfort and happiness; while its use for illumination suggested light and life. Hence the anointing with oil was regarded as a symbol of the life and light imparted by the Divine Spirit.

the altar, and poured out the blood at the base of the altar, and sanctified it, to make atonement for it. 16. And he took all the fat that was upon the

17. as the Lord commanded. See iv, 12.

18. the ram. After the sin-offering, they next brought a burnt-offering (see Exod. xxix, 15 f) as an expression of whole-hearted submission to the will of God and desire for fellowship with Him. The usual procedure of the burnt-offering (Chap. i) was followed.

22. ram of consecration. This last sacrifice was the offering special to the consecration (Exod. xxix, 19f); see next v.

23. ear . . hand . . foot. Symbolic; representing consecration of the whole body. The priest must have consecrated ears ever to be attentive to the commands of God; consecrated hands at all times to do His will; and consecrated feet to walk evermore in holy ways (Dillmann); see Exod. xxix, 20.

upon the altar. 17. But the bullock, and its skin, and its flesh, and its dung, he burnt with fire without the camp; as the LORD commanded Moses. 18. And he presented the ram of the burnt offering: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the ram. 19. And he killed it: and Moses sprinkled the blood upon the altar round about. 20. And he cut the ram into its pieces; and Moses burnt the head, and the pieces, and the fat. 21. And he washed the inwards and the legs with water; and Moses burnt the whole ram upon the altar: it was a burnt offering for a sweet savour: it was an offering made by fire unto the LORD; as the LORD commanded Moses.*vi 22. And he presented the other ram, the ram of consecration: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the ram. 23. And he slew it; and Moses took of the blood thereof, and put it upon the tip of Aaron's right ear, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot. 24. And he brought Aaron's sons, and Moses put of the blood upon the tip of their right ear, and upon the thumb of their right hand, and upon the great toe of their right foot: and Moses sprinkled the blood upon the altar round about. 25. And he

24. he brought Aaron's sons. This is not mentioned in Aaron's case, because he doubtless stood at the side of Moses throughout the ceremony.

32. remaineth. Until the morning.

33. ye shall not go out. A precaution against contracting impurity, and to prevent their diversion by worldly matters. Throughout the week of consecration, mind and heart were to be concentrated upon the solemnity and importance of the office they were entering.

34. as hath been done this day. The rites performed on the first day were to be repeated on each of the seven days (Exod. XXIX, 35f).

35. that ye die not. The warning was frequently given to the priests that any breaking of the Divine regulations involved them in the greatest danger.

36. Aaron and his sons did. Voluntarily underwent the consecration, testifying their readiness to enter upon the service of the Most High.

flesh and of the bread shall ye burn with fire.*m 33. And ye shall not go out from the door of the tent of meeting seven days, until the days of your consecration be fulfilled: for he shall consecrate you seven days. 34. As hath been done this day, so the LORD hath commanded to do, to make atonement for you. 35. And at the door of the tent of meeting shall ye abide day and night
seven days, and keep the charge of the LORD,
that ye die not: for so I am commanded. 36.
And Aaron and his sons did all the things which the LORD commanded by the hand of Moses.

Chapter IX. The Priests Enter upon their Office

1. the eighth day. The day after the seven days of consecration of the priests (viii, 33).

2. a bull calf. A two-year old animal.

a sin offering. The newly-installed High Priest began his duties by sacrificing a sin-offering for himself and on behalf of his sons.

3–4. The offering brought for the people was of a comprehensive character, and included the principal types of sacrifices. The simplicity of this ceremony is in contrast with the holocausts which King Solomon slaughtered when he dedicated the Temple (I Kings viii, 63). God does not require of His people more than they can bear.

3. unto the children of Israel. i.e. to the assembled elders as representatives of the community.

9 1. And it came to pass on the eighth day, that Moses called Aaron and his sons, and the elders of Israel; 2. and he said unto Aaron, Take thee a bull calf for a sin offering, and a ram for a burnt offering, without blemish, and offer them before the Lord. 3. And unto the children of Israel thou shalt speak, saying, Take ye a he-goat for a sin offering; and a calf and a lamb, both of the first year, without blemish, for a burnt offering; 4. and an ox and a ram for peace offerings, to sacrifice before the Lord; and a meal offering mingled with oil: for to-day the Lord appeareth unto you. 5. And they brought that which Moses commanded before the tent of meeting: and all the congregation drew near and stood before the Lord. 6. And Moses said, This is the thing which the Lord commanded that ye should do: and the glory of the Lord shall

21. waved. Better, had waved; i.e. before the fat was burnt on the Altar. For the ceremony of waving, see on VII, 30. The order of the sacrifices described had religious significance. First there came the sin-offering, denoting purification; then the burnt-offering, indicating self-surrender to God; then the meal-offering, notifying consecration of labour; and finally the peace-offering, symbolising fellowship with God. Let the people rid themselves of sin, let them submit their will to the Divine will, let them consecrate their daily toil to His service, and they would enjoy that Divine communion which is the supreme experience of man.

22. lifted up his hands. In blessing.

blessed them. According to the Rabbinic explanation, he used the words of the Priestly Blessing, Num. VI, 22f.

23. blessed the people. This phrase probably means, "greeted the people," with the joyful news that the priesthood was now able to discharge its sacred functions for the spiritual welfare of the community.

And Aaron lifted up his hands toward the people, and blessed them; and he came down from offering the sin offering, and the burnt offering, and the peace offerings. 23. And Moses and Aaron went into the tent of meeting, and came out, and blessed the people: and the glory of the LORD appeared unto all the people.*iii 24. And there came forth fire from before the LORD, and consumed upon the altar the burnt offering and the fat: and when all the people saw it, they shouted, and fell on their faces.

Chapter X

1–5. Death of Nadab and Abihu

1. Nadab and Abihu. Aaron's eldest sons, who had accompanied Moses when he ascended Mount Sinai (Exod. xxiv, 1). The death of the sons of Aaron was a favourite theme of ancient preachers to point the moral, "Boast not thyself of to-morrow for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth!" When the day of this tragedy opened, it promised to be the happiest in Aaron's life. As he, the High Priest, was moving about in his magnificent robes and performing the solemn duties of his exalted office, how elated he must have been! Yet soon his two sons were lying dead at his feet.

strange fire. Unconsecrated fire, not from the Divinely kindled flames on the Altar. On the very day of the consecration of the Sanctuary they ventured to change an essential of the Service in obedience to a momentary whim. In the circumstances, and in view of their office, it constituted an unpardonable offence. The Rabbis, observing that the narrative is followed by an injunction that the priests were not to drink intoxicating liquor before performing their duties (v. 8f), state that Nadab and Abhiu had dared to enter the Sanctuary under the influence of drink. Another suggestion is that they had consulted neither Moses nor Aaron in taking the step they did; and that this deliberate disregard of their elders sprang from unfilial jealousy. They asked themselves, "When will these old men

10 1. And Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, took each of them his censer, and put fire therein,
and laid incense thereon, and offered strange fire
before the LORD, which he had not commanded them. 2. And there came forth fire from before the LORD, and devoured them, and they died before the LORD. 3. Then Moses said unto Aaron, This is it that the LORD spake, saying, I will be sanctified in them that are nigh me, and before all the people die? How long must we wait to lead the congregation?" It was an impious ambition that led them to commit the unhallowed deed which called down terrible retribution upon them.

2. devoured them. Mysteriously—the Rabbis explain—only their souls were consumed; their bodies remained untouched. It is probable that the fire took the form of a lightning flash, killing them without destroying their garments.

3. then Moses said. To help the bereaved father understand the significance of what had happened.

this is it. The words which follow do not occur literally elsewhere, but their teaching is implied in such passages as Exod. XIX, 22, and XXIX, 1, 44, setting forth the duty of sanctification for the priesthood.

I will be sanctified in them that are nigh me. In sharp contrast to the common view that highly-placed or gifted men may disregard the laws of morality, Judaism teaches that the greater a man's knowledge or position, the stricter the standard by which he is to be judged, and the greater the consequent guilt and punishment, if there is a falling away from that standard (S. R. Hirsch). "With the righteous, God is exacting even to a hair's breadth" (Talmud).

be not wroth. An ancient Rabbinic interpretation connects the words "be not wroth," with what follows. We should then render: "And that he be not wroth with all the congregation, seeing that all your brethren, the whole house of Israel, will bewail, etc." The meaning is: If the priests show signs of grief, the rest of the community will also lament the occurrence, and perhaps declaim against God for the calamity that marred the festivities of that day. His anger would then be roused against them.

7. not go out. Cf. VIII, 33 and XXI, 12.

8–11. Priests Warned Against Intoxicants

9. wine nor strong drink. As stated above, the Rabbis connected the incident of Nadab and Abihu with this injunction against intoxicating liquors before officiating in the Sanctuary. Mourners were encouraged to drink. ("Give wine unto the bitter in soul; let him drink . . . and remember his misery no more," Prov. xxxi, 6f). The prohibition against bewailing the dead is, therefore, followed by a further command against resorting to wine.

when ye go into the tent. Wine is a beneficent gift of God, when enjoyed in moderation. The priests need not abstain from it, except when discharging their sacred functions as priests or teachers. In those circumstances, the prohibition is made permanent.

10. put difference. As they would be called upon to decide questions affecting the life of the people, theirs must never be irresolute or confused guidance. "They reel in vision, they totter in judgement," is the terrible charge which Isaiah brings against the drunken spiritual guides of Judah; see Exodus, p. 464.

12. And Moses spake unto Aaron, and unto Eleazar and unto Ithamar, his sons that were left, Take the meal offering that remaineth of the offerings of the LORD made by fire, and eat it without leaven beside the altar: for it is most holy: 13. and ye shall eat it in a holy place, because it is thy due and thy sons' due, of the offerings of the LORD

11. ye may teach. This duty of the priesthood is impressively formulated by the Prophet, "For the priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law at his mouth: for he is the messenger of the LORD of hosts" (Mal. II, 7).

12–19. DISPOSAL OF THE INITIATORY OFFERINGS

This paragraph continues Chap. IX, after the historical incident detailed in the first half of this chapter. These intervening verses explain why Nadab and Abihu are not named among Aaron's sons who were to partake of the portion of the offerings.

12. meal offering that remaineth. See IX, 4. Only a handful of the flour was burnt, and the rest belonged to the priests (II, 3).

of the sanctuary, seeing it is most holy, and he hath given it to you to bear the iniquity of the congregation, to make atonement for them before the LORD? 18. Behold, the blood of it was not certainly have eaten it in the sanctuary, as I commanded. 19. And Aaron spake unto

19. Aaron spake. Although the rebuke had been addressed to the sons, it had been intended for him (see on v. 16). As on this day the priests had had to secure atonement for themselves, they did not deem themselves in a state of purity to share in the solemn rite of eating the people's sin-offering. That feeling of imperfection became intensified when "such things as these"—the death of Nadab and Abihu—had befallen them.

20. it was well-pleasing. He was convinced that the priests had acted as they did from praiseworthy motives.

The Laws of Purity

Chapters XI–XVI

The first ten chapters of Leviticus contain The Law of the Sanctuary, in the stricter sense of the term. With the exception of paragraphs here and there, the remainder of the Book deals with matters other than priests and sacrifices, with what might be described as The Law of Daily Life. The Torah takes the whole of human life as its province; in the eyes of the Torah nothing human is secular. It penetrates into the home of the Israelite, and aims at controlling even the most intimate relations of his domestic existence. It is of the utmost importance to grasp this characteristic feature of the Torah. "The Law of God embraces the whole of life with all its actions; and as none of these actions can be withdrawn from the unity of life, so can the Law be excluded from none of them" (Hermann Cohen). Many things, therefore, that affect only the physical life come under the purview of that Law. A healthy soul in a healthy body is clearly its ideal. The regulations prescribed in these chapters are means towards the attainment of that end, and have therefore a spiritual purpose and eternal worth.

Chapter XI

DIETARY LAWS

Among the laws of purity, first place is given to the subject of food, because the daily diet intimately affects man's whole being. The subscription to this chapter, v. 43f, clearly reveals the object of the Dietary Laws. God brought Israel out of Egypt to be a "holy people," a consecrated people, "a people apart, distinguished from all others by outward rites which in themselves helped to constitute Holiness. Outward consecration was symbolically to express an inner sanctity." This thought of being a "holy people"—a light supernaturally kindled, lest darkness should become complete—a witness to God's sovereignty and purity, lest He become utterly unacknowledged in the world He had made—a "kingdom of priests," sanctified in themselves, and sanctified for the rest of the world's sake—this sublime thought would be daily impressed on their minds by these Commandments which separated them from other nations. These would, furthermore, prevent that close and intimate association with heathens which would result in complete absorption. Indeed, the Dietary Laws have proved an important factor in the preservation of the Jewish race in the past, and are, in more than one respect, an irreplaceable agency for maintaining Jewish identity in the present. An illustrious Jewish scientist wrote: "It may appear a minute matter to pronounce the Hebrew blessing over bread, and to accustom one's children to do so. Yet if a Jew, at the time of partaking of food, remembers the identical words used by his fellow Jews since time immemorial and the world over, he revives in himself, wherever he be at the moment, communion with his imperishable race. In contrast to not a few of our co-religionists who have no occasion for weeks and months together to bestow a thought on their Creed or their People, the Jew who keeps Kashrus has to think of his religious and communal allegiance on the occasion of every meal; and, on every such occasion, the observance of those laws constitutes a renewal of acquiescence in the fact that he is a Jew, and a deliberate acknowledgment of that fact" (Haffkine).

Moses, Behold, this day have they offered their sin offering and their burnt offering before the LORD; and there have befallen me such things as these: and if I had eaten the sin offering to-day, would it have been well-pleasing in the sight of the LORD?

The Rabbis were content to say that these laws belong to the class called חוקים, "statutes," which must be obeyed, although the reason for them transcended human understanding, and although they provoke the derision of heathens, Jewish and non-Jewish. There have, however, at all times been those who have seen a hygienic purpose in these prohibitions, and have held that the forbidden meats were not prohibited arbitrarily, but were unwholesome and repulsive in themselves. Modern research, too, recognises that certain animals harbour parasites that are both disease-creating and disease-spreading. Their flesh is consequently harmful to man. Such animals are excluded from the Hebrew dietary. Furthermore, as it is in the blood that the germs or spores of infectious disease circulate, the flesh of all animals must be thoroughly drained of blood before serving for food. This is most effectively done by the Jewish method of Shechitah, and especially by the Traditional koshering of the meat before it is prepared for food. Statistical investigation has demonstrated that Jews as a class are immune from, or less susceptible to, certain diseases; and their life-duration is frequently longer than that of their neighbours. Competent authorities have not hesitated to attribute these healthy characteristics to the influence of the Dietary Laws. In the Middle Ages, when epidemics devastated many a country, the Jews were far less affected than the rest of the population; and this immunity gave rise to the malicious accusation that the Jews had caused the plague by poisoning the wells! Although much remains to be discovered to explain in every detail the food-laws in Leviticus, sufficient is known to warrant the conviction that their observance produces beneficial effects upon the human body; cf. xviii, 5.

The supreme motive, however, of the Dietary Laws remains Holiness, not as an abstract idea but as a regulating principle in the everyday lives of men, women and children. "The Dietary Laws train us in the mastery over our appetites; they accustom us to restrain both the growth of desire and the disposition to consider pleasure of eating and drinking as the end of man's existence" (Maimonides). Whosoever eats forbidden foods becomes imbued with the spirit of impurity, and is cast out of the realm of Divine Holiness (Zohar). Rejection of the Dietary Laws has at various times been considered as equivalent to apostasy. The Maccabean martyrs died rather than transgress them. At the present day, the great majority of Jews continue to abstain from forbidden food, not only from personal aversion, but because "our Father in Heaven has decreed that we should abstain from it" (Sifra). These laws constitute an invaluable training in self-mastery. "Is there not something spiritually attractive in the idea of the Jew of this age voluntarily submitting to restrictions on his appetites for the sake of duty—forming one of a religious guild, whose special characteristic is its self-control? It ought to be the pride of the modern Jew and every child should be taught to feel it—that his religion demands from him a self-abnegation from which other religionists are absolved; that the price to be paid for the privilege of belonging to the hierarchy of Israel is continuous and conscious self-sacrifice. The Dietary Laws foster this spirit of self-surrender. Respect for them teaches and helps the Jew, in Rabbinic language, to abase his desires before the will of his Father in Heaven" (M. Joseph).

1–8. CLEAN AND UNCLEAN QUADRUPEDS

1. and to Aaron. It was the duty of the priests to "put difference between the holy and the common, and between the unclean and the clean" (x, 10).

2. speak unto the children of Israel. The subject matter of this chapter is repeated in Deut. XIV. For the variations between the two accounts, see the commentary on Deuteronomy. A distinction between clean and unclean animals goes back to the earliest period of Biblical history; but whether the criteria were then the same as are indicated in this chapter, is not known.

3. whatsoever parteth the hoof. Instead of enumerating the animals which may be eaten, as is done in Deut., the general rule is here given by which the individual species could be tested. The animal must possess three characteristics; a) it must divide the hoof; b) it must be wholly cloven-footed; and c) it must chew the cud. It is probable that the three characteristics—divided hoof, cloven-footed and chewing the cud—are named because they broadly demarcate beasts of prey and animals of obnoxious habits from those suitable for human consumption.

4. camel. At the bottom of the camel's hoof, there is an elastic pad or cushion on which the camel gets its foothold in the sand. This pad prevents the hoof from being wholly divided.

5. rockbadger. Or, "coney." This animal, and likewise the hare, have the habit of working the jaws as though they were masticating food.

7. swine. The aversion to the pig is not confined to Israel. The primary abhorrence was caused, in all probability, by its loathsome appearance and mode of living.

8. their carcases. The carcase of a clean animal which had been slaughtered by the Traditional method, did not communicate defilement. Not so the excluded animals. They defiled ritually anyone who touched the dead body.

9–12. Clean and Unclean Fish

9. in the waters. "The characteristics given in the Law of the permitted animals, viz., chewing the cud and divided hoofs for cattle, and fins and scales for fish, are in themselves neither the cause of the permission when they are present, nor of the prohibition when they are absent; but merely signs by which the recommended species of animals can be discerned from those that are forbidden" (Maimonides). In general, the Torah forbids every kind of shell-fish—which is disease-breeding, especially in hot countries.

an abomination. Better, a detestable thing (AJ). In the first paragraph, the forbidden species are described as "unclean"; i.e. not only uneatable, but the touch of their carcase is defiling. With fish this was otherwise. They were "detestable" and disallowed as food, but they were not defiling by touch.

12. fins nor scales in the waters. As long as they have the fins and scales when in the water, they are edible. The Rabbis were of the opinion that every fish which has scales also has fins, although these may be of a very rudimentary kind and not discernible to the eye. Therefore in actual practice, they permit fish with scales only, but not fish with fins only.

13–19. Unclean Birds

The birds prohibited all belong to the class denoted as birds of prey, and also those that live in dark ruins or marshy land. But since the Torah adds the words "after its kind," the Rabbis enumerated various criteria by which a clean bird may be distinguished.

13. in abomination. "In detestation" (AJ); see on v. 10.

ye shall not eat of their flesh, and their carcases ye shall have in abomination. 12. Whatsoever hath no fins nor scales in the waters, that is an

13. And these ye shall have in abomination ospray. Possibly the sea-eagle is intended.

15. raven. The species including the crow, jackdaw and rook.

16. ostrich. lit. "daughter of wailing." This bird is represented in the Bible as living in dreary ruins (Isa. XIII, 21) and constantly wailing (Micah, I, 8).

night hawk. Or, "owl"; the meaning of the Heb. word is uncertain.

seamew. Or, "sea-gull."

17. little owl. Mentioned in Ps. CII, 7 as dwelling amidst ruins.

29. unclean. Prohibited as food, and whose dead bodies are defiling.

30. gecko. This and the succeeding three names are of uncertain meaning, probably denoting species of lizards.

31. when they are dead. Unclean creatures do not therefore defile by contact while alive.

32. any vessel. These creatures, which come in close contact with filth and when dead are covered with parasites, needed to be particularly guarded against.

33. earthen vessel. This is evidence that the concept of "impurity" coincided to some extent with "infection," and that different grades of impurity were different degrees

35. oven, or range for pots. The latter denotes a vessel in two compartments to receive two pots, the Heb. being in the dual. They were alike usually made of earthenware; therefore they had to be broken if rendered unclean.

36. a fountain. This verse states the exceptional case where the carcase has no defiling effect. When it falls into water of a well, spring, or a large cistern in which the water is collected in a natural manner (i.e. not drawn by a vessel), then it does not render the water unclean. Such "natural" waters are alone to be used for ritual purification. The minimum quantity for a ritual bath (Mikvah) is 24 cubic feet, so as to permit complete immersion.

Israel is bidden to be holy. This demand has two aspects—one positive and the other negative. The positive aspect may be called the Imitation of God; see on XIX, 2. The negative aspect means the withdrawal from things impure and abominable. Even as nothing that suggested the least taint could be associated with God, so it was the duty of the Israelites to strive, so far as it was attainable by man, to avoid whatever would defile them, whether physically or spiritually. Wherever men and women honestly strive after holy living, such striving carries its own fulfilment with it. Rabbi Pinchas ben Yair said : "Heedfulness leads to cleanness ; cleanness to purity ; purity to holiness ; holiness to humility ; humility to dread of sin ; dread of sin to saintliness (chassiduth) ; saintliness to the possession of the Holy Spirit (רוח הקודש)".

The Rabbis, translating as ever general principles of religion into terms of life, based the precept of Washing the hands before Meals on והתקדשתם ("sanctify yourselves").

for I am holy. "This constitutes the basis for your duty to sanctify yourselves, as well as the guarantee of your capacity to attain sanctification of life. Holiness is the very essence of the Divine being ; and, in breathing His spirit into you, He made you the partaker of His Divine nature, and endowed you with the power to attain to holiness. 'Because I am holy, you shall be holy, and you can be holy'" (S. R. Hirsch).

46–47. These verses form the epilogue to the chapter. A brief resumé of the Dietary Laws and the rules of koshering are found in Dayan Lazarus, The Ways of Her Household, Part I, 1–37; and M. Friedlander, The Jewish Religion, 455–466.

(Chapters XII and XIII)
LAWS OF PURIFICATION
Chapters XII–XV

Food laws were dealt with in the last chapter. We now have laws of purification in regard to a) child-birth (xii); b) leprosy (xiii, xiv); c) bodily secretions (xv). (Another rite of purification, after contact with a human corpse, is expounded in Num. xix). There is abundant evidence that the laws of purity and impurity were from the earliest times faithfully observed in Israel. These laws, however, underwent various amplifications in the course of centuries; and not long after the Destruction of the Second Temple, disappeared, for the greater part, from Jewish life, even in Palestine. Only such comments as are essential to the understanding of the general meaning of the Text will here be given. The detailed exposition of this complex subject, with its successive expansions (the "institutions" of Ezra, the modifications of the early Scribes and the Pharisees, and the deviating practice among later sects) must be sought for in specialist works, or in commentaries for the learned.

There are two distinct views in regard to the laws of purity and impurity: one, that they are hygienic; the other, that they are "levitical," i.e. purely religious. Advocates of the hygienic view hold that the sources of impurity in Scripture—disease or death, the disintegrating corpse of man or beast, skin-diseases, and disorders in connection with sex-life—are in the main physical. In all these cases—they hold—impurity is equivalent to infection or the danger of infection; the rules of separation are intended to prevent the spread of infection; and the prescribed purification, whether by water or fire, is really disinfection. The procedure of purification bears out the character of disinfection. At no stage is there prescribed any prayer or formula to be recited; and the sacrifice, which invariably takes place after purification, is merely the token of re-admission into the camp (Katzenelsohn). The sanitary interpretation of the laws of purity is, however, contested by other authorities who, on their side, would rule out the hygienic motive altogether. They point to the Scripture passages which over and over again state that the supreme end of these laws is to lead men to holiness, and preserve them from anything that is defiling or that would exclude them from the Sanctuary. Strong arguments can thus be marshalled in favour of either view. However, while neither the hygienic nor the levitical motive can by itself account for all the facts, the two views are not mutually exclusive. Thus, in regard to Sabbath observance, Scripture assigns both a religious motive (Exod. XX, 11) and a social motive (Deut. V, 14). In the same manner, the eating of flesh of an animal torn in the fields is in one place forbidden for reasons of holiness (Exod. XXII, 30), and in another place plainly for reasons of hygiene (Lev. XI, 39, 40).

It is to be noted that most laws of purity and impurity apply only in reference to the Sanctuary and the holy objects connected with it. They did not apply in ordinary life, or to persons who did not intend to enter the Sanctuary.

Chapter XII

Purification after Child-birth

After the birth of a child, the mother brought a burnt-offering and a sin-offering at the Sanctuary, and thereby became ritually clean. Many non-Jewish commentators connect the regulation with the doom pronounced on Eve (Gen. III, 16). Life and death are in this way associated with the idea of the first sin in the Garden of Eden. Motherhood would thus in itself be a sinful thing, and its occurrence require purification and atonement. Such a thought, however, is utterly foreign to the general teaching of Scripture. "Be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth" (Gen. I, 28), is the first command in the Torah; and childlessness was regarded as the worst calamity.

The more acceptable view is that the Law deals solely with the physical secretions attendant on child-birth. The mother becomes unclean through conditions attendant on parturition, but not the child. If impurity were associated with child-birth as a fact in nature, the child, who is

2. seven days. Her uncleanness is of the same strict degree as that during menstruation (XVIII, 19). Seven days after that period, the ritual bath of purification is taken. During the remainder of the forty (or eighty) days she is only unclean as regards the Sanctuary (see v. 4).

3. circumcised. See Gen. XVII. This proves that the purification of the mother was solely from her physical condition. The circumcision is not a means of purifying the child; because in that case, we should have expected a ceremony of purification for a female child. The Rabbis deduced from the words "the eighth day" that the rite must be performed on that day, even if it be the Sabbath; and during the daytime, not at night.

5. two weeks. There is no satisfactory explanation why the period is doubled when a female child is born. It cannot be because a female was regarded as more defiling

The sin-offering was here merely a purgation offering, as with other cases of uncleanness (cf. xv, 30), where no sin had been committed (Sifra). The burnt-offering symbolised rededication to God, after the period of abstention from the Sanctuary.

Chapters XIII–XIV

THE LAW OF LEPROSY

The prominence given to this subject must be due to the prevalence of this class of malady in the Near East; and this explanation is confirmed by the frequent reference to leprosy in the Bible.

As stated in the last chapter, many authorities regard these regulations as based only on sanitary principles. A suspected person was isolated for a period of time until the diagnosis became more certain; and when he was tent of meeting, unto the priest: 7. and he shall offer it before the LORD, and make atonement for her; and she shall be cleansed from the fountain of her blood. This is the law for her that beareth, whether a male or a female. 8. And if her means suffice not for a lamb, then she shall take two turtledoves, or two young pigeons; the one for a burnt offering, and the other for a sin offering:

and the priest shall make atonement for her, and she shall be clean.

CHAPTER XIII

13 1. And the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron found to be afflicted, he was compelled to reside outside the camp.

It is to the ceremony of purification that we have to turn for the idea which underlies the treatment of the leper. That ceremony can bear only one interpretation; viz., the leper suffered from a physical impurity which debarred him from fulfilling his duty as an Israelite towards the Sanctuary. In the same manner that a priest who suffered from a bodily blemish could not officiate in the Sanctuary, so an Israelite, who was hideously disfigured, was disqualified from membership in "a kingdom of priests." During his leprosy, he was accounted as dead; when he recovered, he had to be formally rededicated as an Israelite to the service of God.

The Rabbis regard leprosy as a Providential affliction in punishment for slander or tale bearing (מצורע מוציא שם רע); thus teaching that the slanderer is a moral leper, and should find no place in the camp of Israel.

CHAPTER XIII

2–8. EARLY SYMPTOMS OF THE DISEASE

the plague of leprosy. The Heb. is more accurately translated, " a stroke of leprosy." It has been questioned by many authorities whether the word צרעת corresponds to the English term " leprosy." In the latter, the most notable features are the swelling of organs and the rotting of the limbs. Nothing is here mentioned of these disfigurements. Moreover, leprosy is normally an incurable disease, whereas צרעת is deemed curable. In some of the paragraphs in this chapter a form of leprosy, known as elephantiasis, seems to be meant. Probably, the term was used in a wide sense, and included certain types of what we call " leprosy," as well as less malignant diseases of the skin.

Several Jewish authorities, however, are of opinion that wherever Scripture enjoins washing of the garments, bathing the body is to be also understood.

9–17. Diagnosing the Disease

This paragraph deals with the person who is suddenly attacked by the disease, or in whom it has developed rapidly, without the preliminary symptoms described above.

9. he shall be brought. See on v. 2.

10. a white rising. In the disease of elephantiasis, one of the early manifestations is the growth of vesicles of a glistening white hue, which burst and discharge a whitish fluid.

in the skin. As in v. 5; the disease had penetrated to the cutis.

quick raw flesh. i.e. it is an open sore.

11. old leprosy. Confirmed leprosy; the malady is definitely established as rooted in the system by the presence of quick raw flesh and white hair. No preliminary isolation is necessary; it is a clear case of uncleanness.

his clothes, and be clean. 7. But if the scab spread abroad in the skin, after that he hath shewn himself to the priest for his cleansing, he shall shew himself to the priest again: 8. and the priest shall look, and, behold, if the scab be spread in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean:
it is leprosy.

9. When the plague of leprosy is in a man, then he shall be brought unto the priest; 10. and the priest shall look, and, behold, if there be a white rising in the skin, and it have turned the hair
white, and there be quick raw flesh in the rising, 11. it is an old leprosy in the skin of his flesh, and the priest shall pronounce him unclean: he shall not shut him up; for he is unclean. 12. And if the leprosy break out abroad in the skin, and the leprosy cover all the skin of him that hath the plague from his head even to his feet, as far as appeareth to the priest; 13. then the priest shall look: and, behold, if the leprosy have covered all his flesh, he shall pronounce him clean that hath the plague: it is all turned white:
he is clean. 14. But whensoever raw flesh appear-eth in him, he shall be unclean. 15. And the priest shall look on the raw flesh, and pronounce him unclean: the raw flesh is unclean: it is leprosy.

12–17. These verses apparently refer to common white leprosy. It is less serious than elephantiasis or leprosy proper. The health of the person remains normal during the time the malady persists, and it generally passes off after a while. There is only discoloration of the skin in this milder form of infection.

29–44. Leprosy on Head and Face

29. plague. In this paragraph, a form of elephantiasis seems to be treated.

30. scall. The Heb. denotes, "what one is inclined to scratch or tear away."

31. no black hair. So long as there was black hair on the infected spot, or it grew black hair (see v. 37), the man was not to be regarded as a leper.

and, behold, there be no white hair in the bright spot, and it be no lower than the skin, but be dim;
then the priest shall shut him up seven days; 27.
and the priest shall look upon him the seventh day:
if it spread abroad in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is the plague of leprosy.
28. And if the bright spot stay in its place, and be not spread in the skin, but be dim; it is the rising of the burning, and the priest shall pronounce him clean: for it is the scar of the burning.*v

29. And when a man or woman hath a plague upon the head or upon the beard, 30. then the priest shall look on the plague: and, behold, if the appearance thereof be deeper than the skin, and there be in it yellow thin hair, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a scall, it is leprosy of the head or of the beard. 31. And if the priest look on the plague of the scall, and,
behold, the appearance thereof be not deeper than the skin, and there be no black hair in it, then the priest shall shut up him that hath the plague of the scall seven days: 32. and in the seventh day the priest shall look on the plague: and,

be in it no yellow hair, and the appearance of the scall be not deeper than the skin, 33. then he shall be shaven, but the scall shall he not shave; and the priest shall shut up him that hath the scall seven days more: 34. and in the seventh day the priest shall look on the scall: and, behold, if the scall be not spread in the skin, and

38. bright spots. See v. 2.

39. tetter. Old English for, "freckled spot," a skin disease which is not leprous.

40. fallen off. The falling away of the hair was one of the symptons that accompanied elephantiasis (see on v. 29); but in itself it was not a feature that rendered a person unclean, even if the head were left entirely bald.

42. bald head. Baldness from the crown backwards to the neck.

43. in the skin of the flesh. i.e. when the disease occurs in any other part of the body.

36. then the priest shall look on him: and, behold, if the scall be spread in the skin, the priest shall not seek for the yellow hair; he is unclean. 37. But if in his eyes the scall be at a stay, and black hair be grown up therein; the scall is healed, he is clean:
and the priest shall pronounce him clean.

he is clean.*vi (iii)

40. And if a man's hair be fallen off his head, he is bald; yet is he clean. 41. And if his hair be fallen off from the front part of his head, he is forehead bald; yet is he clean. 42. But if there be in the bald head, or the bald forehead, a reddish-white plague; it is leprosy breaking out in his bald head, or his bald forehead. 43. Then the priest shall look upon him: and, behold, if the rising of the plague be reddish-white in his bald head, or in his bald forehead, as the appearance of leprosy in the skin of the flesh; 44. he is a leprous man, he is unclean: the priest shall surely pronounce him unclean; his plague is in his head.

(CHAPTERS XIV-XV)

CHAPTER XIV., 1–32. PURIFICATION OF A LEPER

2. day. The Rabbis took this phrase literally, and ruled that the purification could not take place at night.

he shall be brought. To an appointed place outside the camp. Or, "it (the news of the leper's recovery) shall be brought (i.e. reported) to the priest" (Ehrlich); see on XIII, 2.

3. out of the camp. To the leper.

shall look. The priest had to satisfy himself that the disease had completely passed away, before commencing the ceremony of purification.

4. command to take. The birds and articles required for the ceremony were not necessarily provided by the leper himself. This fact disposes of the idea that the birds were intended as a sacrifice, as in that case they must have been supplied by the person on whose behalf they were offered. And further, no portion of the birds was placed on the Altar. The first part of the ceremony must be interpreted as a symbolic representation of the leper's restoration to life and his re-admission to the camp of Israel.

V. METZORA

Chapter XIV

14 1. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
2. This shall be the law of the leper in the day of his cleansing: he shall be brought unto the priest:
3. and the priest shall go forth out of the camp;
and the priest shall look, and, behold, if the plague of leprosy be healed in the leper; 4. then shall the priest command to take for him that is to be cleansed two living clean birds, and cedar wood, and scarlet, and hyssop: 5. and the priest shall command to kill one of the birds in an earthen vessel over running water: 6. as for the living

cedar wood. The most durable of woods, with the strongest resisting power to decay; and, therefore, symbolical of the cured leper who overcame the putrefying effects of his disease. Maimonides, however, declares, "I do not know at present the reason of any of these things"; viz., the cedar-wood, hyssop and scarlet.

scarlet. According to Rabbinic tradition, a band of wool, dipped into scarlet, was used.

hyssop. See on Exod. XII, 22; it was a convenient instrument for sprinkling, as its leaves readily absorb the liquid and freely give it out when shaken. It was used in ceremonies of purification where sprinkling was included (Num. XIX, 6, 18), and therefore became later associated with the idea of cleanliness (Ps. LI, 9).

5. kill one of the birds. For the blood required in the ceremony; as a contrast to the other bird which was allowed to live, thus representing the state of death from which the leper has escaped and of the new life to which he could now look forward.

running water. lit. "living water"; i.e. water fresh from a spring, or a stream; the natural symbol for life, freshness, and purity. The blood flowed into the vessel which contained the water.

he shall wash his clothes, and he shall bathe his

the eighth day he shall take two he-lambs without blemish, and three tenth parts of an ephah of fine flour for a meal offering, mingled with oil, and one log of oil. 11. And the priest that cleanseth him shall set the man that is to be cleansed, and those things, before the LORD, at the door of the tent of 12. guilt offering. This was the first of the three offerings sacrificed on behalf of the cleansed leper. He had been completely cut off from his people and, therefore, his first act was to renew his covenant, as an Israelite, with God. It was explained on VII, 1 that the guilt-offering was not an expiatory sacrifice, but a forfeit which was offered when a man had made restitution. By his severance from the life of the community, the leper had failed to bring his dues to the Sanctuary, and so took the earliest opportunity to place his forfeit on the Altar.

wave offering. See on VII, 30; and Num. VIII, 11. The act of waving had the additional significance of dedicating the bringer of the sacrifice to the service of the Most High.

the log of oil, and wave them for a wave offering before the LORD:*ii 13. and he shall kill the he-lamb in the place where they kill the sin offering and the burnt offering, in the place of the sanctuary: for as the sin offering is the priest's, so is the guilt offering: it is most holy: 14. and the priest shall take of the blood of the guilt offering, and the priest shall put it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand,
and upon the great toe of his right foot: 15. and
the priest shall take of the log of oil, and pour it into the palm of his own left hand: 16. and the priest shall dip his right finger in the oil that is in his left hand, and shall sprinkle of the oil with his finger seven times before the LORD: 17. and of the rest of the oil that is in his hand shall the priest put upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot, upon the blood of the guilt offering: 18. and the rest of the oil that is in the priest's hand he shall put upon the head of him that is to be cleansed: and the priest shall make atonement for him before the LORD.

15. of the log of oil. i.e. some of the additional log, mentioned in v. 10. This was different from the anointing of the High Priest upon whose head the oil was poured (VIII, 12). Here the priest only "put" it on the person's head.

20. meal offering. The flour and the oil (see v. 10). This final sacrifice expressed the gratitude of the former leper.

21–32. In the case of poverty, the demand for the guilt-offering remains, but the other two animal sacrifices are replaced by turtle-doves or young pigeons, as in XII, 8.

33–53. Leprosy in a House

As with leprosy in a garment (XIII, 47f), different theories are advanced to account for the phenomena described in this paragraph. The disease may have been caused by some parasitic fungus akin to that which causes dry rot. Others suppose that parasitic insects had nested in the house, or a nitrous incrustation had formed in the walls.

33. saying. We must understand some such words as, "Speak unto the children of Israel."

34. when ye be come. In the Wilderness the Israelites dwelt in tents (see v. 8), and if the disease attacked the material of the tent, the law of XIII, 47f applied. The Torah accordingly prescribes for the time when the Israelites shall have settled in their land and inhabit houses.

I put. This form of speech is used, because all phenomena are ultimately the consequence of the Divine will.

36. empty the house. Until the priest formally pronounced the house infected, its contents were not unclean. Similarly a man was not leprous, until the priest passed the verdict upon him. All the furniture was removed before the inspection, to save it from being defiled, should the house be condemned.

And he shall offer one of the turtledoves, or of the young pigeons, such as he is able to get; 31. even such as he is able to get, the one for a sin offering, and the other for a burnt offering, with the meal offering: and the priest shall make atonement for him that is to be cleansed before the LORD. 32. When ye be come into the land of Canaan, which I give to you for a possession, and I put the plague of leprosy in a house of the land of your possession; 35. then he that owneth the house shall come and tell the priest, saying, There seemeth to me to be as it were a plague in the house: 36. and the priest shall command that they empty the house, before the priest go in to see the plague, that all that is in the house be not made unclean: and afterward the priest shall go in to see the house: 37. and he shall look on the plague, and, behold, if the plague be in the walls of the house with hollow strakes, greenish or reddish, and the appearance

Chapter XV, 1–30. Impurity of Issues

This chapter treats of physical secretions which render a person unclean, precluding him from coming into contact with anything appertaining to the Sanctuary. The gentile was excluded from these regulations, since he was exempt from all obligations in respect to the Holy Place. In v. 2 the reference is to a chronic discharge as the result of a contagious disease. The person thus afflicted becomes unclean, and is regarded as a source of ritual, no less than physical, infection. The uncleanness, described in v. 16–18, did not apply to laymen. It involved merely absence from the 'camp,' which in Rabbinic exegesis was taken to mean the Sanctuary proper and the Levite encampment around the Sanctuary. It also involved abstention from sacrificial food (terumah and maaser). If the prescribed priestly ablutions had been taken, the prohibition ceased in regard to the Levite in running water, and shall be clean. 14. And on the eighth day he shall take to him two turtledoves,

THE DAY OF ATONEMENT

CHAPTER XVI. 1–28. THE RITUAL OF THE ANNUAL CEREMONY OF PURIFICATION IN THE SANCTUARY

1. after the death. The unfortunate incident narrated in x, 1–3 gave occasion for instructions as to time and manner in which the High Priest might enter the Holy Place. The death of Aaron's sons was a solemn warning addressed to the High Priest, that any desecration, whether it be on the part of the High Priest, or an ordinary priest, or the laity (see xv, 31), would be severely punished. See comment on x, 1 as to the reasons for the death of Aaron's sons—intoxication, unholy ambition, arbitrary tampering with the service, and introducing "strange fire" into the Sanctuary. The story of Nadab and Abihu is a parable for Young Israel in many a generation. "He who is affected to tears while reading this portion of the Torah, taking its teaching to heart, will win forgiveness for his own sins and the blessing of old age for his children" (Zohar).

2. that he come not at all times. Only once a year, on the Day of Atonement, and with a due observance of prescribed rites, was he permitted to penetrate into the Holy of Holies.

CHAPTER XVI

16 1. And the LORD spake unto Moses, after the death of the two sons of Aaron, when they drew near before the LORD, and died; 2. and the LORD said unto Moses, Speak unto Aaron thy brother, in the cloud upon the mercy-seat. 3. Herewith

3. herewith. With the offerings and ceremonies set forth in the following verses. In later times the High Priest began to prepare himself for his functions seven days before the Sacred Day. During that time, he lived apart in a special portion of the Temple, and the elders read and expounded to him the ordinances of this chapter. The night proir to the Sacred Day he would pass sleepless, and be kept a wake by readings from Job, Ezra, Chronicles and Daniel.

4. holy garments. In the Holy of Holies, he was not to be attired in his golden vestments, which on all other occasions he was to wear for "splendour and distinction," but in simple garments of white linen—emblems of the lowliness and purity of thought demanded by the Sacred Day. For the same reason white linen garments were for many centuries worn, and in some communities are still worn, by worshippers on the Day of Atonement. The Rabbis gave an additional reason for this custom. "When men are summoned before an earthly ruler to defend themselves against some charge, they appear downcast and dressed in black like mourners. Israel appears before God arrayed in white, as if going to a feast, confident that all who return penitently to their Maker will receive not condemnation but pardon at His hands."

5. of the congregation. Rites of purification were to be performed for the community as a body. One of the great teachings of the Day of Atonement is the ethical necessity for the individual to regard himself as essentially a unit in the Brotherhood of Israel. The Confession on the Atonement Day is in the plural: "We have transgressed, we have dealt treacherously, etc."; see on XXIII, 27.

6. shall present. The presentation is that alluded to in I, 3f—at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting.

He shall put on the holy linen coat, and he shall have the linen breeches upon his flesh, and shall be girded with the linen girdle, and with the linen mitre shall he be attired: they are the holy garments; and he shall bathe his flesh in water, and put them on. 5. And he shall take of the congregation of the children of Israel two he-goats for a sin offering, and one ram for a burnt offering. 6. And Aaron shall present the bullock of the sin offering, which is for himself, and make atonement for himself, and for his house. 7. And he shall take the two goats, and set them before the LORD at the door of the tent of the meeting. 8. And Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats; one lot for the LORD, and the other for dismissal. 9. And on the Day of Atonement unless his wife was living at the time. In the traditional account of the rites of the Day of Atonement, preserved in the Mishnah, the High Priest made this confession: "O God, I have sinned, I have committed iniquity, I have transgressed against Thee, I and my household. I beseech Thee by Thy Name, grant Thou atonement for the sins, and for the iniquities, and for the transgressions wherein I have sinned, and committed iniquity and transgressed against Thee, I and my household." (For the three terms for sinning used in this prayer see on v. 21). In his confession, the High Priest used the ineffable Name of God, the Tetragrammaton, in its true pronunciation; whereupon the assembled priests and people in the Court prostrated themselves to the ground, and exclaimed, "Blessed be His Name, Whose glorious kingdom is for ever and ever."

away"; which agrees with the term used in the Mishnah. The Authorised Version, following the Vulgate, has "scape-goat"; i.e. the goat driven, or escaping, into the wilderness. The Heb. Azazel, however, is not a proper name, but a rare Hebrew noun (עזלזל contracted to עזאזל) meaning, "dismissal" or, "entire removal" (RV Margin, Gesenius, Hoffmann, and the Oxford Hebrew Dictionary). It is the ancient technical term for the entire removal of the sin and guilt of the community, that was symbolised by the sending away of the goat into the wilderness.

In the Talmud, Azazel was translated by "steep mountain," and was applied to the rock in the wilderness from which in later times the animal was hurled.

At an early period, however, the word עזאזל became personified, just as were the Hebrew words for the Underworld (Sheol) and Destruction (Abaddon). Thereupon, the strangest theories and legends grew up in connection with "Azazel." In certain Jewish traditions, for example, Azazel, or Azalzel, is foremost among the fallen angels who taught unrighteousness to the children of men (Book of Enoch). This view that the word Azazel is the name of a demon in the wilderness was shared by Ibn Ezra and Nachmanides, and is to-day adopted by most Bible critics. But it is quite untenable. The offering of sacrifices to "satyrs" is spoken of as a heinous crime in the very next chapter, XVII, 7; homage to a demon of the wilderness cannot, therefore, be associated with the holiest of the Temple-rites in the chapter immediately preceding.

Aaron shall present the goat upon which the lot fell for the LORD, and offer him for a sin offering.
10. But the goat, on which the lot fell for dismissal, shall be set alive before the LORD, to make atonement over him, to send him away for dismissal into the wilderness. 11. And Aaron shall present the bullock of the sin offering, which is for himself, and shall make atonement for himself, and for his house, and shall kill the bullock of the sin offering which is for himself: 12. and he shall take a censer full of coals of fire from off the altar before the LORD, and his hands full of sweet incense beaten small, and bring it within the veil: 13.

13. cloud of the incense. The purpose of the incense-smoke was to create a screen which would prevent the High Priest from gazing upon the Holy Presence.

On returning from the Holy of Holies, the High Priest in later times offered the following prayer: "May it please Thee, O Lord our God, that this year may be a year of rain. Let there not be wanting a ruler belonging to the House of Judah. Let not Thy people Israel be in want, so that one Israelite may not be forced to beg his sustenance from another or from strangers; and hearken not to the prayer of travellers"—since they pray for rainless weather, which is a calamity in the Holy Land (Talmud).

of the uncleannesses of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions ; even all their sins :
and so shall he do for the tent of meeting, that nesses. 17. And there shall be no man in the tent

he shall present. Better, he brings near to himself. The ceremony of the "scapegoat" took place in the Court.

21. confess. The High Priest placed his two hands on the goat to be sent away, and thereby, having confessed, symbolically transferred the people's sins to the head of the animal. The form of confession, as given in the Mishnah, was: "O God, Thy people, the House of Israel, have sinned, they have committed iniquity, and they have transgressed against Thee."

iniquities. The Heb. עון lit. means "crookedness" and denotes a wilful departure from the law of God. Unlike the ordinary sacrifices which were limited in their expiatory power to involuntary transgressions, the Day of Atonement and its sacrifices purged away wilful iniquities as well as errors and involuntary sins.

the children of Israel, and all their transgressions, even all their sins; and he shall put them upon the head of the goat, and shall send him away by the hand of a man that is in readiness into the wilderness: 22. and the goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities unto a solitary land: and he shall

that is in readiness. Or "appointed," for that purpose.

22. a solitary land. lit. "a land which is cut off," a district effectually cut off from the encampment of Israel, so that the animal could not wander back. In later times the animal was cast down a precipice (see on v. 8), as it was no longer possible to send the goat to a place whence it would not return to inhabited parts. This chapter narrates the primitive custom in accordance with conditions in the Mosaic age, and is evidence of the antiquity of what is here described.

he shall let go. With this symbolic carrying away of the people's sins, cf. Micah VII, 19, "Thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea." These Prophetic words led to the institution of a similar rite—Tashlich—in connection with the New Year.

is the gratification of bodily appetites, the Fast is to demonstrate to the sinner that man can conquer all physical cravings, that the spirit can always master the body. The abstention from all food and from gratification of other bodily desires, however, must be accompanied by deep remorse at having fallen short of what it was in our power to be and to do as members of the House of Israel. Without such contrite confession accompanied by the solemn resolve to abandon the way of evil, fasting in itself is not the fulfilment of the Divine command and purpose of the Day of Atonement. תשובה תפלה וצדקה—Repentance, Prayer and Beneficence—these can change the whole current of a man's life and destiny, and lead to perfect atonement. "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the LORD, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon" (Isa. LV, 7).

30. on this day. Called in the Talmud יומא, the Day; "the most holy of the holy times" (Philo). For the name Yom ha-kippurim, see on XXIII, 27. On that day, according to Tradition, Moses came down with the Second Tables of the Law, and announced God's gracious pardon for Israel's worship of the Golden Calf.

shall atonement be made for you. Heb. יכפר עליכם. As the preceding and following verses describe the duties of the people on the Day, the subject of יכפר עליכם cannot be the High Priest; otherwise, he would have been specially mentioned. Rabbi Akiba held the subject to be God. "Happy Israel—he exclaimed—before Whom do ye purify yourselves, and Who is it that purifieth you? Your Father Who is in Heaven; as it is said (Ezek. XXXVI, 25) 'I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean'." Note that the initiative in atonement is with the sinner. He cleanses himself on the Day of Atonement by fearless self-examination, open confession and resolve not to repeat the transgressions of the past year. When our Heavenly Father sees the abasement of the penitent sinner, He—and not the High Priest or any other Mediator—sprinkles, as it were, the clean waters of pardon and forgiveness upon him. "The whole philosophy of monotheism is contained in this rallying-cry of Rabbi Akiba" (Hermann Cohen).

all your sins. Not only involuntary transgressions; see the Confession, Authorised Prayer Book, p. 258b and 259. Repentance can give rebellious sins the character of "errors";

from all your sins shall ye be clean before the LORD.

i.e. by his penitence, the sinner shows that his wilful sins were largely due to ignorance, and hence are treated by God as if they were "errors." גדולה תשובה שזדונות נעשות כשגגות. A modern philosopher of religion finds the key-note of the Day in Num. XV, 26 ("And all the congregation of the children of Israel shall be forgiven and the stranger that sojourneth among them; for in respect of all the people it was done in error")—the verse recited before the opening of the evening service on Kol Nidré night.

before the LORD. From Whom alone, and not from the priest or the Altar, man is to seek atonement.

The order of the Heb. words is: "from all your sins before the LORD shall ye be clean." Thereon Rabbi Eleazar ben Azaryah founded the sublime teaching: "For transgressions of man against God, the Day of Atonement atones (given repentance on the part of the sinner); but for transgressions against a fellowman the Day of Atonement does not atone, unless and until he has conciliated his fellowman and redressed the wrong he has done him." The Confession (וידוי) deals almost exclusively with moral trespasses against our fellowmen. Especially numerous are the terms denoting sins committed with the tongue—falsehood, slander, frivolous and unclean speech. The Rabbis, who certainly did not underrate ritual offences, deemed moral shortcomings to be infinitely graver, and hence confined the Confession to them.

31–34. These verses explain that the ceremonies of the Day of Atonement are for all time. Although the Torah has been naming "Aaron" as the atoning priest, whoever had been duly consecrated after him to the High Priest's office was eligible to perform the sacred functions prescribed in this chapter.

31. sabbath of solemn rest. The repetition is to impress the fact that cessation from labour and fasting must continue even when there are no longer priestly ceremonies (Wessely).

34. everlasting statute. The Day of Atonement survived the High Priesthood ; nay, it gained in inwardness and spiritual power with the passing of the sacrificial system. "The fasting and humiliation before God, the confession of sins and contrition for them, and fervent prayer for forgiveness, were even before the destruction of the Temple the reality in regard to the Day of Atonement, of which the rites in the Temple were but a dramatic symbol" (Moore). The Rabbis had stressed the Prophetic teaching that without repentance no sacrificial rites were of any avail. With the cessation of sacrifices, therefore, repentance was left as the sole condition of the remission of sins. "In our time when there is no Temple and no Altar for atonement, there is repentance. Repentance atones for all iniquities" (Maimonides). The Day of Atonement, the Rabbis further declare, will never pass away, even if all other Festivals should pass away. And indeed as long as Israel does not lose its soul, so long shall the Day of Atonement remain. See also on XXIII, 27–32.

CHAPTER XVII

HOLINESS IN MEAT FOODS

This chapter may be looked upon as supplementary to the first part of Leviticus. It ordains that meat-foods must be free from idolatrous taint. This taint assumed two forms: sacrificing to 'satyrs' (v. 7), and eating the blood (10–14).

3–7. ON SLAYING ANIMALS FOR FOOD

3. killeth an ox. Evidently refers to a time when the slaughtering of animals for food was rare, and only at a family festivity or other formal gathering was meat consumed. During the wandering in the Wilderness the people lived on manna; and only exceptionally would it happen that an animal was slaughtered for consumption. Every such slaughtering had to be a sacrificial act; it had to take place at the Sanctuary; and it was deemed a peace-offering.

In Deut. XII, 20f, the law is modified in anticipation of the fact that Israel would soon be spread over a large area; for the requirement that every animal killed for food should be brought to the Sanctuary could apply only when the entire Community lived in the closest proximity to it.

According to the Rabbis this section refers only to animals intended as sacrifices—that they must not be offered except at the door of the Tabernacle.

4. oblation. Or, "an offering" (AJ); here a peace-offering is meant; see next v.

7. satyrs. lit. "goats." They were deemed to be sylvan gods or demons who inhabited waste places (Isa. XIII, 21; XXXIV, 14). The worship of the goat, accompanied by the foulest rites, prevailed in Lower Egypt. This was familiar to the Israelites, and God desired to wean them from it (cf. Josh. XXIV, 14; Ezek. XX, 7).

Some commentators point to this verse, as giving a main purpose of the sacrificial system in the Torah; viz., gradually to wean Israel away from primitive ideas and idolatrous practices. The manner of worship in use among the peoples of antiquity was retained, but that worship was now directed towards the One and Holy God. "By this Divine plan, idolatry was eradicated, and the vital principle of our Faith,

8–9. The actual offering of the sacrifice as well as its slaughtering must on no account be performed at any place except at that Sanctuary. This prohibition applies not only to Israelites, but also to those strangers (גרי צדק) who had been completely incorporated in Israel.

10–14. Blood Not to be Eaten

10. eateth any manner of blood. The prohibition, which included the eating of flesh containing blood, has been stated in general terms in Lev. iii, 17; vii, 26f.

The reason for these repeated solemn injunctions is not given. The purpose may be to tame man's instincts of violence by weaning him from blood, and implanting within him a horror of all bloodshed. The slaying of animals for food was in time taken away altogether from the ordinary Israelite, and was relegated to a body of pious and specially trained men, Shochetim. These injunctions have undoubtedly contributed to render the Israelites a humane people. "Consider the one circumstance that no Jewish mother ever killed a chicken with her own hand, and you will understand why homicide is

10. And whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among them, that eateth any manner of blood; I will set my face against that soul that eateth blood, and will cut him off from among his people.
11. For the life of the flesh is in the blood: and I have rarer among Jews than among any other human group" (A. Leroy Beaulieu).

The Jewish method of slaughter (Shechitah) causes the maximum effusion of blood in the animal; and the remaining blood is extracted by means of the washing and salting of the meat. For the prescribed regulations, see Dayan Lazarus, The Ways of Her Household, Part I.

In regard to the terms nevelah and terefah in v. 15, the flesh of an animal that died of itself (nevelah), or was torn by beasts (terefah), is emphatically forbidden. The latter term (terefah) includes flesh of all animals ritually slaughtered but found to contain injuries or organic diseases, whether patent or determined by inspection of the animal after Shechitah. Animals not killed strictly in the prescribed Jewish manner, are technically also termed nevelah. The flesh of animals which are not found on Rabbinic inspection to be sound, is forbidden food.

11. life of the flesh. The vital principle of the animal was in the blood. While life and blood are not quite identical, the blood is the principal carrier of life. With heavy loss of blood, vital powers dwindle; and if the loss continues, they cease altogether. Blood is therefore something sacred. It is withdrawn from ordinary use as an

The use of blood, representing life, in the rites of atonement symbolised the complete yielding up of the worshipper's life to God, and conveyed the thought that the surrender of a man to the will of God carried with it the assurance of Divine pardon.

12. therefore I said. i.e. because the life resides in the blood, for that reason is its consumption prohibited.

13. cover it with dust. The blood being the symbol of life, it had to be treated in a reverent manner, in the same way that a corpse must not be left exposed. The covering with dust was the equivalent of burial in the case of a dead body. According to Hoffmann, the exhortation to act reverently in regard to the blood of an animal was not liable to be forgotten in connection with animals that were admitted as sacrifices. But some reminder was necessary

PROHIBITION OF UNLAWFUL MARRIAGES, UNCHASTITY AND MOLECH WORSHIP

Chapters xi–xvii, the subject of which is ritual uncleanness and its purification, are now followed by chapters xviii–xx, dealing with moral uncleanness and its punishment. The laws and precepts contained in xviii–xx lie at the very root of the life of purity and righteousness, and form the foundation principles of social morality. The first place among these is given to the institution of marriage (xviii). Marriage, the corner-stone of all human society, is here conceived in a purely ethical spirit; and any violation of the sacred character of marriage is deemed a heinous offence, calling down the punishment of Heaven both upon the offender and the society that condones the offence. Impurity in marriage, incestuous promiscuity among near relations, and other abominations are unpardonable sins, blighting the land and its inhabitants with defilement. "In graphic brevity and comeliness, Lev. xviii surpasses all other passages of similar import; more delicately and at the same time more seriously, such matters cannot be spoken about" (Ewald).

If the cultural condition of any people can be measured by the purity of its home life, then Israel's is the primacy in moral culture among the peoples. In Israel, marriage is regarded as a Divine institution, under whose shadow alone there can be true reverence for the mystery, dignity and sacredness of life. Marriage is a primary religious duty. He who has no wife—say the Rabbis—lives without comfort, help, joy, blessing, atonement (i.e. true religious communion with God). The Jewish husband—they declared—loves his wife as himself and honours her more than himself.

Chapter XVIII

18 1. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
2. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, I am the Lord your God. 3. After the doings of the land of Egypt, wherein ye dwelt, shall ye not do: and after the doings of the land

"I will work for thee, I will honour thee, I will support thee, even as it beseemeth a Jewish husband to do," is to this day the husband's vow in the Jewish marriage-contract. The affectionate consideration shown to the Jewish wife, however, as well as the domestic purity and devotion that are the glory of Jewish womanhood, are both largely the fruit of the laws and warnings in these chapters of Leviticus. They effectively prevented the submergence of Israel in the sea of heathen impurity that covered the whole ancient world. These laws proved the ramparts for a new human ideal—that of the Holiness of Home—an ideal that became one of the distinguishing features of the Jewish people throughout the ages.

Chapter xviii forms one of the Readings of the Day of Atonement. "The selection was no doubt prompted by the desire to inculcate on the most solemn day in the Calendar the paramount duty of purity and self-control. And there is but little doubt that obedience to these behests has been, by Divine Providence, one of the most potent factors in the preservation of Israel" (Hermann Adler).

1–5. Introductory Exhortation

2. I am the Lord your God. These words proclaim the Source from which the precepts emanate, as well as the Power who will not brook the wanton violation of these fundamental laws.

sanctioned by their national laws. "Both the practices and the laws were contrary to Reason, Conscience, and the Divine Will" (Wogue).

4. judgements. Israel was receiving a new code of laws that was to take the place of what they had seen in force in Egypt and would find in Canaan. Judgements are laws dictated by the moral sense, like the prohibition of theft: statutes are distinctive precepts addressed to the Israelite, like the prohibition of swine's flesh; see on Gen, XXVI, 5.

do . . . . keep. The two verbs are complementary. Do is the mechanical performance; keep includes the idea of study and understanding of the principle underlying the command. Only where there is intelligent conformity to the letter of the Torah, does its spirit become a transforming power in the lives of men.

to walk therein. This phrase occurs only in two other places in the Torah (XX, 23; XXVI, 3). It means not merely to obey the behests of Religion once or twice, but to walk in them, to order life in accordance with them.

I am the LORD. i.e. I who command these precepts am the LORD your God. The refrain—"I am the LORD" gives peculiar solemnity to the demands which it accompanies in these chapters. Man must obey, because it is God who commands. "The Divine imperative is its own self-sufficient motive" (Moore).

5. if a man do. The Rabbis emphasise the word man. Rabbi Meir used to say, "Whence do we know that even a heathen, if he obeys the law of God, will thereby attain to the same spiritual communion with God as the High Priest? Scripture says, 'which if a man do, he shall live by them'—not priest, Levite, or Israelite, but man" (Talmud).

he shall live by them. He will gain the life eternal in the world to come (Onkelos, Targum Jonathan, Rashi);

of Canaan, whither I bring you, shall ye not do:
neither shall ye walk in their statutes. 4. My judgements shall ye do, and my statutes shall ye keep, to walk therein: I am the LORD your God.
5. Ye shall therefore keep my statutes, and my judgements: which if a man do, he shall live by them: I am the LORD.*vi

6. None of you shall approach to any that is yea, through it alone can he gain true life in this world, as the life of the wicked is not really Life (Hoffmann). The plain meaning is, that by adhering to the precepts of God, a man will enjoy well-being and length of days; cf. "that thy days may be long" (Deut. XI, 21). "No country was ever prosperous and strong in which the sanctity of family life and the value of personal purity were not upheld and practised" (W. R. Inge).

The Rabbis take the words "he shall live by them" to mean that God's commandments are to be a means of life and not of destruction to his children, וחי בהם ולא שימות בהם. With the exception of three prohibitions, all commandments of the Law are, therefore, in abeyance whenever life is endangered. No man, however, is to save his life at the price of public idolatry, murder, or adultery. This was the decision of the Rabbis in the war of extermination which the Roman Emperor Hadrian waged against Judaism; see on XXII, 32.

6–18. FORBIDDEN MARRIAGES

All unions between the sexes that are repellent to the finer feelings of man, or would taint the natural affection between near relations, are sternly prohibited. Primary prohibited marriages are:—a) blood-relations—mother, sister, daughter, grand-daughter, father's sister and mother's sister; and b) cases of affinity—the wives of blood-relations and of the wife's blood-relations. All unions—whether temporary or permanent—between persons belonging to these groups are classed as "incestuous" (עריות). They have no binding force whatsoever in Jewish Law, and can in no circumstance be deemed a "marriage"; hence, no divorce (Get) is required for their dissolution. The issue are illegitimate (mamzerim).

The Rabbis have expanded the primary Prohibited Degrees in the ascending and descending line. These expansions are known as "secondary Prohibited Marriages, שניות"; e.g. as the mother is forbidden, so is the grandmother and great-grandmother; as the step-mother so is the grandfather's wife; as the daughter-in-law, so is the grandson's wife. Marriages of the secondary Prohibited Degrees must be dissolved by a divorce, and the children are legitimate.

The above Prohibited Degrees of marriage, whether Biblical or Rabbinical, are based on instinctive abhorrence and natural decorum. Jewish sectaries, however, as well as various Christian Churches, largely under the influence of Roman Law, greatly extended these prohibitions, until even an alliance between the great-grandchildren of two brothers and sisters was by them deemed forbidden. The Church introduced further prohibitions in connection with "spiritual kinship"; e.g. a godfather could not marry the child at whose baptism he was sponsor. The hardship resulting from such unbounded extension of Prohibited Degrees by the Roman Law and Church, was to some extent mitigated by dispensation, which the Church granted in certain circumstances; but this led to great abuses. Both dispensation and "spiritual kinship" are, of course, unknown in Judaism.

The Rabbis explain that prior to the Revelation at Sinai, only the following marriages were prohibited: viz., mother, father's wife, married woman, and sister on mother's side. Hence Abraham was permitted to marry his half-sister; and Jacob, two sisters.

6. none of you . . . nakedness, No one shall contract a marriage with a blood-relation. The broad principle (כלל) is here stated, and then particulars are given in v. 7–18.

There was dire need for the legislation in this chapter. Many of the incestuous marriages herein mentioned were common among contemporary peoples, and were recognized in parts of the Roman world as late as the early Middle Ages. In Egypt, marriage with a sister was quite usual, especially in royal families. The Greeks countenanced marriage with a half-sister. Among the Persians, marriages with mother, sisters and daughters were expressly recommended as meritorious and as most pleasing to the gods. Such were the usages, not of barbarous and reckless tribes unused to moral restrictions, but of the cultured nations of antiquity. "It is evident that Mosaism brought the world a new message in the matter of marriage" (Dillmann). When we think of the influence of this Chapter on the Western and Near Eastern peoples, we realise that Judaism is indeed a religious civilisation!

uncover their nakedness. Used for, "to take to wife" in alliances which can never be regarded as "marriage." It is employed here, instead of the usual phrase, in order to bring out more strikingly the moral hideousness and animality of the transgression (S. R. Hirsch).

7. of thy father. Forbids a union between mother and son, as a dishonour both to father and mother.

8. father's wife. Forbids union with a stepmother. As marriage makes man and wife one (Gen. II, 24), a stepmother was regarded as a blood-relation of the nearest kind.

It was a practice among Eastern heirs-apparent to take possession of the father's wives, as an assertion of their right to the throne, the action identifying them with the late ruler's personality in the eyes of the people. This explains Reuben's conduct in Gen. XXXV, 22, and Absalom's in II Sam. XVI, 20–22.

9. born at home. A half-sister born of a legal marriage; see xx, 17.

born abroad. A half-sister born either of an illegal marriage or out of wedlock (Ibn Ezra).

10. thy son's daughter. As marriage with a step-grand-daughter is forbidden in v. 17, this verse seems superfluous. The Rabbis, however, understood it as referring to the daughter of an illegitimate son or daughter.

Marriage with a daughter is not expressly forbidden; because, in view of this prohibition of the grand-daughter, it is self-evident.

thine own nakedness. "They are part of yourself" (Moffatt).

11. thy father's wife's daughter. Descent from the same mother was long deemed a closer degree of relationship than descent from the same father (Gen. xx, 12). Consequently, v. 9 might have been misunderstood to apply to either "thy sister (viz., of the same mother) who is the daughter of thy father," i.e. a full sister; or, to "the daughter of thy mother," i.e. a half-sister from the same mother but different father. Union with a half-sister from the same father but different mother might thus have been thought permissible. Hence the need of a clear prohibition of the daughter from the same father by another mother, as is here given (Hoffmann).

father's nakedness. 9. The nakedness of thy sister, the daughter of thy father, or the daughter of thy mother, whether born at home, or born abroad, even their nakedness thou shalt not uncover. 10. The nakedness of thy son's daughter, or of thy daughter's daughter, even their nakedness thou shalt not uncover: for theirs is thine own nakedness. 11. The nakedness of thy father's wife's daughter, begotten of thy father, she is thy sister, thou shalt not uncover her nakedness. 12. Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's sister: she is thy father's near kinswoman. 13. Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy mother's sister: for she is thy mother's near kinswoman. 14. Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's brother, thou shalt not approach to his wife: she is thine aunt. 15. Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy daughter in law: she is thy son's wife; thou shalt not uncover her nakedness. 16. Thou shalt not uncover

12. thy father's sister. This prohibition too was new to Israelites, and contrary to their former usage (Exod. VI, 20).

14. thy father's brother. Union with the wife of a father's brother is an offence against two persons whom marriage had made "one flesh" (see v. 8). For that reason, her nephew could not marry her after his uncle's death. The Rabbis declare marriage with the wife of a mother's brother equally illegal.

15–18. Cases of affinity by marriage.

15. daughter in law. Forbids marriage between a man and his daughter-in-law after divorce or the husband's death. It was deemed a foul offence, almost on a plane with "marriage" with a daughter.

16. brother's wife. An exception to this rule is given in Deut. XXV, 5f, where the obligation is placed upon a man to marry his brother's widow, should his brother have died without issue.

17. wickedness. lit. "harlotry." The union of a man with both a woman and her daughter or grand-daughter, whether at the same time or after the death of one, is considered an execrable action, an "enormity" (RV Margin).

18. to be a rival to her. Better, as a fellow-wife. Sisterly love would thereby turn to rivalry and hatred.

in her life time. During the first wife's lifetime, even if he had divorced her, he could not marry her sister. After her death it was permitted, and was even deemed by the Rabbis a praiseworthy thing to do, as no other woman would show the same affection to the orphaned children of the deceased sister.

19–23. Immoral Practices Forbidden

19. impure. In xv, 24, the same matter had been dealt with from the point of view of the ritual defilement that is thereby incurred. Here the practice is denounced as contrary to the principles of moral purity; see also xx, 18.

While recognising the sacred nature of the estate of wedlock, Judaism prescribes continence even in marriage. "The Jewish ideal of holiness is not confined to the avoidance of the illicit; its ideal includes the hallowing of the licit" (Moore). It categorically demands reserve, self-control and moral freedom in the most intimate relations of life. It ordains the utmost consideration for the wife not only throughout the monthly period of separation (niddah), but also during the seven following days of convalescence and recovery (taharah), which are terminated by ritual purification through total immersion either in a fountain, or the nakedness of a woman and her daughter;

thou shalt not take her son's daughter, or her

they are near kinswomen: it is wickedness. 18.
And thou shalt not take a woman to her sister, to be a rival to her, to uncover her nakedness, beside the other in her life time. 19. And thou shalt not approach unto a woman to uncover her nakedness,
as long as she is impure by her uncleanness. 20.
And thou shalt not lie carnally with thy neighbour's

a 'gathering of living water' (mikweh, in later Hebrew, mikvah; see on XI, 36). By the reverent guidance in these vital matters which these laws afford, Jewish men have been taught respect for womanhood, moral discipline, and ethical culture. As for Jewish women, they were, on the one hand, given protection from uncurbed passion; and, on the other hand, taught to view marital life under the aspect of holiness (קדושה).

Even apart from their purely religious side, the importance of these regulations, scrupulously observed throughout the generations in Israel, cannot be over-estimated. They have fostered racial sanity and well-being, and have proved as favourable to hygiene as to morals. The overwhelming majority of Jewish women still live, thank God, under the 'yoke' of these laws—to their own good and the biologic good of the Jewish people. Striking testimony has been given by scientists to the fact that, though health is not put forward as the primary purpose of these regulations, yet such is their indubitable result. These laws of marital continence are now held by some scientists to accord with the fundamental rhythm in woman's nature. While medical opinion is not unanimous on this difficult subject, there can be no doubt as to the significance of statistics like the following: an investigation, conducted over a number of years at Mount Sinai Hospital, New York, in connection with 80,000 Jewish women who observe niddah and taharah laws, showed that the proportion of those suffering from uterine cancer was one to fifteen of non-Jewish women of corresponding social and economic status. Even more noteworthy is the difference in the proportion of a certain form of cancer among Jewish and non-Jewish men respectively (Sorsby, Cancer and Race, 1931). "The Mosaic Code again stands out as an astonishing example of inspired wisdom and foresight which should appeal with redoubled force to the enlightened minds of to-day. Discipline and self-restraint are perhaps the lessons most needed for the present times" (Lieut.-Col. F.E. Freemantle, Chairman, International Cancer Conference, London, July 1928).

For a brief account of the traditional laws of niddah and taharah, see Dayan Lazarus, The Ways of Her Household, Part II (Myers & Co., 1923). See also Rabbi David Miller, The Secret of the Jew; his Life—his Family (Oakland, Calif.)

20. thy neighbour's wife. This prohibition is so vital to human society that it is included in the Ten Commandments, immediately after the protection of life, as being of equal importance with it (Ewald); see also note on xx, 10.

21. pass through the fire to Molech. We have here the first mention in the Bible of the dreadful practice of child-sacrifice to a deity of the surrounding heathen Semites. Israel's Teachers shudder at this hideous aberration of man's sense of worship, and they do not rest till all Israel shares their horror of it.

Sexual impurity, especially when it is allied with, or elevated into, a form of worship, as it was in the cults of Baal and Astarte, dehumanizes, and leads to the deadening of the holiest human instincts.

22. with mankind. Discloses the abyss of depravity from which the Torah saved the Israelite. This unnatural vice was also prevalent in Greece and Rome.

23. confusion. "A violation of nature and of the Divine order" (Dillmann); cf. Exod. XXII, 18; Lev. XX, 15f.

The almost incredible bestialities, revealing the hideous possibilities of corrupt human nature, enumerated in v. 21–23, are but too well attested in laws, customs, and legends of the ancient and medieval world. They are not unknown in modern societies. Nowhere in literature is there such an uncompromising condemnation of these offences as in XVIII and XX. It led to their extirpation in the midst of Israel, and eventually to their moral outlawry among all peoples that came under the sway of the Hebrew Scriptures.

24–30. An exhortation to lay to heart the fate of the Canaanites whose loathsome customs, disruptive of social morality, would bring about their annihilation.

24. defile not ye yourselves. Whenever sex is withdrawn from its place in marriage and separated from its function as the expression of reverent and lawful wedded love (whereby its quality is completely changed), the person concerned is defiled. The Rabbis deem sexual immorality the strongest of defilements (טומאה), cutting man off from God.

v. 27. סבירן האלה

25. the land is defiled. Only moral offences, and not ceremonial transgressions, are said to defile the land. Every "enormity" first defiles the person who commits it, be he Canaanite or an Israelite, and he in turn defiles the land (Büchler).

I do visit the iniquity thereof. The land (i.e. its inhabitants) is punished. Through pestilence and drought, its inhabitants are vomited out in the same manner as the human system rejects food which is disagreeable to it. The verbs in this verse visualise the future, as though it had actually come into being.

29. shall be cut off. In most of the offences mentioned, the penalty prescribed is death. With the remainder, the culprits were expelled from the Community and presumably from the country, since their presence contaminated the land.

30. keep my charge. The Rabbis understood this phrase in the sense of "guard My charge"; i.e. it is the duty which I cast out from before you: 25. and the land is defiled: therefore I do visit the iniquity thereof upon it, and the land vomiteth out her inhabitants. 26. Ye therefore shall keep my statutes and my judgements, and shall not do any of these abominations; neither the homeborn, nor the stranger that sojourneth among you: *m a 27. (for all these abominations have the men of the land done, which were before you, and the land is defiled;) *m s 28. that the land vomit not you out also, when ye defile it, as it vomited out the nation that was before you. 29. For whosoever shall do any of these abominations, even the souls that do them shall be cut off from among their people.

30. Therefore shall ye keep my charge, that ye do not any of these abominable customs, which were done before you, and that ye defile not yourselves therein: I am the LORD your God.

of the Religious Authorities to make a "fence round the Law," in order to keep men far from sin, and to warn and instruct the people as to the seriousness and sacredness of these prohibitions.

30. I am the LORD your God. The former inhabitants indulged in unnatural vices because the worship of their gods was demoralising. It is otherwise with Israel. The Lord is their God, and His service is elevating and spiritualising. Hence there is here a natural transition to the next chapter with its opening command, "Ye shall be holy; for I the LORD your God am holy."

VII. KEDOSHIM

(Chapters XIX–XX)

Chapter XIX

A MANUAL OF MORAL INSTRUCTION

This remarkable chapter occupies the central position in Leviticus, and therefore in the Pentateuch. The Rabbis rightly regarded it as the kernel of the Law and declared that "the essentials of the Torah (רוב גופי תורה) are summarised therein" (Sifra). This chapter has in fact been looked upon as a counterpart of the Decalogue itself, the Ten Commandments being in essence repeated in its verses (i and ii in v. 4; iii in v. 12; iv and v in v. 3; vi in v. 16; vii in v. 29; viii and ix in v. 11-16; and x in v. 18). The precepts contained in the chapter may, at first sight, appear a medley of the spiritual and ceremonial—fundamental maxims and principles of justice and morality alongside of ritual laws and observances. The Torah, however, regards human life as an indivisible whole, and declines to exclude any phase thereof from its purview; see introductory note to chapters xi–xvi.

VII. KEDOSHIM

Chapter XIX

19 1. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
2. Speak unto all the congregation of the children of

2. HOLINESS AND THE IMITATION OF GOD

As the command, "ye shall be holy, for I the Lord your God am holy," dominates not only this chapter but the whole ethical legislation in Leviticus, it is necessary to have a clear understanding of the word holy (קדוש) in its ethical, as distinct from it ritual, signification. Firstly, it denotes the sublime exaltedness and overpowering majesty of God: in the presence of that Divine holiness, mortal man feels "but dust and ashes" and is crushed by the sense of his unworthiness (Isa. vi, 5). Secondly, holy expresses God's complete freedom from everything that makes men imperfect, and His recoil from everything impure and unrighteous; in the words of the Prophet, "Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canst not look on iniquity" (Hab. i, 13). Thirdly, holy stands for the fulness of God's ethical qualities—for more than goodness (טוב), more than purity (טהור), more than righteousness (צדיק); it embraces all these in their ideal completeness. "The Holy One, blessed be He!" (הקדוש ברוך הוא) is the most common Name for God in Rabbinical literature, as well as on the lips of the Jewish masses. In its ritual usage, the word "holy" is applied to persons and things connected with the Sanctuary, or consecrated for religious purposes.

2. all the congregation. The Torah and its message of holiness is the heritage of the congregation of Israel. There was not to be a small class of "specialists" in religion who dwelt apart, while the people were sunk in ignorance and superstition. Israel was to form a spiritual democracy; Deut. xxxiv; see note on Exod. xxii, 30.

ye shall be holy: for I the Lord your God am holy. Man is not only to worship God, but to imitate Him. By his deeds he must reveal the Divine that is implanted in him; and make manifest, by the purity and righteousness of his actions, that he is of God. Mortal man cannot imitate God's infinite majesty or His eternity; but he can strive towards a purity that is Divine, by keeping aloof from everything loathsome and defiling (XI, 44); and especially can he imitate God's merciful qualities. This "imitation of God" is held forth by the Rabbis as the highest human ideal. "Be like God; as He is merciful and gracious, so be thou merciful and gracious. Scripture commands, Walk ye after the Lord your God. But the Lord is a consuming fire; how can men walk after Him? But the meaning is, By being as He is—merciful, loving, long-suffering. Mark how, on the first page of the Torah, God clothed the naked—Adam; and on the last, He buried the dead—Moses. He heals the sick, frees the captives, does good even to His enemies, and is merciful both to the living and the dead" (Talmud). These merciful qualities, therefore, are real links between God and man; and man is never nearer the Divine than in his compassionate moments. Dr. Schechter has pointed out that the Imitation of God is confined by the Rabbis to His attributes of mercy and graciousness. "The whole Rabbinic literature might be searched in vain for a single instance of the sterner Biblical attributes of God being set up as a model for a man to copy" (Abrahams).

Holiness is thus not so much an abstract or a mystic idea, as a regulative principle in the everyday lives of men and women. The words, "ye shall be holy," are the keynote of the whole chapter, and must be read in connection with its various precepts: reverence for parents, consideration for the needy, prompt wages for reasonable hours, honourable dealing, no tale-bearing or malice, love of one's neighbour and cordiality to the alien, equal justice to rich and poor, just measures and balances—together with abhorrence of everything unclean, irrational or heathen. Holiness is thus attained not by flight from the world, nor by monk-like renunciation of human relationships of family

Israel, and say unto them, Ye shall be holy: for I the LORD your God am holy. 3. Ye shall fear every man his mother, and his father, and ye shall or station, but by the spirit in which we fulfil the obligations of life in its simplest and commonest details: in this way—by doing justly, loving mercy, and walking humbly with our God—is everyday life transfigured. See also Exodus, p. 263.

3–4. Fundamental Moral Laws

3. ye shall fear . . . his father. The first precept stressed is reverence for parents. Neglect of filial duty vitiates a man's whole attitude to life, and places the ideal of holiness out of his reach; see Exodus, p. 222. "If we have failed in our duty towards our parents, we are not likely to succeed in our relations towards others" (Foerster).

fear . . . his mother. lit. "stand in awe of . . . his mother." In the Decalogue the father is mentioned before the mother, and the word used is honour instead of fear. The Rabbis suggest the following reason for the difference: the father is the parent who disciplines the child; the mother is richer in manifestations of affection and kindliness. The child would consequently have "love" for the mother, but "stand in awe" before the father. Therefore, the Torah insists on the child showing love and reverence to both. The term "fear" in this verse is that used in reference to God. "Dear to God is the honouring of father and mother, for Scripture employs the same expressions about honouring and revering parents as about honouring and revering Himself" (Talmud). For the child, his father and mother are more than ordinary mortals; and, in fact, the Fifth Commandment is in the Decalogue the connecting link between our duties towards God and our fellowmen. Many are the beautiful sayings in Rabbinical literature in regard to this Commandment, but none more beautiful than the story of Dama. Dama, a heathen dealer in jewels in Ascalon, had a stone such as was required to replace one of the precious stones in the High Priest's breastplate. A deputation from Jerusalem came to him to negotiate for its purchase; and he agreed to sell it for one hundred dinars, but when he went into an inner room to fetch the stone, he found that his father was asleep in that room. Dama came back, and said he could not after all sell the stone. The deputation offered two hundred dinars, three hundred, a thousand dinars—but in vain. Soon after, his father having waked, Dama ran after the Temple emissaries with the jewel; but he refused to take more than the original one hundred dinars of the first offer. "I will not make any profit from the honour which I paid to my father," he said. Filial reverence, the Rabbis held, was a dictate of Natural Religion and, therefore, of universal application; and it is characteristic of their broad humanity that they selected the action of a contemporary heathen as a perfect example of filial piety.

ye shall keep my sabbaths. The connection of these two precepts is significant. Even as honouring of parents stands foremost among human duties, the sanctification of the Sabbath is the first step towards holiness in his spiritual life. For the Sabbath is not only a day of cessation from work, but the weekly opportunity for communal worship and spiritual growth; see Exodus, p. 217–221. These two commands are placed side by side in order to teach that the fear of parents must not exceed the fear of God. Should they demand anything that contravenes God's law, then the child must place his duty to God before that of his parents (Talmud).

I am the LORD your God. This phrase (often in the shorter form, I am the LORD) occurs sixteen times in this Chapter. It is the Divine seal set to the enactments of the law. It "points to God at once as the Holy One day, it shall be burnt with fire. 7. And if it be eaten at all on the third day, it is an abomination;

it shall not be accepted; 8. but every one that profaned the holy thing of the LORD: and that soul shall be cut off from his people.

4. idols. lit. "things of nought, non-entities"; i.e. things that have no real existence; see Jer. XIV, 14.

5–8. RITUAL LAWS

5. when ye offer. Or "if ye offer." See III, 1 and VII, 15–20. Note that the form used is not the imperative—"ye shall offer;" sacrifices are voluntary (Kimchi). The main concern of Scripture seems to be not so much that a sacrifice shall be brought, as, if brought, how it shall be brought; i.e. that it be offered in strict accordance with the regulations prescribed for avoiding heathen associations.

9–10. CONSIDERATION FOR THE POOR

9. corners of thy field. What is here commanded is a statutory charge on one's harvest, to which the English poor rate is analogous. It does not exclude private and voluntary assistance, according to the generous impulse of the giver.

וּפֶ֥רֶט כַּרְמְךָ֖ לֹ֣א תְלַקֵּ֑ט לֶֽעָנִ֤י וְלַגֵּר֙ תַּעֲזֹ֣ב אֹתָ֔ם אֲנִ֖י יְהוָ֥ה
11 אֱלֹהֵיכֶֽם׃ לֹ֖א תִּגְנֹ֑בוּ וְלֹא־תְכַחֲשׁ֥וּ וְלֹֽא־תְשַׁקְּר֖וּ אִ֥ישׁ

Consideration for the poor distinguishes the Mosaic Law from all other ancient legislations, such as the Roman Law. The object of the latter seems to be primarily to safeguard the rights of the possessing classes. In the Torah, the poor man is a brother, and when in need he is to be relieved ungrudgingly not only with an open hand but with an open heart. In his noble self-defence, Job (xxxi, 17–20) protests :

> Never have I eaten my morsel alone,
> Without sharing it with the fatherless ;
> Never saw I any perish for want of clothing
> But I warmed him with fleece from my lambs,
> And his loins gave me their blessing.

The Rabbis continued this doctrine, and declared pity to be a distinguishing trait of the Jewish character. If a Jew—they held—shows himself lacking in consideration for a fellowman in distress or suffering, we may well doubt the purity of his Jewish descent. "There is no ethical quality more characteristic of Rabbinic Judaism than Rachmonuth—pity. The beggar whose point of view is that you are to thank him for allowing him to give you the opportunity for showing Rachmonuth, is a characteristically Jewish figure" (Montefiore).

gleaning. The ears of corn which fall to the ground at the time of reaping.

11–16. Duties towards our Fellowmen

These precepts restate the fundamental rules of life in human society that are contained in the Second Table of the Decalogue. These moral principles were expanded by the Rabbis, and applied to every phase of civil and criminal law.

11. ye shall not steal. "Even as a practical joke ; or, in order to enable another to profit by the four or five-fold restitution which thou shalt have to make ; or, to reclaim by stealth thine own stolen property, lest thou seem a thief" (Sifra). Everything that has the appearance of stealing is strictly forbidden, lest a man become habituated to the harvest. 10. And thou shalt not glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather the fallen fruit of thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and for the stranger: I am the LORD your God.

11. Ye shall not steal; neither shall ye deal falsely, nor lie one to another. 12. And ye shall act of stealing (Shulchan Aruch). Especially reprehensible is "stealing the good opinion of others" (גניבת דעת)—by any manner of misrepresentation, "publicity," or flattery deceiving others into having a better opinion of him or his doings than he deserves. "Let a man earn the good opinion of his fellowmen, but let him not steal it" (S. R. Hirsch). A classical example is afforded by Absalom's manner of ingratiating himself with all who felt discontent at "the law's delay," suggesting that if he were king, things would be very different. "And Absalom rose up early, and stood beside the way of the gate: and it was so, that when any man had a suit which should come to the king for judgement, then Absalom said unto him, ... See, thy matters are good and right; but there is no man deputed of the king to hear thee. Absalom said moreover, Oh that I were made judge in the land, that every man which hath any suit or cause might come unto me, and I would do him justice! . . . . So Absalom stole the hearts of the men of Israel" (II Sam. xv, 2–6).

nor lie. "Let your Yes be righteous and your No be righteous. He who exacted retribution from the generation of the Flood, will exact it of the man who does not stand by his word. Truth is one of the pillars of the Universe; it is God's own seal. The liar is an outcast from the Divine fellowship. Men too punish him, for he is not believed even when he speaks the truth. The good man is he who is what he seems" (Talmud). The truth, however, must be spoken in love. Truthfulness must be moral: it ceases to be truthfulness and becomes an abominable form of lying when it is used as a tool of revenge or malice in order to ruin another or for putting him to open shame.

"A truth that's told with bad intent Beats all the lies you can invent" (Blake).

12 בַּעֲמִיתוֹ׃ וְלֹא־תִשָּׁבְעוּ בִשְׁמִי לַשָּׁקֶר וְחִלַּלְתָּ אֶת־שֵׁם

12. and ye shall not swear. And indicates that the verse is to be closely associated with the preceding one. "If thou hast stolen, thou wilt end by falsely denying, lying, and swearing by My Name to a falsehood" (Sifra)—profaning the Name of God for the purpose of deceit and fraud.

13. oppress. "Defraud" (Moffatt). In Deut. xxiv, 14, "a hired servant" is substituted for "thy neighbour." "Oppressing" a hired servant means taking advantage of his helplessness and paying him less than his due for his work.

rob him. By withholding from him that which is his.

abide with thee. If the labourer is hired by the day, his wages must be paid to him immediately after the day's work is done. The poor man lives from hand to mouth.

14. curse the deaf. Defame the deaf, or anyone who cannot hear, and so cannot vindicate his own character.

nor put a stumblingblock before the blind. "Trip up a blind man" (Moffatt), either in sport or malice. Alas for the prevalence of human callousness and cruelty that render the formulation of such a precept necessary.

"Deaf" and "blind" are typical figures of all misfortune, inexperience and moral weakness. This verse is a warning against leading the young and morally weak into sin, or provoking them to commit irretrievable mistakes. The following are typical violations of this ethical precept: he who gives disingenuous advice to the inexperienced; he who tempts the Nazirite to break his oath not to drink wine; he who sells lethal weapons to weak or dangerous characters—all these transgress the command 'Thou shalt not put a stumblingblock before the blind.' Equally so does the man who administers corporal punishment to a grown-up son: it may make that son forgetful of filial duty, and in blind anger commit an unpardonable offence (Talmud).

not swear by my name falsely, so that thou profane
the name of thy God: I am the LORD. 13. Thou shalt not oppress thy neighbour, nor rob him: the wages of a hired servant shall not abide with thee all night until the morning. 14. Thou shalt not curse
the deaf, nor put a stumblingblock before the blind;
but thou shalt fear thy God: I am the LORD. *ii (v)
15. Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgement:
thou shalt not respect the person of the poor,
nor honour the person of the mighty: but in righteousness shalt thou judge thy neighbour.

fear thy God. Who is the avenger of the helpless; of the deaf or absent man who cannot protect himself from the reviling which he has not heard; of the "blind" man who cannot avoid the stumbling-block of which he is not aware. Furthermore, the man who deliberately gives harmful advice may allege the noblest of intentions. But Scripture exhorts him to "fear God," who searches the innermost recesses of the human heart and knows its secret thoughts. See the note of Exod. I, 17, showing that fearing God means natural piety and fundamental humanity.

15. respect the person of the poor. "You shall not be partial to a poor man" (Moffatt). With all its sympathy for the poor and helpless, the Torah fears that justice might be outraged in favour of the poor man when he is in the wrong. Even sympathy and compassion must be silenced in the presence of Justice. In this Scriptural command, as in Exod. XXIII, 3 (Thou shalt not favour a poor man in his cause) "there is a sublimity of moral view, which compels the reverence of all" (Geiger).

nor honour. The judge must not say, "This man is rich and well connected; how can I put him to shame by deciding against him?" (Sifra).

in righteousness. There is to be neither prejudice in favour of the poor, nor dread of offending the great, but justice; see on Exod. XXIII, 3. Thus, one of the litigants is not to be permitted to state his case at length,

16 בְּצֶדֶק תִּשְׁפֹּט עֲמִיתֶךָ׃ לֹא־תֵלֵךְ רָכִיל בְּעַמֶּיךָ לֹא תַעֲמֹד
17 עַל־דַּם רֵעֶךָ אֲנִי יְהוָה׃ לֹא־תִשְׂנָא אֶת־אָחִיךָ בִּלְבָבֶךָ
18 הוֹכֵחַ תּוֹכִיחַ אֶת־עֲמִיתֶךָ וְלֹא־תִשָּׂא עָלָיו חֵטְא׃ לֹא־

and the other bidden "to cut it short." One litigant must not be allowed to be seated in court, and the other kept standing (Sifra). "The judge should feel as though a sword were suspended above his head throughout the time he sits in judgment" (Talmud).

Another authoritative explanation of in righteousness shalt thou judge thy neighbour is, "Judge every man in the scale of merit (לכף זכות); refuse to condemn by appearances, but put the best construction on the deeds of your fellow-men" (Talmud).

The teaching of this and the preceding verses is thus restated by the Prophet: "Speak ye every man the truth with his neighbour; execute the judgement of truth and peace in your gates; and let none of you imagine evil in your hearts against his neighbour; and love no false oath: for all these are things that I hate, saith the LORD" (Zechar. VIII, 16, 17).

16. go up and down as a talebearer. lit. "go up and down as a pedlar." This expressive idiom is here applied to a person who travels about dealing in scandal and malicious hearsay, getting the secrets of people and retailing them wherever he goes (Rashi). A mischievous business, even if the report is true and told without malice (Maimonides). "A more despicable character exists not; such a person is a pest to society, and should be exiled from the habitation of men" (Adam Clarke). Injurious gossip may often do as much harm as slanderous defamation. Hence the prayer, three times daily, "O my God, guard my tongue from evil and my lips from speaking guile" (Authorised Prayer Book, p. 54). The slanderer, the man of the evil tongue (לשון הרע), the calumniator, is worse than a murderer, since he destroys a man's reputation, which is more precious than his life (Talmud). Hence the informer (moser) was deemed the most abandoned creature among all evil-doers to their kind.

stand against the blood of thy neighbour. Better, stand idly by the blood of thy neighbour (Leeser); i.e. when his life is in danger. Do not stand idly by, watching with indifference

16. Thou shalt not go up and down as a talebearer among thy people: neither shalt thou stand against the blood of thy neighbour: I am the LORD.
17. Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thine heart:
thou shalt surely rebuke thy neighbour, and not thy fellowman in mortal danger through drowning, or attacked by wild animals, or robbers, without hastening to his rescue (Talmud). In protecting the life of another, it is permitted to take the life of the assailant, even as in self-defence. The Sifra gives a further application to this verse: if thy fellowman is accused of a crime, and evidence that would clear him of it is in thy possession, thou art not at liberty to keep silent.

17–18. PROHIBITION OF HATRED AND VENGEANCE: LOVE OF NEIGHBOUR

17. hate thy brother in thine heart. Nursing your grievance against your fellowman. Most of the hating in the world is quite unjustified, groundless hating for its own sake (שנאת חנם). "Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thine heart. Our Rabbis taught that if Scripture had merely said 'Thou shalt not hate thy brother,' this precept might be explained to mean only that you must not injure him, nor insult him, nor vex him; and so the words 'in thine heart' are added to forbid us even to feel hatred in our heart without giving it outward expression. Causeless hatred ranks with the three cardinal sins: Idolatry, Immorality, and Murder. The Second Temple, although in its time study of the Law and good works flourished and God's commandments were obeyed, was destroyed because of causeless hatred" (Achai Gaon). When it is fed by racial rivalry or religious bigotry, causeless hatred petrifies the heart and becomes organised malice. None has suffered, and is still suffering, from causeless hatred more than the Jewish People. The Talmud instances the Emperor Hadrian's conduct as typical of men swayed by such hatred. One day on Hadrian's journey in the East, a Jew passed the Imperial train and saluted the Emperor. Hadrian was beside himself with rage. 'You, a Jew, dare to greet the Emperor! You shall pay for this with your life.' In the course of the same day,

another Jew passed him, and, warned by example, he did not greet Hadrian. 'You, a Jew, dare to pass the Emperor without a greeting,' he angrily exclaimed. 'You have forfeited your life.' To his astonished courtiers he replied: 'I hate the Jews. Whatever they do, I find intolerable. I, therefore, make use of any pretext to destroy them.' So are all anti-Semites; so, all slaves of "causeless hatred."

rebuke thy neighbour. A precept extremely difficult of fulfilment; it is as difficult to administer reproof with delicacy and tact, as it is to receive reproof. Reproof must, of course, be offered in all kindness, otherwise it fails of its purpose; and, if it entails putting a man to shame in public, it is mortal sin. No matter how much learning and good works the man who commits such a sin may possess, he has no share in the world to come—says a great Mishnah teacher.

sin because of him. Unless there is a frank statement from the aggrieved party, the hatred or dislike smouldering in his heart may lead him into sin.

18. thou shalt not take vengeance. Forbids repaying evil with evil. "If a man finds both a friend and an enemy in distress, he should first assist his enemy, in order to subdue his evil inclination," i.e. man's inborn passion for revenge (Talmud). Scripture inculcates this virtue both by precept and illustrious example. Joseph's conduct to his brethren, and David's to Saul, are among the noblest instances of forgiveness to be found in literature. Such examples are not confined to the Biblical period. Samuel ibn Nagrela was a Spanish-Jewish poet of the eleventh century, who was vizier to the king of Granada. He was one day cursed in the presence of the king, who commanded Samuel to punish the offender by cutting out his tongue. The Jewish vizier, however, treated his enemy kindly, whereupon the curses became blessings. When the king next noticed the offender, he was astonished that Samuel had not carried out his command. Samuel replied, "I have torn out his angry tongue, and given him instead a kind one." The Rabbis rightly declare, "Who is mighty? He who makes his enemy his friend."

The Jew is not "a good hater." Shylock is 'the Jew that Shakespeare drew.' He is not the Jew of real life, even in the Middle Ages, stained as their story is with the hot tears—nay, the very heart's blood—of bear sin because of him. 18. Thou shalt not take vengeance, nor bear any grudge against the children of thy people, but thou shalt love thy neighbour as the martyred race. The medieval Jew did not take vengeance on his cruel foes. The Jews hunted out of Spain in 1492 were in turn cruelly expelled from Portugal. Some took refuge on the African coast. Eighty years later the descendants of the men who had thus inhumanly treated their Jewish fellowmen were defeated in Africa, whither they had been led by their king, Dom Sebastian. Those who were not slain were offered as slaves at Fez to the descendants of the Jewish exiles from Portugal. 'The humbled Portuguese nobles,' the historian narrates, 'were comforted when their purchasers proved to be Jews, for they knew that they had humane hearts'" (M. Joseph).

nor bear any grudge. Waiting for an opportunity to repay evil with evil. The Rabbis give the following explanation of these two phrases: "If a man says, I will not lend you the tool you require, because you did not lend it me when I asked for it—that is vengeance. If a man says, I will lend you the tool, although you refused to lend it when I asked for it—that is bearing grudge." In an ancient Jewish book, that has come down to us probably from Maccabean times, known as The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, we read: "Love ye one another from the heart; and if a man sin against thee, cast forth the poison of hate and speak peaceably to him. If he confess and repent, forgive him. But if he be shameless and persist in his wrongdoing, even so forgive him from the heart, and leave to God the avenging. Beware of hatred; for it works lawlessness even against the Lord Himself. For it will not hear the words of the Commandments concerning the loving of one's neighbour. Love would quicken even the dead, and would call back them that are condemned to die; but hatred would slay the living." The Rabbis declare, "He who has a forgiving spirit is himself forgiven. Whosoever does not persecute them that persecute him, whosoever suffers wrong in silence and requites it not, they are deemed the friends of God."

thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. Heb. ואהבת לרעך כמוך; i.e. let the honour and property of thy fellowman be as dear to thee as thine own. These three Heb. words were early recognised as the most comprehensive rule of conduct, as containing the essence of religion and applicable in every human relation and towards all men. Even the criminal condemned to die, say the Rabbis, has a claim on our brotherly love, and we must spare him unnecessary suffering. Hillel paraphrased this rule into "Whatever is hateful unto thee do it not unto thy fellow"; and declared it to be the whole Law, the remainder being but a commentary on this fundamental principle of the Torah. See Additional Note C, Thou Shall Love Thy Neighbour As Thyself, p. 220.

19–26. Miscellaneous Precepts

19. statutes. Laws for which the reason has not been revealed to us. However, the word may here mean, as in Jer. xxxiii, 25, fixed laws which God had instituted for the government of the physical universe. The purpose of the following regulations would then be: man must not deviate from the appointed order of things, nor go against the eternal laws of nature as established by Divine Wisdom. What God has ordained to be kept apart, man must not seek to mix together.

diverse kind. Josephus suggested as the reason for the prohibition of mixed breeding the fear that such unnatural union in the animal world might lead to moral perversion among human beings.

thyself: I am the LORD. 19. Ye shall keep my statutes. Thou shalt not let thy cattle gender with a diverse kind: thou shalt not sow thy field with two kinds of seed: neither shall there come upon thee a garment of two kinds of stuff mingled together. 20. And whosoever lieth carnally with a woman, that is a bondmaid, betrothed to an husband, and not at all redeemed, nor freedom given her; they shall be punished: they shall not be put to death, because she was not free. 21. And he shall bring his guilt offering unto the LORD, unto the door of the tent of meeting, even a ram for a guilt offering. 22. And the priest shall make atonement for him with the ram of the guilt offering before the LORD for his sin which he hath sinned:
and he shall be forgiven for his sin which he hath sinned.*iii 23. And when ye shall come into the land, and shall have planted all manner of trees for food, then ye shall count the fruit thereof as two kinds of seed. See Deut. XXII, 9.

mingled together. Heb. shaatnez. See Deut. XXII, 11, where the law is more explicitly stated: "mingled stuff, wool and linen." "Nature does not rejoice in the union of things that are not in their nature alike" (Josephus).

20. bondmaid. Here we have an example of "prohibited mixture in the sphere of moral relationship"—the union with a heathen bondmaid betrothed to a Hebrew slave. The offence is not as serious as in the case of a betrothed freewoman; nevertheless, the act is branded as immoral and one to be punished.

they shall be punished. lit. "there shall be a lashing," or corporal punishment. The Heb. בקרת means a lash made of ox-hide (Ibn Ezra).

עָרְלָתוֹ אֶת־פִּרְיוֹ שָׁלֹשׁ שָׁנִים יִהְיֶה לָכֶם עֲרֵלִים לֹא יֵאָכֵל׃
24 וּבַשָּׁנָה הָרְבִיעִת יִהְיֶה כָּל־פִּרְיוֹ קֹדֶשׁ הִלּוּלִים לַיהוָֹה׃
כה וּבַשָּׁנָה הַחֲמִישִׁת תֹּאכְלוּ אֶת־פִּרְיוֹ לְהוֹסִיף לָכֶם תְּבוּאָתוֹ
26 אֲנִי יְהוָֹה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם׃ לֹא תֹאכְלוּ עַל־הַדָּם לֹא תְנַחֲשׁוּ
27 וְלֹא תְעוֹנֵנוּ׃ לֹא תַקִּפוּ פְּאַת רֹאשְׁכֶם וְלֹא תַשְׁחִית אֵת
28 פְּאַת זְקָנֶךָ׃ וְשֶׂרֶט לָנֶפֶשׁ לֹא תִתְּנוּ בִּבְשַׂרְכֶם וּכְתֹבֶת

23. forbidden. This is a departure from the RV. The meaning of the Heb. is, you shall regard its fruit as defective. The fruit tree in its first three years is to be regarded as a male infant during his first eight days; i.e. as unconsecrated (Dillmann). In the first three years, the fruit was stunted in its growth and unfit as a first-fruit offering to God; and hence forbidden for human use.

25. that it may yield unto you. The Israelite would not be the loser by forgoing the fruits for the first four years. As a matter of fact, the trees become more productive if they are stripped of the blossoms in the early years.

26–31. Prohibition of Canaanite Customs

The context suggests that the allusion is to a heathenish rite of divination, well-known to the Israelites, and consequently not requiring explanation.

26. with the blood. "They killed a beast, received the blood in a vessel or pot, and ate of the flesh of that beast, whilst sitting round the blood. They imagined that in this manner, the spirits would come to partake of the blood which was their food; brotherhood and friendship would be established with the spirits; and the spirits would appear to them in dreams, inform them of coming events, and be favourable to them" (Maimonides). It is however taken by the Rabbis both in a literal sense ("do not eat flesh from an animal whose blood is yet in it," i.e. whose life has not yet departed), and as an ethical injunction ("the members of a Court whose decree of capital punishment has been carried out shall on that day abstain from all food").

forbidden: three years shall they be as forbidden unto you; it shall not be eaten. 24. But in the fourth year all the fruit thereof shall be holy, for giving praise unto the LORD. 25. And in the fifth year shall ye eat of the fruit thereof, that it may yield unto you the increase thereof: I am the LORD your God. 26. Ye shall not eat any thing with the blood: neither shall ye use enchantments, nor practise augury. 27. Ye shall not round the corners of your heads, neither shalt thou mar the corners of thy beard. 28. Ye shall not make any cuttings in your flesh for the dead, nor print any enchantments. Charms and incantations. Ancient life, whether in Egypt, Canaan or Mesopotamia, was crushed under an intolerable weight of enchantment, magic, and demonology. The Israelite was freed from the incubus of superstition by these prohibitions, which constitute one of the great negations of Judaism; cf. Num. XXIII, 23.

augury. Or, "divination" by observing times and seasons and declaring one day "lucky" and another "unlucky"—a common practice among heathens.

27. round the corners. In this and the following verse, various mourning customs connected with the heathen worship of the dead are forbidden, as unbecoming the dignity of God's people and incompatible with loyalty to a God of holiness.

28. cuttings . . . for the dead. See on Deut. XIV, 1. Eastern peoples, in their excessive demonstration of grief at a bereavement, often gashed and mutilated themselves. The shedding of blood was also believed to have a sacrificial value for the dead person. Even aside from the prohibition of this idolatrous practice, the Torah inculcates reverence for the human body, as the work of God.

print any marks. By means of writing that sinks into the flesh. What is here forbidden is the custom of tattooing some part of the body. Often this was a representation of the deity worshipped by the bearer of that mark.

29. profane not thy daughter. A prohibition for a father to hand over his daughter to a man without the previous rites of "sanctification"—i.e. without a legal marriage; as well as prohibition for a woman of her own free will to consort with a man without such legal marriage (Sifra). The use of the word profane is noteworthy. It presupposes the sacredness of womanhood; and it brands such an action as a profanation and a desecration of the sacred personality of a human being.

the land. i.e. its inhabitants, as in XVIII, 25.

fall into harlotry. Looking upon the "demand" for harlotry as a normal condition of things, and tolerating the consequent "supply" of human beings for such life of shame. The rendering is that of AJ, and a departure from RV.

32–37. ETHICAL INJUNCTIONS

32. rise up before the hoary head. "Hoary," white with age. The ethical sublimity of this exhortation is not diminished by the fact that parallels exist among other ancient peoples, and that in the Orient reverence for old age is or was the rule until the present day.

honour the face of the old man. "Honour the person of an old man" (Moffatt). The Rabbis enlarged the connotation of the word 'old' and made it include anyone who had acquired wisdom (זקן, זה שקנה חכמה). But even where there is no book-learning, there may be the matured wisdom of experience. A famous rabbi would stand up even before an aged heathen peasant, saying, "What storms of fortune has this old man weathered in his life-time."

thou shalt fear. Cf. on v. 14. Here, too, the inner motives of a man are involved, not only his outward acts.

33. a stranger. The duty of loving the stranger is stressed thirty-six times in Scripture and is placed on the same level as the duty of kindness to, and protection of, the widow or the orphan. "The alien was to be protected, although he was not a member of one's family, clan, religious community, or people; simply because he was a human being. In the alien, therefore, man discovered the idea of humanity" (Hermann Cohen). See the comments on Exod. XXII, 20.

not do him wrong. Heb. לא תונו. Not only oppression by unrighteous deeds; such as, taking advantage of his ignorance to overreach him. The Rabbis take the word in sense of "offend," and they emphasise the peculiar heinousness of wounding the alien's feelings by insulting speech (אונאת דברים). Few modern peoples, alas, can truthfully be said to have learned this ethical precept.

34, as the homeborn. There was to be one law only, the same for home-born and alien alike (xxiv, 22; Num. xv, 16); see Exodus, p. 141. The stranger is to share in the corners of the field, the forgotten sheaf, and every form of poor relief. The tremendous seriousness with which justice to the stranger is inculcated is seen from the fact that, among the covenant admonitions at Mount Ebal, we read "Cursed is the man that perverted the justice of the stranger" (Deut. xxvii, 19). Israel was not permitted to hate even the Egyptian, the people that enslaved him. It was to transform those memories of bitter oppression into feelings of compassion to all the friendless and downtrodden. In other ancient codes, the stranger was rightless. Thus, the Romans had originally one word, hostis, for both stranger and enemy. According to Germanic Law the stranger was "rechtsunfähig." See on xxiv, 22.

thou shalt love him as thyself. Do to him what you would wish others to do unto you, if you were a stranger in a strange land. See Additional Note C, "Thou Shalt Love Thy Neighbour As Thyself," p. 220.

35. in judgement. This demand for "justice" in commercial transactions is not an unnecessary repetition of the same phrase in v. 15. God abhors unrighteousness, i.e. dishonesty, in business. "For all that do such things, are an abomination unto the LORD" (Deut. XXV, 16).

It may, however, be that the second half of the verse should be connected with what follows, and that together they form the subscription to the chapter.

37. I am the LORD. Thus this remarkable series of precepts ends on the exalted note with which it opened; v. 2.

Chapter xx. Penalties for Unlawful Marriages, Molech Worship and Necromancy

This chapter is a natural pendant to xviii and xix, and enumerates the acts that would debase Israel's life, and altogether destroy its ideal of Holiness. In an organised society, it is essential to institute penalties for the violation of enactments that are vital to its existence. Ruthless measures were indispensable against the abominable vices and hideous practices which Israel was in danger of transplanting into its own life from its Canaanite and Egyptian neighbours. Flaming jealousy for Israel's mission of Holiness, and gigantic energy on the part of its ethical guides and religious teachers, could alone have overcome the bestialities of heathendom.

Unsparing condemnation of the crimes did not, however, invariably lead to the unsparing punishment of everyone suspected of them. In Jewish Law, the presumption of innocence is given to the accused, and capital punishments require two eye-witnesses to the premeditated commission of the crime. This alone rendered actual conviction in such cases a rare thing.

1–5. Penalties for Molech Worship

2. strangers. Such horrors should not be permitted even to resident strangers on any false idea of toleration, or on the ground that it was no concern of the community what " aliens " did.

CHAPTER XX

20 1. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2. Moreover, thou shalt say to the children of Israel, Whosoever he be of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn in Israel, that giveth of his seed unto Molech; he shall surely be put to death: the people of the land shall stone him with stones. 3. I also will set my face against that man, and will cut him off from among his people; because he hath given of his seed unto Molech, to defile my sanctuary, and to profane my holy name. 4. And if the people of the land do any ways hide their eyes from that man, when he giveth of his seed unto Molech, and put him not to stone him. Stoning goes back to hoary Semitic antiquity, and was prescribed for crimes that demanded punishments with a deterrent effect upon the people. In later ages, the original method was modified to render it more humane. The Talmud tells that, in capital offences, delinquents were drugged in order to deaden the senses before execution.

3. set my face. See XVII, 10.

4. hide their eyes. i.e. overlook it. For such an offence to be connived at and condoned by the authorities and nation is evidence of both religious demoralisation and social decay. It furthermore proves that they too are on the threshold of succumbing to Molech worship (Strack).

5. his family. i.e. his sympathisers or accomplices. Ibn Ezra quotes an explanation which refers "his family" to am ha-aretz in the preceding verse. They hide their eyes from his crime because they are of his family. Targum Jonathan renders this verse: "And I shall choose My own time to attend to that man and to the members of the family who take him under their protection, and shall chasten them with painful trials; but the man himself I shall destroy."

go astray after him, to go astray after Molech. This rendering is a departure from the RV; also in v. 6.

6. familiar spirits. See on XIX, 31. The punishment is left in the hands of God; but as for the necromancer himself, the penalty is death by stoning (v. 27 below), since to cause others to sin is worse than sinning. Here, too, ruthlessness—social surgery—was required, if true and ethical religion was not to perish from the earth. "Not to realise the vital necessity of these laws concerning witchcraft and the vital duty of its extirpation, is to fall a victim to the superstition that witchcraft was mere harmless make-believe that did not call for any drastic punishment. At the bottom of this sceptical attitude towards the laws of witchcraft is indifference towards the unique value of monotheism. In a conflict of this nature—witchcraft versus monotheism—there can be no hesitancy or mutual tolerance of opposite points of view. It is a question of To be or not to be for the ethical life" (Hermann Cohen).

And the soul that turneth unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto the wizards, to go astray after them, I will even set my face against that soul, and will cut him off from among his people. 7. Sanctify yourselves therefore, and be ye holy: for I am the LORD your God. *vi(vii) 8. And ye shall keep my statutes, and do them: I am the LORD which sanctify you. 9. 7–21. LAWS BEARING ON IMMORALITY

7. sanctify yourselves. This and the following verses are introductory to the laws which follow. The first section deals with idolatry and heathenish superstition. The motive that should guide the life of the Israelite and restrain him from wrong actions is solemnly repeated; cf. XI, 44.

8. sanctify you. By electing you from all the nations to be My people, and by giving you laws and institutions designed to lead to a holy life. Before the performance of any religious precept, the Israelite repeats the Blessing: "Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the universe, who hast sanctified us by thy commandments and hast commanded us . . ."

9. curseth. See Exod. XXI, 15, 17; Prov. XX, 20 ("Whoso curseth his father or his mother, his lamp shall be put out in the blackest darkness"). It was a capital offence; but the Rabbis, though they shared the horror with which the moral hideousness of such an action was viewed, endeavoured in various ways to render the carrying out of the penalty as rare as possible.

10. committeth adultery. The repetition of the phrase and the substitution of neighbour's wife for another man's wife stresses the heinousness of the offence. The consent of the husband is quite immaterial. Marriage is not merely a "contract"; it is a consecration, and adultery is far more than merely an offence against one of the parties to a contract. It is an offence against the Divine Command proclaimed at Sinai, and constitutes the annihilation of holiness in marriage (Z. Frankel).

he shall bear his iniquity. Ibn Ezra understands the second half of the verse to refer to the case where the sister was seduced against her will. He alone is then punished. According to Hoffmann, the repetition of the phrase is to indicate that his is a double turpitude, as it is a brother's part to defend his sister's honour.

19. thy mother's sister. See XVIII, 12f.

22–26. Exhortation

From here to the end of the Chapter is the concluding exhortation of the Law of Holiness (XVII–XX), or possibly be cut off in the sight of the children of their people:

he hath uncovered his sister's nakedness; he shall bear his iniquity. 18. And if a man shall lie with a woman having her sickness, and shall uncover her nakedness; he hath made naked her fountain; and she hath uncovered the fountain of her blood: and both of them shall be cut off from among their people. 19. And thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy mother's sister, nor of thy father's sister: for he hath made naked his near kin: they shall bear their iniquity.*vii 20. And if a man shall lie with his uncle's wife, he hath uncovered his uncle's nakedness: they shall bear their sin; they shall die childless. 21. And if a man shall take his brother's wife, it is impurity: he hath uncovered
his brother's nakedness; they shall be childless.

22. Ye shall therefore keep all my statutes, and all my judgements, and do them: that the land, whither I bring you to dwell therein, vomit you not out. 23. And ye shall not walk in the customs of the nation, which I cast out before you: for they did all these things, and therefore I abhorred them.

24. separated. Better, set you apart; by means of distinctive laws and precepts.

25. clean . . . unclean. The inclusion of this verse is significant. It is a reminder, still required by the Jewish people, that the ideal of holiness for the Israelite consists in more than moral purity. The dietary laws have likewise their essential place in the scheme of the Torah, and form a necessary aid in the pursuit of the goal set by God.

26. ye shall be holy. Sums up the whole end and aim of the preceding laws. The people whom a holy God has chosen for His own must, like Him, be holy.

Note C

THOU SHALT LOVE THY NEIGHBOUR AS THYSELF

Leviticus xix, 18

The "Golden Rule" in Judaism. The world at large is unaware of the fact that this comprehensive maxim of morality—the golden rule of human conduct—was first taught by Judaism. No less a thinker than John Stuart Mill expressed his surprise that it came from the Pentateuch. Not only is it Jewish in origin, but, long before the rise of Christianity, Israel's religious teachers quoted Leviticus xix, 18 either verbally or in paraphrase, as expressing the essence of the moral life. Thus, Ben Sira says, "Honour thy neighbour as thyself." In the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs we read: "A man should not do to his neighbour what a man does not desire for himself." Tobit admonishes his son in the words, "What is displeasing to thyself, that do not unto any other." Philo and Josephus have sayings similar to the above. As to the Rabbis, there is the well-known story of Hillel and the heathen scoffer who asked Hillel to condense for him the whole Law in briefest possible form. Hillel's answer is, "Whatever is hateful unto thee, do it not unto thy fellow: this is the whole Torah; the rest is explanation." Targum Jonathan adds to its translation of Lev. xix, 18 a paraphrase in words almost identical with those of Hillel. In the generation after the Destruction of the Temple, Rabbi Akiba declares "'Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself' is a fundamental rule in the Torah." His contemporary Ben Azzai agrees that this law of love is such a fundamental rule, provided it is read in conjunction with Gen. v, 1 ("This is the book of the generations of man. In the day that God created man, in the likeness of God made He him"); for this latter verse teaches reverence for the Divine image in man, and proclaims the vital truth of the unity of mankind, and the consequent doctrine of the brotherhood of man. All men are created in the Divine image, says Ben Azzai; and, therefore, all are our fellowmen and entitled to human love.

And the command of Lev. xix, 18 applies to classes and nations as well as to individuals. The Prophets in their day, on the one hand, arraigned the rich for their oppression of the poor; and, on the other hand, pilloried the nations that were guilty of inhumanity and breach of faith towards one another. Their sublime conception of international morality has found wonderful expression in the words of Judah the Pious, a medieval Jewish mystic, who said: "On the Judgment Day, the Holy One, blessed be He, will call the nations to account for every violation of the command 'Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself' of which they have been guilty in their dealings with one another."

Modernist Depreciation of Lev. XIX, 18, 34. Though the Founder of Christianity quotes "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" as the old Biblical command of recognised central importance, many Christian theologians maintain that the Heb. word for "neighbour" (rea) in this verse, refers only to the fellow-Israelite. Its morality therefore is only tribal. But the translation of the Heb. word rea by "fellow-Israelite" is incorrect. One need not be a Hebrew scholar to convince oneself of the fact that rea means neighbour of whatever race or creed. Thus in Exodus XI, 2—"Let them ask every man of his neighbour and every woman of her neighbour, jewels of silver, etc."—the Heb. word for neighbour cannot possibly mean "fellow-Israelite," but distinctly refers to the Egyptians. As in all the moral precepts of Scripture, the word neighbour in Lev. XIX, 18, is equivalent to "fellowman," and it includes in its range every human being by virtue of his humanity.

In order to prevent any possible misunderstanding, the command of love of neighbour is in v. 34 of this same nineteenth chapter of Leviticus extended to include the homeless alien.

> "The stranger (ger) that sojourneth with you shall be unto you as the homeborn among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself; for ye were strangers (gerim) in the land of Egypt."

But even this marvellous law, that is absolutely without parallel in any ancient or modern code of civil law, is cavilled at by modernist theologians and decried as "narrow." The Heb. word ger, they hold, denotes only an alien who had become a fellow-worshipper of the God of Israel. This is contrary to fact. The Israelites in Egypt are in this very verse spoken of as gerim: but they did not as a body adopt the worship of Isis or Apis; they were hated, suspected and enslaved "strangers." It is evident, therefore, that Lev. XIX, 34 likewise refers to the friendless and homeless foreigner. He was throughout antiquity the victim of injustice and oppression, as were the Israelites in Egypt; in Israel alone he was not obliged to struggle for recognition as a human being. (See further on love of alien and of enemy, Exodus, p. 259 and 265).

The "Negative" Golden Rule. There is one other argument that is resorted to in order to prove that the true Golden Rule was first promulgated by Christianity. The greatest stress is laid on the fact that both Tobit and Hillel paraphrase Lev. XIX, 18 in a negative way—"Whatever is hateful unto thee, do it not unto thy fellow." This is contrasted, and unfavourably so, with the positive paraphrase in the New Testament, "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do ye unto them." It is claimed that the former is only negative morality; and that in its positive restatement alone, as formulated in the Gospels, is the Rule a great imperative of moral enthusiasm.

This argument is now seen to be illusory. "The delicate difference which has been thought to exist between the negative and positive form is due to modern reflection on the subject, and was quite unapparent to the men of antiquity (G. Kittel). In the oldest Christian literature the two forms are recorded indiscriminately; and the negative Golden Rule occurs in the Western texts of Acts XV, 20, Romans XIII, 10, the Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, and the Apostolical Constitutions. And positive forms of the Rule have had a place in Judaism. Thus Hillel says, "Love thy fellow-creatures"; and Eleazar ben Arach, "Let the honour of thy neighbour be as dear to thee as thine own." But the mere fact that Lev. XIX, 18 is positive, itself renders all talk of a negative Jewish morality in connection with the Golden Rule fatuous.

It is time that the attempt to rob Judaism of its title to having given the Golden Rule to humanity, as well as the dispute as to the superiority of the positive over the negative form came to an end.

As Thyself. "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." Regard for self has its legitimate place in the life of man. Unlimited self-surrender is impossible; and a sound morality takes account of our own interests equally with those of others. In the luminous words of Hillel: "If I am not for myself, who will be for me? And if I am only for myself, what am I?" The Sifra, the oldest Rabbinic commentary on Leviticus, records the following: "Two men are in the desert with a little water in possession of one of them. If the one drinks it, he will reach civilisation; but if the two of them share it, both will die. Ben Petura said, Let the two of them drink, though both will die. Rabbi Akiba held that, in such a case, your own life has precedence over the life of your fellow-man." Rabbi Akiba could not agree that two should perish where death demands but one as its toll. And, indeed, if the Torah had meant that a man must love his neighbour to the extent of sacrificing his life for him in all circumstances, it would have said: "Thou shalt love thy neighbour more than thyself."

There are those, both in ancient and in modern times, who do not agree with Rabbi Akiba, and who deem the view of Ben Petura the more altruistic, the more heroic. Such would have preferred that the words as thyself had not occurred in the Golden Rule. Others again preach the annihilation of self, or at any rate its total submergence, as the basic principle of human conduct. New formulations of the whole duty of man have in consequence been proposed by various thinkers. We need examine but one of these formulations—Live for others. Were such a rule seriously translated into practice, it would lead to absurdity. For Live for others necessarily entails that others live for you. You are to attend to everybody else's concerns, and everybody else is to attend to your concerns—except yourself. A moment's examination of this or any other proposed substitute for "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" only brings out the more clearly the fundamental sanity of Judaism.

REGULATIONS CONCERNING PRIESTS AND SANCTUARY

1–9. The Ordinary Priest

Whatever comes near, or is presented, to God must be perfect of its kind. Priests, therefore, must be free from physical defects or ceremonial impurity (xxi), and sacrifices must be without blemish (xxii).

The ideal of holiness, as expounded in the previous chapters, was intended for the whole Community of Israel. But since the priests were closely and constantly associated with the ritual of the Sanctuary, special laws were instituted for them and a higher standard was demanded.

1. unto the priests. To those performing sacerdotal functions, and not to such a one as had been rendered unfit for the priesthood on account of his father having contracted a marriage forbidden to a priest (see v. 7). The daughters of priestly families were not subject to these laws.

defile himself for the dead. Contact with the dead defiles (Num. xix) and, for the time being, renders a priest unfit to perform his duties. The law only held good when the dead person was "among his people"; i.e. if there were others who were not priests able and willing to attend to

Chapter XXI

21 1. And the Lord said unto Moses, Speak unto the priests the sons of Aaron, and say unto them, There shall none defile himself for the dead among his people; 2. except for his kin, that is near unto him, for his mother, and for his father, and for his son, and for his daughter, and for his brother; 3. and for his sister a virgin,
that is near unto him, which hath had no husband, for her may he defile himself. 4. He shall not the burial (Sifra). In the case of an unattended dead body of a friendless man (מת מצוה), everyone, even a High Priest or a Nazirite, had to busy himself with the last rites.

2. except for his kin. A concession to the natural feelings of the priest as man. The word for 'kin' denotes the closest possible bond of relationship. The wife is not mentioned because, as throughout the Torah, man and wife are regarded as "one flesh" (Gen. II, 24), and is here understood of itself. The mother is named before the father, because there is usually a deeper attachment between her and the son (see on XIX, 3), and the desire to be with her at the last would be more intense.

3. sister . . near unto him. The Rabbis explain this to include a sister who is betrothed. Although betrothal was regarded almost as close a bond as marriage (Deut. XXII 23f), the priest may attend to the body in the event of her death. On her marriage, she became part of her husband; and in the same way that a priest was not allowed to defile himself for his brother-in-law, he was similarly forbidden to do so for his brother-in-law's wife, though she be his sister.

4. being a chief man. The translation is based on Onkelos. The reason why the priest is subjected to these special laws is that he is "a chief man among his people": his is an honour which carried with it peculiar obligations. Instead of "chief man," Sifra translates "as a husband" (so also RV Margin) and takes it to mean that he is forbidden to attend to his dead wife, if she belonged to any of the classes named in v. 7.

to profane himself. To render himself unfit for the service of the Sanctuary.

5. baldness . . . cuttings. See on x, 6f and xix, 27f.

6. they shall be holy. The motive for the special laws of the priests is the same as the motive for the laws of the Community (xx, 26). The sole reason why the restrictions on the priests were heavier was because they had the additional privilege of offering the sacrifices to God.

the bread of their God. See on iii, 11.

7. profane. Or, "polluted" (RV Margin), "dishonoured" (Driver). The Rabbis understand it as "profaned"—the daughter of a forbidden marriage contracted by a priest, or a woman who had already entered into a marriage forbidden to a priest (i.e. a divorced woman whose previous husband, a priest, ought not to have married her).

they shave off the corner of their beard, nor neither shall they take a woman put away from widow among the women whom a priest may not marry; see on Ezek. XLIV, 22, p. 410.

8. thou shalt sanctify. The Community as a body is addressed. The Israelites are to consider the priests as consecrated to God, and pay them the honour which is due to them. It is from this verse that the custom arose to give the Kohen precedence in such matters as the Reading of the Law.

9. burnt with fire. The Talmud maintains that the penalty of burning (see on XX, 14) was inflicted only if the priest's daughter became unchaste when betrothed or married—a crime which was in all cases considered a capital offence.

die therein. The Rabbis explain this as "death by the hand of Heaven."

10-16. No layman was to eat a sanctified thing; with a list of those who were an exception to that rule.

10. stranger. Not a priest; a layman.

sojourner. "Tenant" (AJ), one who dwells with the priest, or is his guest. The Rabbis apply the term sojourner to the Hebrew slave who refused his freedom in the seventh year and remained in service with his master (Exod. XXI, 2).

hired servant. As distinct from a non-Israelite slave, who was considered a member of the household (see next v.). The Torah does not mention that the priest's wife may eat of the portion, as husband and wife were deemed one person; see note on XXI, 2.

11. the purchase of his money. The non-Israelite slave purchased by a priest became part of the family, and was allowed to share in the sacrificial portion.

12. priest's daughter. On marrying a layman, she no longer belonged to the priestly family (see on XXI. 3).

9. They shall therefore keep my charge, lest they bear sin for it, and die therein, if they profane
it: I am the LORD which sanctify them. 10.
There shall no stranger eat of the holy thing: a sojourner of the priest's, or an hired servant, shall not eat of the holy thing. 11. But if a priest buy any soul, the purchase of his money, he shall eat of it; and such as are born in his house, they shall eat of his bread. 12. And if a priest's daughter be married unto a stranger, she shall not eat of the heave offering of the holy things. 13. But if a priest's daughter be a widow, or divorced, and have no child, and is returned unto her father's house, as in her youth,
she shall eat of her father's bread: but there shall no stranger eat thereof. 14. And if a man eat of the holy thing unwittingly, then he shall put the fifth part thereof unto it, and shall give unto the priest the holy thing. 15. And they shall not profane the holy things of the children of Israel, which they offer unto the LORD; 16.

13. have no child. If there is issue of the marriage, she is still regarded as attached to her husband's family. If, however, the issue of the marriage died, she regained her former status as a priest's daughter.

14. unwittingly. Cf. chap. v, 14-16, where there are similar directions in the case of one unintentionally making use af gifts belonging to the Sanctuary.

the holy thing. i.e. its equivalent.

15. they shall not profane. The subject is the priests, and the profanation is the admission of unqualified persons to partake of the sacred dues (Rashi).

17–25. Quality of Offerings

After laws concerning the purity of the priesthood and the holiness of the sacrifices, there follow regulations concerning the faultlessness of the offerings. Jewish tradition demands of the Israelite such faultlessness in the case of any gift or offering set apart for sacred purposes, whether in the sphere of religion or of charity.

20. shall ye not offer. The Rabbis extended the scope of this law and insisted that the oil, wine, flour and wood offered and used in the Temple must likewise be of the best quality. Even the wood to be burnt on the Altar was to be carefully selected so as to contain no worm-eaten pieces.

21. to accomplish a vow. Or, "in fulfilment of a vow clearly uttered" (AJ); see on VII, 16.

for a burnt offering; 19. that ye may be accepted, ye shall offer a male without blemish, of the beeves, of the sheep, or of the goats. 20. But whatsoever hath a blemish, that shall ye not offer: for it shall not be acceptable for you. 21. And whosoever offereth a sacrifice of peace offerings unto the LORD to accomplish a vow, or for a freewill offering, of the herd or of the flock, it shall be perfect to be accepted; there shall be no blemish therein. 22. Blind, or broken, or maimed, or having a wen, or scurvy, or scabbed, ye shall not offer these unto the LORD, nor make an offering by fire of them upon the altar unto the LORD.

24. ye do thus. The Heb. can bear two interpretations. It can mean, " Ye shall not offer such mutilated animals " ; or it may be taken, according to the Rabbis, as a general prohibition of emasculation in men and animals.

25. foreigner. Blemished animals are unacceptable even from a non-Israelite who " comes out of a far country for Thy name's sake " (I. Kings VIII, 41). The priest was not to think that he need not be so strict in such a case.

There is no difference in this case between the pain of man and the pain of other living beings, since the love and the tenderness of the mother for her young ones is not produced by reasoning but by feeling, and this faculty exists not only in man but in most living things" (Maimonides); cf. the similar prohibition of the mother-bird being taken with her young (Deut. XXII, 6f).

CHILLUL HASHEM AND KIDDUSH HASHEM

32. ye shall not . . . Israel. This verse has been called "Israel's Bible in little" (Jellinek). It contains the solemn warning against the Profanation of the Divine Name (Chillul Hashem), and the positive injunction to every Israelite to hallow the Name of God (Kiddush Hashem) by his life and, if need be, by his death. Although spoken in reference to the priests as the appointed guardians of the Sanctuary, this commandment, both in its positive and negative forms, was early applied to the whole of Israel.

ye shall not profane my holy name. Be ye exceedingly guarded in your actions, say the Rabbis, so that ye do nothing that tarnishes the honour of Judaism or of the Jew. Especially do they warn against any misdeed towards a non-Jew as an unpardonable sin, because it gives a false impression of the moral standard of Judaism. The Jew should remember that the glory of God is, as it were, entrusted to his care; and that every Israelite holds the honour of his Faith and of his entire People in his hands. A single Jew's offence can bring shame on the whole House of Israel. This has been the fate of Israel in all the ages; and nothing, it seems, will ever break the world of its habit of putting down the crimes, vices or failings of a Jew, no matter how estranged from his people or his people's Faith he may be, to his Jewishness; and of fathering them upon the entire Jewish race. The Rabbis say: "Wild beasts visit and afflict the world because of the profanation of the Divine Name" (Ethics of the Fathers, v, 11). And, indeed, wherever Jews are guilty of conduct unworthy of their Faith, there the wild beast in man—blind prejudice and causeless hatred—is unchained against Israel. No student of Jewish history will question the truth of this judgment. The Rabbis, in a striking apologue, picture a boat at sea, full of men. One of them begins to bore a hole in the bottom of the boat and, on being remonstrated with, and do them: I am the LORD. 32. And ye shall not profane my holy name; but I will be hallowed

among the children of Israel: I am the LORD which hallow you, 33. that brought you out of the land of Egypt, to be your God: I am the urges that he is only boring under his own seat. "Yes," say his comrades, "but when the sea rushes in we shall be drowned with you." So it is with Israel. Its weal or its woe is in the hands of every one of its children.

I will be hallowed. Not to commit Chillul Hashem is only a negative virtue. Far more is required of the Israelite. He is bidden so to live as to shed lustre on the Divine Name and the Torah by his deeds and influence. Rabbi Simon ben Shetach one day commissioned his disciples to buy him a camel from an Arab. When they brought him the animal, they gleefully announced that they had found a precious stone in its collar. "Did the seller know of this gem?" asked the Master. On being answered in the negative, he called out angrily, "Do you think me a barbarian that I should take advantage of the letter of the law by which the gem is mine together with the camel? Return the gem to the Arab immediately." When the heathen received it back he exclaimed: "Blessed be the God of Simon ben Shetach! Blessed be the God of Israel!"

The highest form of hallowing God is martyrdom; and Jewish Law demands of every Israelite to surrender his life, rather than by public apostasy desecrate the Name of God (Shulchan Aruch, Yore Deah, CLVII). When during the war of annihilation which the Emperor Hadrian waged against Judaism, the readiness for martyrdom on the part of young and old began to imperil the existence of the Jewish nation, the Rabbis decreed that only with regard to three fundamental laws—idolatry, incest and murder—should death be prefered to transgression. See also Genesis, p. 182, on the Akedah and the ideal of martyrdom in Jewish history. "The Jewish martyrs of olden days, who bore witness to their God at the stake, are described as having yielded up their lives for the 'sanctification of the Divine Name.' Such testimony is within the power, and constitutes the duty, of the Jew in these times also. If he is not called upon to die for the sanctification of the Name, he has at least to live for it. His life must give glory to God, vindicate his God-given religion" (M. Joseph).

among the children of Israel. If it is a sacred duty to hallow the Name of God and Israel before the nations, it is even a more sacred duty to do so "among the children of Israel." Moses could make Pharaoh fear God; the dukes of Edom, the mighty men of Moab and the peoples of Canaan trembled before him; but he was far from uniformly successful in making his own people do so. Therefore he was to see the promised Land afar off, but he was not to enter it. "Get thee up unto Mount Nebo, and die in the mount as Aaron thy brother died on Mount Hor, because ye sanctified me not in the midst of the children of Israel" (Deut. XXXII, 49-52). It is important to make non-Jews respect Judaism, but even more so to make Jews respect Judaism.

CHAPTER XXIII

THE HOLY DAYS

This chapter gives a comprehensive description of the sacred seasons in the Jewish year. There is no mention of

Chapter XXIII

23 1. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
2. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, The set feasts of the Lord, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, even these are my set feasts. 3. Six days shall work be done: but on the seventh day is a sabbath of solemn rest, an holy convocation; ye shall do no manner of work: it is a sabbath unto the Lord in all your dwellings.
4. These are the set feasts of the Lord, even holy convocations, which ye shall proclaim in the New Moon, because it was not necessarily a day of cessation from work and was not ranked as one of the "holy convocations." The sacrifices for each Festival are given in Num. xxviii.

2. set feasts. Or, "appointed (or fixed) seasons."

holy convocations. An assembly "convoked," or called together, for worship at the Sanctuary. The calling together was done by means of sounding two silver trumpets (Num. x, 1-10). Although it was only on the three Pilgrimage Festivals that the Israelites were to appear before the Lord at the Sanctuary, many would no doubt also come for the Days of Memorial and Atonement.

3. sabbath of solemn rest. This verse is parenthetic, as the Sabbath is later (v. 38) distinctly excluded from the category of holy convocations. The purpose of the reference to the Sabbath in this connection is, according to the Rabbis, to emphasise the fact that the seventh day of the week must always be "a sabbath of solemn rest"—even when it coincides with a Festival, on which day, otherwise, only manual labour is prohibited, but not such as is necessary for the preparation of meals.

The interpretation of this phrase was the subject of heated controversy in early Rabbinic times between the Pharisees and Sadducees. The latter took the word 'sabbath' in its usual sense, and maintained that the Omer was to be brought on the morrow of the first Saturday in Passover. The Pharisees argued that "sabbath" (השבת) here means, "the day of cessation from work"; and the context shows that the Feast of Unleavened Bread is intended: therefore, the Omer was to be brought on the 16th of Nisan. This is supported by the Septuagint which renders "on the morrow of the first day," and by Josephus. "The offerings of the sheaf took place on the 16th, the first busy work-day of the harvest, in relation to which the preceding day might well be called a Sabbath or rest-day, though not all labour was prohibited. This is alone compatible with the context, and is free from the objections to which all the other opinions are open" (Kalisch).

15–21. Feast of Weeks—Shavuos

One of the three agricultural festivals, the feast of the first harvest יום הבכורים. Jewish tradition, however, connects it with the Covenant on Mount Sinai, and speaks of the festival as זמן מתן תורתנו "the Season of Giving of our Torah." The Israelites arrived at Sinai on the New Moon. On the second of the month, Moses ascended the mountain; on the third, he received the people's reply; on the fourth, he made the second ascent and was commanded to institute three days of preparation, at the conclusion of which the Revelation took place. Hence its association with the Feast of Weeks, which became the Festival of Revelation.

15. and ye shall count. The paragraph dealing with the Feast of Weeks has no introductory formula, "The Lord spake unto Moses," such as we find in connection with the other Festivals, because it is conceived as the complement of the Passover, and not something independent of it. Its name in Talmudic literature is not Shavuos, but almost invariably עצרת, "the concluding festival" to Passover. "We count the days that pass since the preceding Festival, just as one who expects his most intimate friend on a certain day, counts the days and even the hours. This is the reason why we count the days that pass since the offering of the Omer, between the anniversary of our departure from Egypt and the anniversary of the Lawgiving. The latter was the aim and object of the exodus from Egypt" (Maimonides). In other words, the Deliverance from bondage was not an end in itself: it was the prelude to Sinai (Exod. III, 12). Liberty without law is a doubtful boon, whether to men or nations.

unto you. From this addition, the Rabbis deduce that each Israelite had the duty of counting for himself; hence the "counting of the days of the Omer" even after the Omer itself was no longer brought to the Temple. The season between Passover and Shavuos (or Pentecost, which in Greek means "the fiftieth day" after the first day of Passover) is known as Sephirah, Period of Counting. It is a period of semi-mourning, because repeatedly dire calamities befell the Jewish people at this time.

day of rest. This is a departure from the RV which translates "sabbath"; see on v. 11.

seven sabbaths. Better, seven weeks. It is evident that here and in xxv, 8, the Heb. shabbath signifies "week." Hence the most common name for the Festival, חג השבועות, the Feast of Weeks; Deut. xvi, 10.

16. seventh week. Instead of, "seventh sabbath" (RV).

new meal offering. The cereal offering of the produce of the new wheat harvest; see next v.

"With the destruction of the Second Temple, the agricultural aspect of the Festival receded, and Shavuos became primarily the Feast of Revelation. An echo of nature, however, still lingers in the present custom of adorning the Synagogue with flowers" (H. M. Adler).

17. your habitations. The Rabbis explain this as meaning that the corn must have grown in the Holy Land.

morrow after the day of rest, from the day that ye brought the sheaf of the wave offering; seven sabbaths shall there be complete: 16. even unto the morrow after the seventh week shall ye number fifty days: and ye shall offer a new meal offering unto the LORD. 17. Ye shall bring out of your habitations two wave loaves of two tenth parts of an ephah: they shall be of fine
flour, they shall be baken with leaven, for firstfruits unto the LORD. 18. And ye shall present with the bread seven lambs without blemish of the first year, and one young bullock, and two rams:
they shall be a burnt offering unto the LORD,
with their meal offering, and their drink offerings,
even an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD. 19. And ye shall offer one he-goat for a sin offering, and two he-lambs of the first year for a sacrifice of peace offerings. 20. And the priest shall wave them with the bread of the firstfruits for a wave offering before the LORD, with the two lambs: they shall be holy to the LORD for the priest. 21. And ye shall make proclamation on the selfsame day; there shall baken with leaven. The loaves were made to represent the common food of the people, and symbolically mark their gratitude to the Provider of their sustenance. They were not offered upon the Altar (II, 11), but only "waved"; they belonged to the priest.

19. ye shall offer. These offerings are additional to those mentioned in Num. XXVIII, 27.

20. to the LORD for the priest. i.e. they are devoted to God by being eaten by the priest; cf. Num. V, 8, for a similar usage.

22. when ye reap. A repetition of XIX, 9f. A significant reminder to the Israelite that his thankfulness to God for the wheat-harvest was to be demonstrated by more than an offering on the Altar. If he failed to share God's bounty with the poor, his observance of the Festival would be unacceptable.

24–25. Day of Memorial—Rosh Hashanah

As the seventh day in the week was a holy day, so the seventh month was the holy month in the year. Each New Moon was made the occasion for additional offerings (Num. XXVIII, 11f). It is, therefore, not surprising that the New Moon of the seventh month should be a Festival of special solemnity. In later times, it was known as Rosh Hashanah, New Year's Day. But unlike the New Year celebrations of many ancient and modern nations, the Jewish New Year is not a time of revelry, but an occasion of the deepest religious import.

24. a memorial. In Num. XXIX, 1, the occasion is called "a day of blowing the horn," i.e. Shofar, the ram's horn; Josh. VI, 4. This act must be differentiated from the sounding of the "trumpet" (not the Shofar) which took place while the offerings were brought on all the Festivals and New Moons (Num. X, 10). The blowing of the Shofar had consequently quite a different significance, and was more awe-inspiring (see Amos III, 6) than the blowing of the silver trumpets, which generally was a joyous sound. The sound of Shofar consisting, as handed down by Tradition, of three distinctive Shofar-notes—tekiah, shevarim, teruah—has been looked upon from times immemorial as a call to contrition and penitence, as a reminder of the Shofar-sound of Sinai; and the Day of Memorial, the beginning of the Ten Days of Repentance (עשרת ימי תשובה) which culminate in the Day of Atonement, as a time of self-examination and humble petition for forgiveness. "The Scriptural injunction of the Shofar for the New Year's Day has a profound meaning. It says: Awake, ye sleepers, and ponder over your deeds; remember your Creator and go back to Him in penitence. Be not of those who miss realities in their pursuit of shadows and waste their years in seeking after vain things which cannot profit or deliver. Look well to your souls and consider your acts; forsake each of you his evil ways and thoughts, and return to God so that He may have mercy upon you" (Maimonides).

26–32. Day of Atonement

On the subject of this the most solemn day in the Jewish year, see the commentary on xvi, 29–34. No other nation, ancient or modern, has an institution approaching the Day of Atonement in religious depth—" a day of purification and of turning from sins, for which forgiveness is granted through the grace of the merciful God, who holds penitence in as high an esteem as guiltlessness " (Philo).

27. day of atonement. Heb. yom kippurim. lit. " Day of Atonements." The name of this most sacred of Festivals is in the plural, " because it represents two streams of love. As soon as the desire for reconciliation has awakened in the sinner's soul, and wings its way Heavenward, God's grace comes down to meet it, calming his breast with the assurance of Divine pardon and forgiveness " (Zohar).

afflict your souls. See on xvi, 29; this Day, set aside for penitence and moral regeneration, is the only one for which the Torah prescribes fasting—which is the intensest form of devotion and contrition. " On that Day," the Rabbis state, " the Israelites resemble the angels, without human wants, without sins, and linked together in love and peace." It is the only day of the year—they add—on which the accuser Satan is silenced before the Throne of Glory, and even becomes the defender of Israel. Confession of sin is the most essential and characteristic element in the services of the Day of Atonement; " every one entreating pardon for his sins and hoping for God's mercy, not because of his own merits but through the compassionate nature of that Being

26. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

convocation unto you, and ye shall afflict your souls; and ye shall offer an offering made by manner of work in that same day: for it is a day of atonement, to make atonement for you before the LORD your God. 29. For whatsoever soul it be that shall not be afflicted in that same day, he shall be cut off from his people. 30. And whatsoever soul it be that doeth any manner of work in that same day, that soul will I destroy from among his people. 31. Ye shall do no

an offering. See Num. XXIX, 7f.

28. no manner of work. The phrase is not qualified by the addition of the word 'servile.' With regard to work, the Day of Atonement is of the same strictness as the Sabbath (Exod. XX, 10), with similar exceptions where life might be endangered.

to make atonement for you. "As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live: turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways" (Ezek. XXXIII, 11).

30. will I destroy. Synonymous with "shall be cut off," showing that the punishment is not by a human Court.

31. it is a statute. As in III, 17.

32. in the ninth day. The Day commencing with the preceding eve (Gen. I, 5). Both the opening and closing evenings are marked by services (Kol Nidré and Neilah) of special solemnity. The Neilah Amidah is one of the most masterly products of Israel's religious genius. It begins: "Thou givest a hand to transgressors, and Thy right hand is stretched out to receive the penitent. Thou hast taught us, O Lord our God, to make confession unto Thee of all our sins, in order that we may cease from the violence of our hands and may return unto Thee who delightest in the repentance of the wicked." These words contain, what has been called, "the Jewish doctrine of salvation."

33–43. Feast of Tabernacles

34. fifteenth day. Like the Passover, this Feast commenced at full moon.

tabernacles. Heb. Succoth, lit. "booths." In Exod. XXIII, 16, it is called "the Feast of Ingathering." In Rabbinic literature, it is known as "the Feast," because, as the time of harvest, it would naturally be a period of rejoicing and holiday-making. It really consists of two groups: the first seven days, Tabernacles proper; and the eighth day,

The seventh day of Tabernacles became in later times an echo of the Day of Atonement and was known as Hoshanah Rabbah; and the "second day" of Atzeres assumed the nature of a separate Festival under the name of Simchas Torah, Rejoicing of the Law, the day on which the annual reading of the Torah was completed and restarted.

solemn assembly. Or, "closing festival." Heb. atzereth, the concluding day of a festival season, applied to the seventh day of Passover (Deut. XVI, 8), and, in Rabbinic literature, to the Feast of Weeks (see on v. 15). Maimonides explains the purpose of this eighth day to be, "in order to complete our rejoicings which cannot be perfect in booths, but in well-built houses."

42. booths. The Heb. sukkah represents a hastily-constructed and unsubstantial edifice, such as the Israelites must have set up during the wanderings in the Wilderness. In addition to its historical association reminding the Israelite of the Divine protection during the desert-journey, the command to dwell in booths has also a religious signification. "Man ought to remember his evil days in his days of prosperity. He will thereby be induced to thank God repeatedly, to lead a modest and humble life. We, therefore, on Tabernacles leave our houses in order to dwell in booths. We shall thereby remember that this has once been our condition." (Maimonides). The Book of Ecclesiastes is aptly set aside for special reading during Tabernacles or Atzeres.

Chapter XXIV

1–9. The Lamps and the Shewbread

The Torah, before leaving the subject of the Sanctuary, alludes to the constant duty of the priests to see that the lamp is kept perpetually alight and the shewbread regularly arranged. These are outstanding obligations of priesthood, which must not be relaxed even at the special seasons of the year, when the attention and energies of the Temple-servants were otherwise taxed to the full.

18. life for life. This phrase is a legal term equivalent to "fair compensation"; for it cannot mean that anyone who slew an animal should forfeit his own life in return! In the same way, the phrase, "as he hath done, so shall it be done to him" in v. 19, and "eye for eye" and "tooth for tooth" in v. 20, are merely technical phrases for the demand that adequate and equitable compensation, after due and judicial appraisement of the injury inflicted, is to be paid for the injury. There is in Jewish history no instance of the law of retaliation ever having been carried out literally—eye for an eye, tooth for a tooth. To the Talmudists the Biblical words eye for eye had become a mere expression of the law of equality. "None of the later [Rabbinic] law books even suggest retaliation as a proper remedy, the example of contemporary European and Asiatic systems of jurisprudence to the contrary notwithstanding" (D. W. Amram). The last clause reminds us of one of the paradoxes of history. On the one hand, Judaism the so-called religion of "strict justice," rejected the literal application of the law of retaliation, and knew neither torture in legal procedure nor mutilation as a legal punishment. In Christian lands, on the other hand, mutilation and torture are well-nigh the indispensable accompaniments of justice from the middle of the thirteenth century down to the end of the eighteenth, and in some countries to the middle of the nineteenth century and beyond. See also Exodus, p. 247 and 288.

22. ye shall have one manner of law. . . homeborn. One of the great texts of Scripture; cf. XIX, 33f. Though in this connection, the application of the law may be, so to speak, disadvantageous to the alien, the general principle of equality between alien and native is only strengthened thereby. In no other code was there one and the same law for native-born and alien alike. Even in Roman Law, every alien was originally classed as an enemy, and therefore devoid of any rights. Only gradually was the protection of the law in a limited degree extended to him. It is not so very long ago that aliens in European states were incapable of owning landed property. In many countries, the denial

Chapter XXV. The Sabbatical Year and the Year of Jubilee

The cycle of sacred seasons begun in xxiii is here continued, and the system of sabbaths—the Sabbath at the end of the week; Pentecost at the end of seven weeks; the Seventh month, as the sacred month studded with Festivals—is here completed by the Sabbatical year and by the Jubilee, which came after a "week" of Sabbatical years.

In connection with the last-named institutions, we have the land legislation of the Torah, as well as much of its poor and labour laws. During the Sabbath-year the land was to lie fallow (Exod. xxiii, 10f) and was to be "released" from cultivation. The land is not the absolute possession of man: it belongs to God, and is to be held in trust for His purposes. The Sabbath-year does not seem to have been regularly observed in pre-exilic times, and, according to the Mishnah, the Sabbath-year was fully enforced only in Palestine. A promise to observe it in the future formed part of the covenant on the Return from Babylon; Neh. x, 32. Alexander the Great remitted to the Jews the tribute in every seventh year "because then they did not sow their fields" (Josephus). Julius Caesar acted in the same manner. Some of the later Roman Emperors, however, rigorously exacted taxation in the Sabbatical year.

Heathens did not trouble to understand the meaning of this unique law which, among other things, saved the soil from the danger of exhaustion. Thus, the Roman historian Tacitus attributes the Jews' observance of it to indolence.

Israel, and say unto them, When ye come into the land which I give you, then shall the land

1. spake unto Moses. Better, had spoken unto Moses. As these laws are intended to meet the social problems that would arise in the Israelitish Commonwealth, they bring the legal part of Leviticus to an appropriate conclusion.

2. the land keep a sabbath. The land is personified. It should rest in the seventh year, as man rests on the seventh day. The Israelite may not during that year till it himself or allow anyone to do so on his behalf. "Just as the freedom of the individual was a fundamental principle of the Torah, so was the freedom of the land from the absolute ownership of man" (F. Perles).

unto the Lord. As the Sabbath was more than a cessation of labour, and was a day dedicated to God—similarly during the Sabbatical year, the soil was to be devoted to Him by being placed at the service of the poor and the animal creation (Exod. xxiii, 10, 11). In Deut. xxxi, 10f, we learn that the seventh year was, furthermore, to be utilised for national educational ends, and special measures were to be taken to acquaint the men and the women, the children as well as the resident aliens, with the teachings and duties of the Torah. Josephus rightly claims that while the best knowledge of olden times was usually treated as a secret doctrine, and confined to the few, it was the glory of Moses that he made it current coin. "To place within the reach of the English worker, once in every seven years, a year's course at a University in science and law and literature and theology, would be something like the modern equivalent for one of the advantages which the Sabbath-year offered to the ancient Hebrew" (F. Verinder in My Neighbour's Landmark, Short Studies in Bible Land Laws, 1911).

5. undressed vine. The Heb. is the word for a Nazirite whose hair was to remain unshorn (Num. VI, 5). Like him, the vines were not to be trimmed during the Sabbatical year. There was to be neither planting, pruning nor gathering.

The Divine promise in this verse is in accordance with the uniformly tender regard for animals throughout Scripture. They were part of God's creation, and as such were comprehended in His pity and love; see the concluding verse of Jonah. "A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast" (Prov. XII, 10).

thou shalt sow thy field, and six years thou shalt prune thy vineyard, and gather in the fruits thereof;

5. That which groweth of itself of thy harvest thou shalt not reap, and the grapes of thy undressed vine thou shalt not gather: it shall be a year of solemn rest for the land.
6. And the sabbath of the land shall be for food for you; for thee, and for thy servant and for thy maid, and for thy hired servant and for thy stranger that sojourn with thee;
7. and for thy cattle, and for the beasts that are in thy land, shall all the increase thereof be for food.

8–55. The Jubilee

In the fiftieth year, the Hebrew slaves with their families are emancipated, and property, except house property in a walled city, reverts to its original owner. The Jubilee institution was a marvellous safeguard against deadening poverty. By it, houses and lands were kept from accumulating in the hands of the few, pauperism was prevented, and a race of independent freeholders assured. It represented such a rare and striking introduction of morals into economics, that many have been inclined to question whether this wonderful institution was ever in actual force. However, "nothing is more certain than that the Jubilee was once for centuries a reality in the national life of Israel" (Ewald). Ezekiel speaks of its non-observance as one of the signs that "the end is come" upon the nation for its misdoings; and he mentions (see Exodus, p. 611) "the year of liberty," when a gift of land must return to the original owner. "It is impossible to think that, as has sometimes been supposed, the institution of the Jubilee is a mere paper-law; at least as far as concerns the land (for the periodical redistribution of which there are analogies in other nations), it must date from ancient times in Israel" (Driver). According to the Talmud, the law of the Jubilee was observed as long as the entire territory of the Holy Land was inhabited by Israelites. When a portion of the tribes went into exile, the law lapsed.

in the day of atonement. Although the year commenced on the first of Tishri, Rosh Hashanah, it was not until the tenth of the month, Yom Kippur, that the proclamation of the Jubilee was made. The Day of Atonement and the Jubilee had much in common. The message of both was a "new birth." The Day of Atonement freed man from slavery to sin and enabled him to start life anew, at one with God and with his fellowman. The Jubilee had for its aim the emancipation of the individual from the shackles of poverty, and the readjustment of the various strata in the commonwealth in accordance with social justice. No more appropriate day, therefore, for inaugurating such a year of rectification—as well as to attune the hearts of all to the sacrifices demanded by such rectification—than the Day of Atonement; and no more suitable signal to inaugurate it than the blowing of the Shofar. Isa. LVIII, which forms the Haftorah for the Day of Atonement, seems to have been spoken on a Yom Kippur inaugurating a Jubilee-year.

10. the fiftieth year. Some have held that the forty-ninth year itself was the Jubilee, as otherwise there would every man unto his possession. In this way the original equal division of the land was restored. The permanent accumulation of land in the hands of a few was prevented, and those whom fault or misfortune had thrown into poverty were given a "second chance."

According to Scripture "the earth is the Lord's"; and all the land was, as it were, held from God on lease (v. 23). The Israelite who voluntarily or through some compulsion sold his land to another, sold not the ownership of the land, but the remainder of the lease—till the next year of Jubilee, when all the leases fell in simultaneously. The land then came back to his family, all contracts of sale to the contrary notwithstanding. His children thus enjoyed the same advantage of a "fair start" as their father had had before them (Verinder). Heine rightly remarks that the Torah does not aim at the impossible—the abolition of property, but at the moralisation of property, striving to bring it into harmony with equity and the true law of Reason by means of the Jubilee-year. This institution forms a most striking contrast to "prescription" among the Romans, according to which, the possessor of a piece of land could not, after the lapse of a certain period, be compelled to restore it to its real owner, so long as the latter was unable to show that he had during that period demanded restitution in due form. Far other is the spirit that we find in the Law of Moses. "It is not the protection of property, but the protection of humanity, that is the aim of the Mosaic Code. Its Sabbath day and Sabbath year secure even to the lowliest, rest and leisure. With the blast of the jubilee trumpets the slave goes free, and a re-division of the land secures again to the poorest his fair share in the bounty of the common Creator" (Henry George).

11. ye shall not sow. The Jubilee year shares the features of the Sabbatical year.

12. out of the field. The Israelite may not store any of the produce, but whenever he required corn or fruit, he may go out into the field and gather it.

18–23. Exhortation

18. dwell in . . . safety. What follows must be understood of both the Sabbatical and Jubilee years. If the enactments are conscientiously carried out, the people, far from suffering because of the “ Sabbath ” allowed to the land, would dwell in safety ; i.e. secure from the perils of drought and famine (cf. xxvi, 5).

21. for the three years. The exceptional fertility in the sixth year might be compared with the double portion of manna which was to be gathered on the sixth day (Exod. xvi, 22).

22. ninth year. Until the Feast of Tabernacles ; for then the produce of the eighth year is gathered in and stored (Rashi) “ The experience of the present-day in Syria shows that, after lying fallow for a year, a field requires several ploughings before it can be sown. The consequence is that sowing cannot be begun till the following spring—the eighth year of v. 22—and the crop is not available till late autumn, when the ninth year has begun ” (Kennedy).

23. the land is mine. This verse enunciates the basic dwell therein in safety. 20. And if ye shall say, What shall we eat the seventh year? behold,

we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase:
21. then I will command my blessing upon you in the sixth year, and it shall bring forth fruit for the three years. 22. And ye shall sow the eighth year, and eat of the fruits, the old store;
until the ninth year, until her fruits come in,
ye shall eat the old store. 23. And the land shall not be sold in perpetuity; for the land is mine: for ye are strangers and sojourners with me. 24. And in all the land of your possession ye shall grant a redemption for the land.*iv principle upon which all these enactments rest. "The earth is the LORD'S" (Ps. XXIV, 1), and His people hold their lands in fee from Him. The ground itself, then, was not a proper object of sale, but only the result of man's labour on the ground.

24–28. REDEMPTION OF LAND

25. be waxen poor. Only dire poverty would induce an Israelite to part with his family heritage. When Ahab asks Naboth to sell his vineyard, he answers the king, "The LORD forbid it me, that I should give the inheritance of my fathers unto thee" (I Kings XXI, 3).

shall redeem. The next-of-kin is not under compulsion to do this: it is a moral obligation upon him, if his circumstances permit, to see that the property reverts to the family at the earliest opportunity. In that case, the purchaser cannot refuse to accept a just offer of repayment and return the land.

26. waxen rich . . . redeem it. " Becomes rich enough to buy it back himself " (Moffatt).

27. the overplus. The amount by which the purchase money of the field exceeded the value of the crops reaped by the purchaser. In Rabbinic law, if the purchaser had resold the land to a second buyer, then the owner treats with the first purchaser, if he had sold it at a higher price than he paid; and with the second, if the price had been smaller. The purpose of this regulation was to give the advantage to the original owner, and also to discourage speculation in land values.

28. it shall go out. Into freedom. According to the testimony of Josephus there was due recognition of tenants' improvements. " When the Jubilee is come, he that sold the land, and he that bought it, meet together, and make an estimate, on the one hand, of the fruits gathered; and, on the other hand, of the expenses laid out upon it. If the fruits gathered come to more than the expenses laid out, he that sold it takes the land again; but if the expenses that is next unto him come, and shall redeem that which his brother hath sold. 26. And if a man have no one to redeem it, and he be waxen rich and find sufficient to redeem it; 27. then let him count the years of the sale thereof, and restore the overplus unto the man to whom he sold it; and he shall return unto his possession. 28. But if he be not able to get it back for himself, then that which he hath sold shall remain in the hand of him that hath bought it until the year of jubile: and in the jubile it shall go out, and he shall return unto his possession.*v (iii)

29. And if a man sell a dwelling house in a walled city, then he may redeem it within a whole year after it is sold; for a full year shall he have the right of redemption. 30. And if it be not redeemed within the space of a full year, then the house that is in the walled city shall prove more than the fruits, the present possessor receives of the former owner the difference that was wanting, and leaves the land to him; and if the fruits received and the expenses laid out prove equal to one another, the present possessor relinquishes it to the former owner."

29–34. Redemption of Houses

29. a dwelling house. A house in a walled city could be disposed of in perpetuity; but the owner had the right of re-purchase during the first year of the sale.

a walled city. In contrast to villages; see on v. 31.

30. walled city. This is the translation of the Traditional Reading (Keri). The Written Text (Kethib) really is, "unwalled city." The Rabbis explain this anomalous Reading of the Text to indicate that this Law applies also to a city that was originally walled in, but is no longer so.

be made sure. That is, a house in the town could be sold "out and out"; but not houses in the open country, which were treated as a part of the inheritance, and were restored with it at the Jubilee; see next v.

31. reckoned with the fields. The house, in such circumstances, is really part of the property and indispensable to the man who had to work the land.

32. Levites. While Aaron and his sons were chosen for the priestly office, the menial services at the Sanctuary and Temple were assigned to the Levites—the rest of the tribe. In the Wilderness, they bore the furniture of the Sanctuary during the wanderings. At the Settlement in Canaan, the tribe of Levi received no definite domain, but scattered cities were assigned to them in territory belonging to other tribes. In these cities (see Num. xxxv, 2f) the vendor has a perpetual right of redemption.

33. if a man redeem from the Levites. If one purchases a house in one of the Levitical cities, even if it be a walled city, the law of v. 30 does not apply; in the Jubilee, it reverts to the owner.

the house that was sold, and the city. Better, the house that was sold in the city (AJ).

35–38. Practical Love of Neighbour

35. if thy brother be waxen poor. He still remains thy brother, and is to be treated in a brotherly and considerate manner. This is in strongest contrast to the treatment of the impoverished debtor in ancient Rome. The creditor could imprison him in his own private dungeon, chain him be made sure in perpetuity to him that bought it, throughout his generations: it shall not go out in the jubile. 31. But the houses of the villages which have no wall round about them shall be reckoned with the fields of the country:

they may be redeemed, and they shall go out in the jubile. 32. Nevertheless the cities of the Levites, the houses of the cities of their possession, may the Levites redeem at any time. 33. And if a man redeem from the Levites, then the house that was sold, and the city of his possession, shall go out in the jubile: for the houses of the cities of the Levites are their possession among the children of Israel. 34. But the field of the pasture lands of their cities may not be sold; for it is their perpetual possession.
35. And if thy brother be waxen poor, and his hand fail with thee; then thou shalt uphold

to a block, sell him into slavery, or even put him to death. If the debtor had several creditors, the Roman Law of the Twelve Tables ordained that they could hew him in pieces; and although one of them took a part of his body larger in proportion than his claim, the other creditors had no redress!

as a stranger and a sojourner shall he live. Better, yea though he be a stranger, or a sojourner; that he may live (AV, Zunz, Benisch—following Rashi and Ibn Ezra). The great principle of "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" must be a reality in Israelite life. The stranger shall he live with thee. These words can be understood quite literally: it is the Israelite's duty to see to it that his fellowman does not die of starvation. It was centuries, millenia even, before the world outside Israel learned this elementary duty. Constantine in 315 is the first European ruler to have effected poor relief legislation, only to be repealed by Justinian two centuries later. It was not till the days of Queen Elizabeth that poor relief came to be recognised as a duty of the State. Other States followed England's example in the nineteenth century.

39–46. NO PERMANENT SERVITUDE FOR ANY ISRAELITE

When a man's ill fortune forces him to sell himself into bondage, his Hebrew master had definite obligations towards one who is of the same flesh and blood as himself. These regulations are unique in the respect for labour they inculcate and the manner in which the dignity of the labourer is safeguarded.

40. as an hired servant. He was not to be given any menial or degrading work, but only agricultural tasks or skilled labour, such as would be performed by a free labourer who is hired for a season.

unto the year of jubile. This must be understood in connection with Exod. XXI, 2f, and Deut. XV, 12f, which ordain that the Hebrew who sells himself into slavery serves his master for six years and goes free in the seventh. Should the Jubilee occur before his six years of service are over, the servant regains his personal freedom at the same time that his inheritance returns to him, in the year of Jubilee.

they shall not be sold as bondmen. lit. " they shall not be sold the sale of a slave." The Rabbis ruled that a Hebrew is not to be sold publicly in the slave-market, but the sale is to be privately arranged.

43. with rigour. The same word is used to describe the hardship of Israel's bondage in Egypt (Exod. I, 13). In Rabbinic law, the rules that should regulate the relationship between a master and his Hebrew slave are given in great detail, and are based on the principle that master and man are kinsmen ; e.g. the slave must not be given inferior food or accommodation to that of the master. Kindliness and chivalry are to characterise the bearing of the Israelite towards his less fortunate brother.

The system of slavery which is tolerated by the Torah was fundamentally different from the cruel systems of the ancient world, and even of Western countries down to the middle of the last century. The Code of Hammurabi has penalties only for the master who destroys the tooth or eye of another man's slave. It orders that a slave's ear be cut off, if he desires freedom ; while to harbour a runaway slave was considered a capital offence. As to Greece, a slave was deemed " an animated tool," and he could claim no more rights in his relationship to his master than a beast of burden. Agricultural labourers were chained. If at any time it was thought that there were too many slaves, they were exterminated, as wild beasts would be. Athens was an important slave market, and the State profited from it by a tax on the sales. So much for " the glory that was Greece." The " grandeur that was Rome " was even more detestable. The slave was denied all human rights, and sentenced to horrible mutilation and even crucifixion at the whim of his master. Sick slaves were exposed to die of starvation, and there was corporate responsibility for slaves : Tacitus records that as late as the Empire the 400 slaves of one household were all put to death because they had been under their master's roof when he was murdered. Worlds asunder from these inhumanities and barbarities was the treatment accorded to the Hebrew slave. The position of Eliezer in Abraham's household (Gen. XXIV) enables us to realise the nature of servitude in the ancient Hebrew home. Kidnapping a man or selling him as a slave was a capital offence. Cruelty on the part of the master that resulted in injury to an organ of the body, secured the slave's freedom (Exod. XXI, 26f); and if the slave ran away, he must not be surrendered to his master (Deut. XXIII, 16f). A Fugitive Slave Law, such as existed in America, with the tracking of runaway slaves by blood hounds, would have been unthinkable to the Israelite of old.

Chapter XXVI

The traditional Hebrew division of the Bible Text attaches the first two verses of this chapter to the preceding. The association of ideas is explained by the Sifra in this way: at the end of the last chapter, the Torah had treated of the case of an Israelite who had sold himself as a slave to a heathen master, and who might be tempted to follow the worship of his heathen master. Therefore, the warning of these verses is uttered. The words may, however, have a wider application. These two verses give "the quintessence of the foregoing legislation" (Baentsch).

2. Ye shall keep my sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuary: I am the Lord.

CONCLUDING ADMONITION

The Book of Leviticus has its sacerdotal chapters, its ceremonial parts, its ethical section; and, in its concluding portion, it strikes the note of Prophetic admonition and warning. This is not to be wondered at when we recall the fact that Moses is "the Father of the Prophets." The Jewish name for this chapter from v. 14–45 (as well as for the parallel section in Deut. XXVIII) is Tochacha, תוכחה; lit. "Warning," "Admonition."

After having declared the higher law and rooted all human duty, both to God and man, in the Holiness-ideal—"Ye shall be holy, for I the Lord your God am holy"—the Lawgiver endeavours to enlist man's natural fear and hope as allies of that sublime principle. In startling and indeed in terrifying form, he contrasts the blessings, in the event of faithfulness to God, with the dire calamities, if the people prove disloyal to Him. This fundamental thought, viz., that God rewards the righteous and punishes the wicked, is an essential doctrine of Judaism as of every higher religion. They may differ as to the nature and form of Divine retribution, but the belief that right is rewarded and wrong punished is part of an ethical faith, a belief vindicated and confirmed by the experience of humanity. "One lesson, and only one, history may be said to repeat with distinctness, that the world is built somehow on moral foundations; that in the long run it is well with the good; in the long run it is ill with the wicked" (Froude). But, while there is general agreement with this truth underlying the Admonition, there has always been discontent with the manner in which it is presented in this chapter. "Why," it is asked, "does Scripture enter into such dreadful details concerning the consequences of disobedience"? Two observations must be made in regard to this form of appeal. The first is, that it is a language which the people to whom this homiletic discourse on the Wages of Disobedience was originally addressed, could clearly understand. "A wealth of bliss may be depicted in two or three concise phrases, but to cause the primitive mind to realise the awful consequences of sin and transgression, the words of denunciation must come swift and powerful as hammer blows, and must picture to their last terrible results, the dreadful devastation wrought by human perversity" (Drachmann). The second is that the Tochacha, though it may sound harsh, is true; and truth in its nakedness is not always pleasant. The promises and, alas, also the warnings in this chapter have abundantly been borne out by Jewish history. "As a survey of the wordly blessings and tribulations employed by God in His education of Israel in Canaan, this chapter is fairly exhaustive, and is in line with what Prophecy proclaimed, and historical experience taught, in the course of the centuries" (Dillmann); see also on Deut. XXVIII.

3. if ye walk in my statutes. Heb. אם בחקתי תלכו; Sifra translates: "Would that you walked in my statutes"! statutes. See on XVIII, 4.

4. rains. The rainfall is of supreme importance in the Holy Land. If it fails, the result is famine. Consequently, it comes first among the blessings.

5. threshing. Cf. Amos, IX, 13. There will be so much corn to thresh, that the work will continue throughout the season until it is time to cut the vines.

safely. Without fear of famine; as in XXV, 19.

6. I will give peace in the land. Prosperity is valueless unless it can be enjoyed in tranquility, without the dread of assault, robbery or devastation of war.

evil beasts. In the time of warfare, when the land is desolated, wild beasts multiply; cf. Exod. XXIII, 29; Isa. XXXV, 9.

sword. The symbol of an invading army; cf. Ezek. XIV, 17.

7. ye shall chase. Should they attempt to attack you.

8. five . . . hundred. These are round numbers, not to be taken literally. They express the idea that the Israelites, with God as their helper, will be able to overcome vastly superior forces; e.g. the victories of the Maccabees over armies of great numerical superiority.

11. my tabernacle. Better, my abiding presence (cf. Exod. xxv, 8); God will be manifestly with His people, as evidenced by their extraordinary happiness.

abhor you. Withdraw My favour so as to expose you to misfortune; cf. Jer. xiv, 19.

12. walk among you. A forcible image to describe how intimately God will associate with Israel. God's presence among, and delight in, His people are the cause of all the material blessings spoken of.

bars. With which the yoke was fastened to the animal's neck.

14–39. The Wages of Disobedience

In dealing with the consequences of faithfulness, the Torah speaks in general terms; but in regard to the wages of disobedience, this Prophetical warning describes in much detail the penalties and horrors that would befall the sinful people. These are arranged in a series of five groups of increasing severity—sickness and defeat, famine, wild beasts, siege and exile.

16–18. Sickness and Defeat

16. terror. i.e. terrible things, defined by what follows. The diseases which are mentioned are such as would strike terror in the heart of a person afflicted with any of them; cf. Deut. xxviii, 22.

consumption. Any disease which causes a wasting of the body.

your God, which brought you forth out of the land of Egypt, that ye should not be their bondmen; and I have broken the bars of your yoke, and made you go upright.

not do all these commandments; 15. and if ye shall reject my statutes, and if your soul abhor my judgements, so that ye will not do all my commandments, but break my covenant; 16.
I also will do this unto you; I will appoint terror over you, even consumption and fever, that shall consume the eyes, and make the soul to pine away: and ye shall sow your seed in vain, for your enemies shall eat it. 17. And I will set my face against you, and ye shall be smitten before your enemies: they that hate you shall rule over you; and ye shall flee when none pursueth you. 18. And if ye will not yet for these things hearken unto me, then I will chastise you seven times more for your sins. 19. And I sow your seed in vain. Toiling without enjoying the fruits of their labour is frequently given as a punishment for faithlessness; cf. Deut. xxviii, 30.

ye shall flee. They will be so demoralised that panic will seize them without cause; cf. v. 36 below.

19–22. Famine and Wild Beasts

19. pride of your power. The power which is the cause of your pride. By " power " is to be understood the feeling of independence that results from prosperity; cf. Deut. VIII, 11-18.

heaven as iron. A cloudless heaven in the rainy season and an unproductive soil would quickly humble the pride of the people, and make them realise their helplessness.

21. contrary unto me. Heb. קרי acting perversely, and wilfully doing the opposite of what God wishes. The Heb. also means " accident." In defiant opposition to God, they would despise God's laws, and act as if accident ruled the moral and spiritual universe (S. R. Hirsch).

plagues. Strokes, smitings.

23–26. The Horrors of Siege

23. reformed unto me. The purpose of God's chastisements is the moral discipline of His people.

execute the vengeance of the covenant. i.e. exact retribution from you for disregarding My covenant with you.

destroy your cattle, and make you few in number;
and your ways shall become desolate. 23. And will I also walk contrary unto you; and I will

27–39. National Destruction and Exile

28. in fury. The continued stubbornness of the people will lead to direr and direr punishment. The warnings now reach the climax of horror.

30. high places. Heb. bamoth; the altars on the hill-tops, or mounds, built by the Canaanites and taken over by idolatrous Israelites.

sun-images. Or, "images of the sun-god."

cast your carcases. See II Kings XXIII, 14, 20, for a historical instance.

idols. lit. "things rolled about," of wood or stone; a term of contempt.

abhor you. In contrast to what was stated in v. 15.

31. your sanctuaries. God will not associate Himself with such a Temple; hence "your sanctuaries," not "my sanctuary" as in v. 2. The plural may refer to the different divisions of the Sanctuary—the Court with the brazen Altar, the Holies with the Altar of incense, and the Holy of Holies.

I will not smell. Cf. Amos V 21. Since the incense symbolised prayer (see on II, 1), the phrase means, "I will ignore your petitions." Sanctuary and sacrifice are valueless, if unaccompanied by moral obedience.

26. When I break your staff of bread, ten women shall bake your bread in one oven, and they shall deliver your bread again by weight: and ye shall eat, and not be satisfied.

27. And if ye will not for all this hearken unto me, but walk contrary unto me; 28. then
I will walk contrary unto you in fury; and I also will chastise you seven times for your sins.
29. And ye shall eat the flesh of your sons, and the flesh of your daughters shall ye eat. 30.
And I will destroy your high places, and cut down your sun-images, and cast your carcases upon the carcases of your idols; and my soul shall abhor you. 31. And I will make your cities a waste, and will bring your sanctuaries unto desolation, and I will not smell the savour of your sweet odours. 32. And I will bring the land into desolation: and your enemies which dwell therein shall be astonished at it. 33.
And you will I scatter among the nations, and I

32. astonished. Amazement will seize them at the appalling desolation, and they will perceive that it is due to superhuman agency.

33. you will I scatter among the nations. "There is a marvellous and grand display of the greatness of God in the fact that He holds out before the people whom He has just delivered from the hands of the heathen the prospect of being scattered again among the heathen, and that even before the land is taken by the Israelites, He predicts its return to desolation. These could only be spoken of by One who has the future really before His mind, who can destroy His own work, yet attain His end, certain of victory notwithstanding all opposing difficulties" (quoted in Keil-Delitzsch).

the sword after you. An expression for the hot pursuit of fugitives; cf. Ezek. XXI, 8-11. Malbim explains these words as an essential qualification of the first part of the verse, scatter among the nations. "Israel's dispersion is not a curse in itself: it is a means of fulfilling God's purpose of spreading His word among the nations. The tragedy lies in being scattered because of the sword."

34. enjoy her sabbaths. Better, satisfy its sabbaths; i.e. make compensation for the years of release which the Israelites did not observe according to the dictates of the law (Leeser). Driver explains that the Heb. word rendered "enjoy" is the technical term in connection with the settlement of an account. When the people are exiled, the land, here personified, will receive payment of an overdue account on the long Sabbath-rest which it will then enjoy; see next v.

36. left of you. The two preceding verses are a parenthesis, describing the "rest" which the land would have, when its inhabitants had been carried into captivity. This verse resumes v. 33, and alludes to the fate, with its resulting cowardice and "spiritual slavery," that would be in store for those who escaped. "The author possessed the imagination of a poet as well as the eloquence of an orator" (Kennedy).

will draw out the sword after you: and your land shall be a desolation, and your cities shall be a waste. 34. Then shall the land enjoy her sabbaths, as long as it lieth desolate, and ye be in your enemies' land; even then shall the land rest, and enjoy her sabbaths. 35. As long as it lieth desolate it shall have rest; even the rest which it had not in your sabbaths, when ye dwelt upon it. 36. And as for them that are left of you, I will send a faintness into their heart in the lands of their enemies: and the sound of a driven leaf shall chase them; and they shall flee, as one fleeth from the sword; and they shall fall when none pursueth. 37. And they shall stumble one upon another, as it were before the sword, when none pursueth: and ye shall have no power to stand before your enemies.
38. And ye shall perish among the nations, and the land of your enemies shall eat you up. 39.
And they that are left of you shall pine away
in their iniquity in your enemies' lands; and also in the iniquities of their fathers shall they

37. stumble. In their panic, caused by demoralisation and not by a real enemy, they would forget the need for mutual help; and each would endeavour to escape, even at the cost of sacrificing his brother—true psychology of the Golus.

38. eat you up. For the image of a land consuming those who dwell upon its soil, see Num. XIII, 32.

39. in their iniquity. From the consequences of their guilt; i.e. their punishment. To this guilt (and punishment) their fathers have contributed.

with them. Refers to the fathers. There will be an added agony to the wretched lot of the sinful parents, that they will behold their children, who had followed their evil example, experiencing the hard fate which was so bitter to themselves. This explanation is supported by the Traditional accentuation of the words.

40–45. Repentance Shall Bring Restoration

40. confess. God desireth not the death of the sinner; and, therefore, every threat of punishment for disobedience is followed by a promise of mercy, if there is repentance and amendment. Divine discipline is for moral ends; and in truth the Exile proved a purifying furnace unto Israel.

trespass. Or, "treachery," implying that faithlessness to the Covenant is a wrong committed directly against God; cf. v. 15.

41. I also walked. Better, I also walk. They will acknowledge that the calamities which had overtaken them were God's method of humbling their arrogance.

uncircumcised. Unconsecrated, unclean; closed to the Divine call or appeal; cf. on XIX, 23.

accept of. Acknowledge that the punishment was deserved; see, however, v. 35 and 43.

pine away with them. 40. And they shall confess their iniquity, and the iniquity of their fathers, in their trespass which they trespassed against me, and also that because they have walked contrary unto me, 41. I also walked contrary unto them, and brought them into the land of their enemies: if then their uncircumcised heart be humbled, and they then accept of the punishment of their iniquity; 42. then will I remember my covenant with Jacob; and also my covenant with Isaac, and also my covenant with Abraham will I remember; and I will remember the land. 43. The land also shall be left of them, and shall enjoy her sabbaths, while she lieth desolate without them; and they shall accept of the punishment of their iniquity:
because, even because they rejected my judgements, and their soul abhorred my statutes.
44. And yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies, I will not reject them,

42. Jacob . . . Isaac . . . Abraham. God is stirred to mercy by recalling the noble ancestors of Israel and the Covenant He had entered with each. In retrospect, the last comes first to mind.

the land. Which was itself a symbol of the Covenant with the Patriarchs, and prominently figured in the promises which God had made to them.

43. shall be left of them. Better, shall be forsaken without them (AJ). Because the Israelites had failed to observe the Sabbatical year, they had wronged the soil of the Holy Land, and that wrong had to be expiated before they could return and resettle there; see XVIII, 25.

44. yet for all that. The chapter ends characteristically on a note of hope. God's anger may be severe, but it is not everlasting. He will grant His people every opportunity to renew the ancient Covenant. Israel—"a people who have been overthrown, crushed, scattered; who have been ground, as it were, to very dust, and flung to the four winds of heaven; yet who, though thrones have fallen, and empires have perished, and creeds have changed, and living tongues have become dead, still exist with a vitality seemingly unimpaired" (Henry George).

46. these are the statutes. This verse is the subscription not only to chaps. XVII-XXVI, but to the whole of Leviticus, the following chapter being an appendix to the Book.

neither will I abhor them, to destroy them utterly, and to break my covenant with them: for I am the LORD their God: 45. but I will for their sakes remember the covenant of their ancestors, whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt in the sight of the nations, that I might be their God: I am the LORD.

CHAPTER XXVII

REDEMPTION OF VOWS AND TITHES

The Book of Leviticus concludes, as it opened, with a chapter of Sanctuary-regulations—voluntary contributions to the upkeep of the Sanctuary, such offerings being a true expression of devotion to the House of God.

2–8. VOWING AND VALUATION OF A PERSON

2. make a special vow. By setting a valuation upon himself or any of his family, the money being paid into the treasury of the Sanctuary.

3. fifty shekels. The equivalent of £7 of our money, but the true value in purchasing power is many times that sum (Kennedy). The form, thy estimation, is archaic; see on Exod. xxx, 13.

4. thirty shekels. The valuation seems to have been made on the basis of what might be called the market value of the individual's labour. A woman, not possessing the physical strength of a man, had a lower valuation set upon her.

6. from a month old. No valuation is placed in regard to a child under a month old. In Jewish law there are no mourning rites to be observed for a child who dies within a month of birth.

8. according to the ability. i.e. according to the means. "If he (the person making the vow) be too poor to pay the valuation, then he shall set him (the person vowed) before the priest, and the priest shall value him." The priest, in forming his estimate of what he could pay, must leave him sufficient means for his necessities (Talmud).

estimation shall be thirty shekels. 5. And if it

6. And if it be from a month old even unto five years old, then thy estimation shall be of the male five shekels of silver, and for the female thy estimation shall be three shekels of silver.
7. And if it be from sixty years old and upward;
if it be a male, then thy estimation shall be fifteen shekels, and for the female ten shekels.
8. But if he be poorer than thy estimation, then he shall be set before the priest, and the priest shall value him; according to the ability of him that vowed shall the priest value him.

9. And if it be a beast, whereof men offer an oblation unto the LORD, all that any man giveth of such unto the LORD shall be holy. 10. He shall not alter it, nor change it, a good for a bad, or a bad for a good: and if he shall at all change beast for beast, then both it and that for which it is changed shall be holy. 11. And if it be any unclean beast, of which they do not

10. not alter it. Even for one of greater value. Alter is to replace one species by another, e.g. a bull for a sheep; change refers to different members of the same species.

14. sanctify. Dedicate.

15. redeem. As in v. 13. The law of xxv, 29f applied to this case where the redeemer was not the owner. If the house was in a walled city, it could be redeemed by the owner within a year; and if not redeemed, it remained for ever in the possession of the buyer. In the case of a house situated in a village, the Jubilee-year brought its restitution to the owner.

thou the priest valuest it, so shall it be. 13.

priest shall estimate it, so shall it stand. 15.
And if he that sanctified it will redeem his house,
then he shall add the fifth part of the money
of thy estimation unto it, and it shall be his.

16. And if a man shall sanctify unto the LORD part of the field of his possession, then thy estimation shall be according to the sowing thereof:
the sowing of a homer of barley shall be valued at fifty shekels of silver. 17. If he sanctify his field from the year of jubile, according to thy estimation it shall stand. 18. But if he

For each homer of seed used in sowing barley, the valuation was placed at fifty shekels for the whole period of forty-nine years. A homer was ten ephahs (see on XIX, 36), and nearly six bushels in capacity.

17. from the year of jubile. From the conclusion of the year.

In the year of jubile the field shall return unto him of whom it was bought, even to him to whom the possession of the land belongeth. 25. And all thy estimations shall be according to the shekel of the sanctuary: twenty gerahs shall be the shekel.

28–29. Law of the Ban

28. devoted thing. Lit. "cut-off, excluded," irrevocably given up. There were three varieties of the ban of differing degrees of stringency: the war ban, the justice ban, and the private ban. This verse deals with the last-named. The "devoting" of anything to the Temple was a more solemn act than a mere presentation. The human being, animal or field became "most holy," i.e. remained the inalienable property of the Sanctuary, and passed into the possession of the priests.

field of his possession. Only an inheritance could be "devoted," not a purchased field, since the latter only belonged to the owner temporarily, and passed out of his possession in the Jubilee. In the same manner, a Hebrew slave could not be "devoted," because he regained his freedom in the seventh year.

XXII, 19), and the blasphemer" (Kennedy). The individual was not permitted to carry out such a ban. Deut. XII, 31, forbids human sacrifice, and the putting to death of a slave is forbidden in Exod. XXI, 20.

30. tithe of the land. This is the so-called "second tithe" described in Deut. XIV, 22f. This tithe, which had to be taken to Jerusalem and consumed there, was analogous to the firstling of sacrificial animals, and the same law of redemption applied.

is the Lord's. Tithes belong to God as the real owner of the land; see on xxv, 1-7. They are a kind of rent paid by the people as His tenants. Being already God's, they cannot be made the subject of vows (Dummelow).

31. redeem. If the owner wished to eat the tithe elsewhere and otherwise than commanded, he might commute it for its value, plus a fifth.

32. tithe of the herd. Every tenth animal born of the herd or flock had to be treated like the tenth of the produce of the field. The animals were sacrificed and the flesh consumed in Jerusalem; cf. II Chron. xxxi, 6. The tithe was only reckoned on the new-born animals.

32. And all the tithe of the herd or the flock, whatsoever passeth under the rod, the tenth shall be holy unto the LORD. 33. He shall not search whether it be good or bad, neither shall he change it: and if he change it at all, then both it and that for which it is changed shall be holy; it shall not be redeemed.

the procedure: The new-born animals were herded in a pen with one narrow exit through which they could only pass in single file. As they came out, each tenth animal was touched on the back with a rod coated with red paint, and in this manner distinguished for the tithe.

33. he shall not search. The owner could not select which animals should form part of the tithe; hence the method described above. If he substituted one of the designated animals for another, whether of better or inferior quality, he forfeited both.

34. these are the commandments. Cf. XXVI, 46. If the "statutes, ordinances and laws" there mentioned allude, as they probably do, to the contents of the preceding twenty-five chapters, then this verse is the subscription of the concluding chapter only.

The Massoretic Note states the number of verses in Leviticus to be 859; its Sedrahs (parshiyoth) 10; its Sedarim, smaller divisions according to the Triennial Cycle, 23; and its Chapters, 27.

Note D

THE BOOK OF LEVITICUS

Its Antiquity and Mosaic Authorship

Both the antiquity and the Mosaic authorship of the Book of Leviticus are denied by Bible Critics. They declare Leviticus to be part of that section of the Pentateuch which they call the "Priestly code" and usually designate by the letter P. This "Priestly code," or P, is supposed to include, besides Leviticus, some portions of Genesis and Exodus (especially the chapters on the Tabernacle) and twenty-eight chapters of Numbers. They maintain that while some portions of P may be earlier than others, they were all edited, or written, by Ezra and his School, and made an integral part of the Law of Moses in the year 444 before the Christian era, or very shortly thereafter.

It must be clearly understood that this idea of a "Priestly code" and of its late origin is nothing more than pure hypothesis, and there is not a shred of evidence to show that it ever constituted a separate work. In fact, the whole Documentary theory as propounded by Julius Wellhausen and his followers—i.e., that the Pentateuch consists of separate "documents," of different date and authorship—rests on unproved assumptions. It is easy to make any theory look plausible, if the facts are selected or trimmed judiciously; and Bible Critics are most judicious both in selecting the facts and in trimming them to suit their purpose. When the facts are against their theory, the facts are altered or pronounced to be a later gloss in the passage in which they occur, or the Critics declare the whole passage to be sheer forgery. Irreconcilable differences between the "documents" are created, leading to a complete reversal of Israel's story. And the principal support for such a topsyturvy presentation of Bible history and religion is the alleged existence of these irreconcilable differences between the "documents." It is all reasoning in a vicious circle.

Outstanding scholars, like Prof. Sayce, have from the first pronounced the Documentary theory of the Pentateuch to be a "baseless fabric of subjective imagination." Others have come to share his view, realising more and more the insuperable objections to the theory of the late origin of the Levitical legislation. The whole Critical theory is to-day being questioned on fundamental issues. Nevertheless, the popularisers of theological literature ignore altogether the existence of any other opinion than that of the Critics, and they continue to write as if the lateness of Leviticus were indeed one of the "finalities of scholarship." That nothing could be further from the truth will be plain to any student who will take the trouble to consult the following books:—

J. Robertson, The Early Religion of Israel (William Blackwood)—the first critical investigation of the Wellhausen hypothesis in English;

James Orr, The Problem of the Old Testament (James Nisbet)—gives a comprehensive survey of the weaknesses of the Critical position;

W. L. Baxter, Sanctuary and Sacrifice (Eyre and Spottiswoode)—demolishes the foundation pillars of Wellhausen's structure;

H. M. Wiener, Essays in Pentateuchal Criticism (Elliot Stock)—is a lawyer's examination of the Critical claims; and

D. Hoffmann, Die Wichtigsten Instanzen gegen die Graf-Wellhausensche Hypothese (Poppelauer, Berlin)—written over a generation ago, but still unanswered because unanswerable.

The Internal Evidence Against the Critical Theory

Leviticus merely continues the story of the departure from Egypt and of the Children of Israel in the Wilderness. The few incidents in Leviticus, as well as its legislation, point to a sojourn in the Desert of the Sinai Peninsula prior to the occupation of Canaan. A verse such as, "After the doings of the land of Egypt, wherein ye dwelt, shall ye not do; and after the doings of the land of Canaan, whither I bring you, shall ye not do" (xviii, 3), is in itself decisive in favour of the Mosaic date.

In many passages of the Book, the going forth from Egypt and the manifestation of God's protecting power in the release, are spoken of as events of recent occurrence, fresh in the memory of those who had experienced the Divine mercy.

Israel is contemplated as living in tents, and the conditions of life which are presupposed are those of a camp (see on Lev. XVII, 3). The Sanctuary is depicted as a temporary structure of a portable nature, such as would be required while the people were wandering in the Wilderness. Leviticus assumes the people to be within reach of the religious centre, and in a position to attend the Sanctuary during the pilgrimage Festivals: in Ezra's time, this was impossible, as the bulk of the people was in Babylon, and another portion had drifted back to Egypt. The ritual of Azazel on the Day of Atonement is patently archaic, and had to be modified to meet the conditions of later times; see commentary on Lev. XVI, 22, p. 151.

The priests are always denoted as "Aaron and his sons." Their initial consecration to the priestly office is described (Lev. VIII), to which ceremony "all the congregation" was summoned (ibid. v. 3). This is meaningless on the supposition of the late origin of the Book. Furthermore, P exalts the High Priest. In Ezra's age, the High Priests were not worthy of honour, and seem to have been among those that attempted to thwart the work of religious reformation.

Similarly, the story of the blasphemer in Leviticus (XXIV, 10–12) is inexplicable on the Critical theory. A son of an Israelitish woman blasphemes, he is put in ward, but no one knows what punishment is to be meted out for that offence. Compare with this the story of Naboth and his judicial murder for alleged blasphemy in I Kings XXI, which chapter the Critics declare to be centuries older than Leviticus. When Jezebel, by means of perjured witnesses, convicts Naboth of that grave offence, there is not the slightest doubt in the mind of the judges and the people—as little as in Jezebel's own mind—what his punishment is to be. Now, if we were to admit that the narrative of the blasphemer was indeed written, or even "edited," for the benefit of the post-Exilic community, is it reasonable to assume that in those days there would be doubt as to the penalty for blasphemy?

The evidence of the language of Leviticus precludes a late date of composition. Riehm, Delitzsch, Dillmann and Hoffmann have demonstrated that it cannot truthfully be said to show traces of Exilic or post-Exilic times. The technical terms of the sacrificial regulations point to hoary antiquity, and are linguistically derived from ancient Arabic and Minaean (Hommel). There is in Leviticus an entire absence of neo-Babylonian or Persian loan-words that would reflect the age of the Exile. Of course, the language, vocabulary, and style differ considerably from that of the historical parts of the Pentateuch. But this is due to the nature of the subjects treated in Leviticus; e.g. sacrifices, leprosy, land laws, as against stories of family life, national history, and moral admonition in the other books. One hundred years ago, Macaulay drafted the Penal Code for India. In that work, his whole manner of writing—vocabulary, sentence-formation and style—is different from that used by him in his History, Essays, Speeches or Ballads. Yet, would anyone question Macaulay's authorship of the Indian Code, or would anyone advance the hypothesis of the existence of five separate Macaulays—one each for the History, Essays, Speeches, Ballads and Code—and living centuries apart from one another?

Bible Critics point to the Tochacha, the Admonition in Lev. XXVI, as proof that at any rate that chapter must have been written at a late date, because the punishments foreshadowed in that chapter (v. 14–45) were clearly realised in the time of the Babylonian Exile. Those who do not eliminate the Divine from history or from human life, regard the Tochacha as belonging to that unique mass of Bible predictions that have been fulfilled to the letter, and that are wholly inexplicable except on the Providential view of human history. But even quite apart from the predictive element in prophecy, there is no reason to doubt the Mosaic authorship of this chapter. Hoffmann has drawn attention to a parallel of the Tochacha in the far older code of Hammurabi. One thousand years before Moses, that code concludes with the promise of blessings of the god Shamash for obedience to his law, and with a detailed account of the calamities that would overtake those who are faithless to them. Leviticus XXVI is thus merely another instance of the principle דברה תורה כלשון בני אדם, which the Jewish exegetes of the Middle Ages translated to mean—Scripture chooses those forms of literary expression that would be most effective with the hearers to whom they are addressed.

One more striking circumstance. The Ten Commandments are given on Mt. Sinai, and the promulgation of the other laws takes place in the Wilderness and the plains of Moab. How came they to be attributed to lands outside the Holy Land, territories that had no sacred associations for the men of Ezra's age, or for that matter even for the heroes of the Patriarchal age? Surely such a strange,

"inconvenient," unnatural tradition is not likely to have been invented, but is based on fact. And if so, the events associated with that tradition could only have taken place in Mosaic times.

II

Improbability of the Critical Theory

It is evident that if the Critical account of the origin and promulgation of the so-called Priestly code is accepted, it is necessary to attribute deliberate fraud to Ezra. The Critics do not feel this moral difficulty, because the avowed object of many of the Critics has for a long time been to "deprive Israel of its halo," and to degrade its saints and heroes. But even those who do not recoil from attributing fraud to the sacred writers, should weigh the sheer improbability of the introduction of a new code in the manner put forward by the Critical theory.

> "It is utterly out of the question, that a body of laws, never before heard of, could be imposed upon the people as though they had been given by Moses centuries before; and that they could have been accepted and obeyed by them, notwithstanding the fact that these laws imposed new and serious burdens, set aside established usages to which the people were devotedly attached, and conflicted with the interests of powerful classes of the people" (W. H. Green).

Thus, on the theory of the Critics, tithes of corn, oil, and cattle for the support of the Levitical order had never before been heard of; yet the people submit to the new burdens without dissent. The Book of Nehemiah shows that there was a strongly disaffected party and a religiously faithless party in Jerusalem; yet no one raises a doubt. The Book of Deuteronomy was in the hands of at least the priests; yet even the hostile members of that body do not attempt to ward off the alleged new legislation by appealing to Deuteronomy XIII, 1, "What thing soever I command you, that shall ye observe to do; thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it." Even the Samaritans—then the bitterest enemies of Ezra and the Jews—are supposed to receive "Ezra's Torah" as the undoubted work of Moses, and seem to keep on changing and enlarging it, as the followers of Ezra—on the assumption of the Critics—keep on making new additions to it for at least a century after his death!

The improbability of Ezra attempting to pass off his work as the work of Moses, or of his succeeding in such a hypothetical attempt, will be considerably increased, when we realise the lack of agreement between the "Priestly code" and the conditions that confronted Ezra and his generation. P brings many things that could have been only of archaeological interest. Its largest section deals with the portable Sanctuary in the Wilderness; but in Ezra's time, the Tabernacle, the Ark, the Urim and Thummim had long ceased to exist. The tithe-laws as given in P are intended for a large body of Levites and a small number of priests, in the proportion of ten Levites to one priest. But the Books of Ezra and Nehemiah tell us, that in the community under Ezra's spiritual guidance, there were, on the contrary, twelve priests to one Levite! And yet Ezra is alleged by the Critics to have spent fourteen years, from 458—444, in the adaptation of the older legal enactments to the conditions of the community in Palestine (Oxford Hexateuch, I, 137).

Even more strange, on the theory of the Critics, is the absence of all reference in the "Priestly code" to the burning religious problems of the returned exiles, such as intermarriage. Ezra is crushed by grief and despair when he realises the extent of the evil in the new community. "And when I heard this thing, I rent my garments and my mantle, and plucked off the hair of my head and of my beard, and sat down .... I fell upon my knees and spread out my hands unto the Lord my God." He then set about the work of reformation; he called upon the nobles and people to put away their strange wives. They answer with a loud voice, "As thou hast said, so must we do"; and they enter upon the covenant, so fateful for the future of Israel and of monotheism. But to all this matter of intermarriage, which was of vital concern to Ezra and his School, there is not the slightest reference in the very legislation, which, we are asked to believe, was produced for the salvaging of the community from the mortal danger of absorption among the heathens. No less than two chapters in the "Priestly code" (Lev. XVIII and XX) are devoted to the subject of prohibited marriages; but not a word to the question which shook the post-Exilic community to its foundations. Surely an unaccountable omission—if the Critics are right.

There is, furthermore, no provision in P for the singers, porters, Nethinim, and Levites of Ezra's day. "The musical services of the Temple are as much beyond its line of vision as the worship of the Synagogue." In view of the minute way in which Leviticus regulates worship for the Mosaic generation, is it conceivable that, if Leviticus were a product of Ezra's age, there would be in it nothing directly bearing on the manner of contemporary worship?

The Argument from Silence

A favourite argument against the early date of Leviticus is the so-called argument from silence. It is somewhat as follows:—Throughout the period of the Judges and Kings, we find that the precepts of the Book of Leviticus were violated; hence, they could not then have existed. Furthermore, it is alleged that there is no explicit reference to them in the historical books of Judges, Samuel and Kings—another supposed proof that they could not have been known.

As to the first consideration, even cases of flagrant violation do not disprove the existence of the law as laid down in Leviticus. Neither a Jewish law, nor any other law, necessarily presupposes universal compliance with its terms. All historical experience is against it. It is unnecessary to point to modern laws of incontestable and universally acknowledged existence that are accompanied by open and organised violation. And the same is true of ancient laws, even of those believed to have Divine sanction. Take the prohibition of image-worship in the Ten Commandments. Canon Charles has aptly pointed out that for fifteen centuries the whole of Christendom disregarded it, and half of the Christian Church is still disregarding it. If violation of a law were proof of its non-existence, then the Second Commandment has to this day not yet been given! In fact, the Critics themselves note that the existence and the disregard of a law-book may very well go together. Deuteronomy became known—they hold—in the year 620, during the reign of king Josiah. It was observed during his lifetime; but immediately after his death, it was totally disregarded. The attitude of the Critics is therefore as follows:—non-observance of the Law in the ages after Moses is proof absolute that no such Law was ever promulgated in the days of Moses; but non-observance of the Law after the death of Josiah does not prove the non-existence of the Law in Josiah's time. In other words, "witnesses are reliable when they testify in favour of the Critics; but their veracity is promptly impeached, if their testimony is on the other side" (Baxter). For departures from statutory law in exceptional circumstances, see Exodus, p. 546.

And as for the second consideration, viz., the silence of the Historical books, that is an even feebler support for the Critical position. A few examples will illustrate its feebleness. Thus, none of the Prophets speaks of the Ten Commandments, and there are exceeding few references to Sabbath, New Moon, or circumcision outside the Pentateuch; and yet no responsible historian doubts the existence of these institutions in ancient Israel. As for the Day of Atonement, the first clear and unmistakable mention of it after the Pentateuch is in Roman times by Josephus! Furthermore, all Critics admit that the Passover and the Feast of Weeks existed in Israel since the earliest days. The Feast of Weeks, however, is nowhere named in the Historical books of the Bible; and Passover only twice, and then only in connection with exceptional conditions. An examination of the passages in which Passover is alluded to (Josh. v and II Kings xxiii) shows conclusively that, but for these exceptional conditions, viz., that the Festival had for a long time fallen into neglect, there would have been no record of its celebration. Would, in that case, the silence of the Bible have been valid evidence that Passover was unknown until after the Exile? Similarly, wherever the Sabbath is referred to outside the Pentateuch, it is nearly always in passages where the Israelites are rebuked for desecrating the holy day. Had the Sabbath been duly observed by the Israelites, none of the Prophets would have had occasion to mention it. The fact, then, that the Day of Atonement is never alluded to in the Historical books is really evidence in favour of its regular observance.

Critics dwell on the fact that the Day of Atonement is not mentioned in I Kings viii, 65, which describes the celebration of the dedication of Solomon's Temple. That celebration lasted a fortnight, during which period the tenth of the seventh month occurred, and there is no record that the festivities were suspended for that day. But neither is there in that chapter any indication that the popular rejoicings were moderated on the Sabbath day. Are we to argue that the Sabbath was unknown? We have here but another instance that, in regard to the feasts and fasts, Scripture does not record what is usual and normal, but only what is unusual and abnormal. This also explains Nehemiah VIII. That chapter describes the unusual events in the seventh month of the year 444, among them the observance of the Feast of Tabernacles on the 15th, "for since the days of Joshua the son of Nun unto that day had not the children of Israel done so" (v. 17). It is silent in regard to the Day of Atonement, because evidently there had been no interruption in its observance, as it is quite unlikely that the priests ever allowed their supreme function in the Temple service on that day to fall into abeyance. The fast described in Nehem. IX was not a substitute for the Day of Atonement. It was a special fast for special evils. It was a day of prayer and contrition, on which the people confessed the "iniquities of their fathers" as well as their own. There is not the slightest analogy to the Day of Atonement. It was a fast supplementary to it, called forth by the uniqueness of the circumstances.

What we can deduce from the Biblical data is that past history is repeating itself at the present time. Just as many modern Jews who neglect the Sabbath and Festivals, adhere to Yom Kippur, so in the periods of religious decadence in the past, the Israelites seem to have hallowed the Day of Atonement while ignoring the other Festivals.

"Evolution" in Sacrifice

"Those who advocate revolutionary ideas, either in government, in scholarship or in religion, must show good cause and their arguments must possess overwhelming force. The proof must be clear, strong and conclusive, without a shadow of suspicion in its reality or its sufficiency." None can gainsay the reasonableness of this demand put forward by an impartial judge of the Critical views, nor the lamentable failure of those views to meet this reasonable demand. "But," it is said, "these new views are in line with the principle of Evolution. In ritual, as in everything else, the more developed must be later than the less developed, out of which, on the principle of Evolution, it has gradually grown. As the Priestly code (Leviticus and Numbers) shows the most ramified sacrificial enactments, it must be the latest of all the documents of the Pentateuch." We are even told that there is a clear evolution from the simple to the complex in sacrifice, a straight line of development from the Prophetic document (JE) to Deuteronomy (D), from Deuteronomy (D) to Ezekiel, and from Ezekiel to the Priestly code (P).

If there ever was an instance when the saying was true that "theories are vast soap-bubbles with which the grown-up children of Learning amuse themselves, while the ignorant public stand gazing on and dignify these vagaries by the name of Science," that instance is Evolution in sacrifice. In the first place, the straight line of evolution—JE, D, Ezekiel and P—turns out to be anything but straight. It is now generally admitted by the Critics that the "Priestly code"—or at any rate its most important constituent, the Holiness chapters—is far from being the latest of the series. Instead of being the culmination of the chain, it is the source of Ezekiel. Ezekiel is saturated with the phraseology of Leviticus XVII-XXVI, and he takes for granted an acquaintance therewith on the part of his Babylonian hearers. But Leviticus is not only older than Ezekiel's half-ideal and half-allegorical vision of the constitution of the New Jerusalem, it is older than Deuteronomy; for the law of leprosy in Lev. XIII is the basis of Deuteronomy XXIV, 8, and Deuteronomy XII presupposes Lev. XVII.

In the second place, the whole idea of evolution does not apply to a field of human history like the institution of sacrifice. In the realm of language, for example, it is not true to say that, on the one hand, the more simple the language, the more primitive it is; nor, on the other hand, the more complex it is, the later is its appearance in the life or any ethnic group. Thus, Anglo-Saxon, with its five cases and eight declensions of the noun, is immeasurably more complicated than its direct lineal descendant, modern English; even as Latin is far more complex than Italian. The same holds true in the development of ritual laws. Besides, the statement that Leviticus must be the latest sacrificial legislation, because its ritual laws are the most elaborate, is quite against the evidence of primitive cultures. "It does not appear that very simple systems of law and observance do belong to very primitive societies, but rather the contrary" (Rawlinson).

The case for "evolution" in Biblical sacrifice is furthermore based by its advocates on a series of dogmatic assumptions which are not only not borne out by the facts but are in direct contradiction of the facts. Among those unwarranted assumptions are the following: that in ancient Israel every slaughter for food was an act of sacrificial worship; that originally there was unlimited freedom of altar-building; that early sacrifices were all joyful feasts, with a total absence of any underlying reference to sin; and that sin and guilt offerings are late inventions, the fruit of the "monotonous seriousness" of the so-called Priestly code.

Hoffmann, Wiener and especially Baxter in his masterly Sanctuary and Sacrifice, have subjected these assumptions to an annihilating examination and shown their utter falsity.

As to sacrifice and slaughter being absolutely synonymous terms, Wiener refers to Exod. xxi, 37 ("If a man steal an ox, or a sheep, and kill it"), and he asks, Does the Legislator contemplate the sacrifice of stolen animals and of places made holy as the result? To ask the question is to reveal the utter absurdity of the Critical contention on this point.

To proceed to the next assumption of the Critics. The statement that there was unrestricted altar-building, and consequent multiplicity of sanctuaries in ancient Israel, rests upon a mistranslation of Exodus xx, 24. בכל המקום does not mean, "in every place," but "in whatever place" (Graetz). That is, in whatever place God would designate for worship—Shiloh, Gibeon, Jerusalem—an altar might be erected, and sacrificial worship would there be considered legitimate. Such permission of successive places of worship, till the building of the Central Sanctuary in Jerusalem, is something quite different from a recognition of simultaneous sanctuaries in different places.

The charge that the strict regulations concerning the sacrificial cult killed all the spontaneous joy which characterised ancient Israelite worship, implies a partiality on the part of the Critics for the lawless licence, foul sensuality and unrestrained jollity of the heathen merry-makings—half-sacrifices, half-picnics—that were not infrequent in times of national apostasy. For nothing is further from the truth than to say that the Torah did, or does, kill joy. One commandment alone—that concerning Tabernacles, and found in the so-called Priestly code—would be sufficient to refute this. "And ye shall take you on the first day the fruit of goodly trees, branches of palm trees, and boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook: and ye shall rejoice before the Lord your God seven days." (Lev. xxiii, 40). The very men whom the Critics would turn into the makers of the "Priestly code" soothe the people when weeping over their sins on that historic New Year's Day (Nehemiah viii) with the words: "This day is holy unto the Lord your God; mourn not nor weep. Go your way, eat the fat and drink the sweet, and send portions to the poor: for the joy of the Lord is your strength."

Even more astounding is the statement, in effect, that the sense of sin was unknown in Israel before the days of Ezra! It is sufficient to point to the agonised cry in Micah vi, 6 and 7:—

> "Wherewith shall I come before the LORD . . . .
> Shall I give my firstborn for my transgression,
> The fruit of my body for the sin of my soul?"

Surely, if the semi-heathen worshipper of whom Micah speaks felt such a sense of guilt, the loyal Israelite did not have to wait for Ezra to invent sin and guilt offerings to ease his soul. And were not penitential psalms written in Babylon some two thousand years before Ezra's date? So far from sin and guilt offerings being of quite late date, they are distinctly mentioned in pre-Exilic times (e.g., II Kings xii, 17); and, for that matter, are never mentioned in any post-Exilic Prophet. There is no truth whatsoever in the statements that P assigns "an enormous importance" to the sin offering, or that peace offerings were in post-Exilic times practically banished. In the most exhaustive sacrificial catalogue in the "Priestly Code" (Numbers vii), the other sacrifices outnumber sin offerings in the proportion of seventeen to one!

Probably the strangest argument of all for the lateness of P is, that Ezekiel and his circle wrote down from memory the pre-existent Temple usage; for "so long as the cult lasted, no sacrificial code was needed." This is contrary both to reason and historical analogy. It is contrary to reason to maintain "that the laws of sacrificial worship should have first been written down, or even invented, during the Exile in Babylon, when there was no longer any sacrificial worship" (Dillmann). It is also contrary to historical analogy. Written regulations for the existing sacrificial cult existed in Egypt, Babylonia and Phoenicia.

One concluding consideration. Sacrificial usages and traditions such as we find in Leviticus are not confined to Israel, but are admittedly very ancient, going back to pre-Mosaic times. The Critics themselves tell us that sacrifice was of old the natural and universal expression of religious homage; that religion without sacrificial cult was unthinkable throughout antiquity; and they admit that "heathen sacrificial worship was a constant menace to morals and monotheism" (Wellhausen). If, therefore, there was any Divine choice of Israel at all, and if Moses can be spoken of as Israel's God-sent Leader out of physical and spiritual bondage, is it not of all things the most natural that Israel's manner of Divine Service should through him be freed from everything foul, cruel, immoral and idolatrous? (Baxter). But for such regulation at the hand of Moses, of what is admitted by all to have been the universal expression of religious homage, his mission would assuredly have failed. Without the Legislation which was eventually to banish everything debasing either to morals or monotheism from sacrificial worship, his work would have disappeared in the sands of the desert; with that Legislation, it issues in eternity.

THE HAFTORAHS

FOR

THE BOOK OF LEVITICUS.

Before reading the Lesson from the Prophets, the following is said by the Maftir :—

Before reading the Lesson from the Prophets, the following is said by the Maftir :—

Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the universe, who hast chosen good prophets, and hast found pleasure in their words which were spoken in truth.

Blessed art thou, O Lord, who hast chosen the Law, and Moses thy servant, and Israel thy people, and prophets of truth and righteousness.

[Sephardim conclude each Haftorah with the words :—

After the Lesson from the Prophets, the Maftir says the following :—

Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the universe, Rock of all worlds, righteous through all generations, O faithful God, who sayest and doest, who speakest and fulfillest, all whose words are truth and righteousness. Faithful art thou, O Lord our God, and faithful are thy words, and not one of thy words shall return void, for thou art a faithful and merciful God and King. Blessed art thou, O Lord, God, who art faithful in all thy words.

Have mercy upon Zion, for it is the home of our life, and save her that is grieved in spirit speedily, even in our days. Blessed art thou, O Lord, who makest Zion joyful through her children.

Gladden us, O Lord our God, with Elijah the prophet, thy servant, and with the kingdom of the house of David, thine anointed. Soon may he come and rejoice our hearts. Suffer not a stranger to sit upon his throne, nor let others any longer inherit his glory ; for by thy holy name thou didst swear unto him, that his light should not be quenched for ever. Blessed art thou, O Lord, the Shield of David.

For the Law, for the divine service, for the prophets, and for this Sabbath day, which thou, O Lord our God, hast given us for holiness and for rest, for honour and for glory,—for all these we thank and bless thee, O Lord our God, blessed be thy name by the mouth of every living being continually and for ever. Blessed art thou, O Lord, who sanctifiest the Sabbath.

Isaiah XLIII, 21–XLIV, 23

The Sedrah presents detailed instructions of service in the Tabernacle leading to obedience to God. The Haftorah deplores Israel's neglect of all worship. It is addressed to the Jews deported to Babylon after the first destruction of Jerusalem. Israel has been utterly careless of God : but He, for his own sake, forgives Israel's iniquities, redeems Jacob, and will glorify Himself in Israel.

These chapters form part of the second half of the Book of Isaiah (see Genesis, p. 435). The question of their authorship will be discussed in the volume on Deuteronomy, as nearly all of its Haftorahs are taken from that portion of Isaiah.

21–25. The Mission of Israel

21. the people which I formed for myself. Or, " this people have I formed for myself " (Ibn Ezra ; AV). Israel is an essential part of creation. By its life and history, Israel is to set forth the existence of spiritual values and a Divine purpose in the Universe : without which spiritual values, life would be meaningless ; and without which Divine purpose, the material Universe would, morally speaking, be no better than primeval chaos, tohu va-bohu.

hast not called upon me, O Jacob; but thou that they shall set forth my praise. Through their righteousness to which worship of God should lead them, and through the Divine purpose revealed in their history. The proclamation and advancement of God's honour is the sole reason of Israel's existence.

22–25. But Israel failed to serve God, and showed ingratitude instead of thankful praise. Not as a reward for the offerings it has brought, but in spite of sins punished and now freely forgiven, is God's mercy to be shown to Israel.

22. not called upon me. They did not seek God in prayer. As in many modern circles to-day, there was then an alarming subsidence of the sense of worship. "The statement is of course general, and is doubtless true of the majority of exiles; it does not exclude the existence of a believing minority which poured out its heart in prayer to God" (Cheyne).

thou hast been weary of me. As in the days of Micah (vi, 3) and Malachi (i, 13), Israel became weary of its Faith and Law. There are epochs in Jewish history when men's souls are parched and dry, when Israel forgets God, and a weariness of everything appertaining to Jewish Duty and Destiny takes possession of Israel's spirit.

23. the small cattle. lit. "the sheep"; the daily morning and evening sacrifice.

I have not made thee to serve with offerings. Though on Babylonian soil no sacrifice could be offered, yet the attitude of mind and heart of which the sacrifices were to be but the outward symbol, is absent from the life of the people. This verse is often misunderstood. There is here no repudiation of sacrifice (Duhm); otherwise, it would destroy the whole sense of the Prophet's reproach (Marti). The Prophet addresses the people in Babylonian Exile, when the whole sacrificial system is suspended (Ibn Ezra). Though God does not there impose burdensome sacrifices upon Israel, nevertheless they do not call upon His Name. See Additional Note A, "Do the Prophets Oppose Sacrifice?" p. 44.

satiated me with the fat. See Lev. III, 3. A bold anthropomorphism.

thou hast made me to serve with thy sins. An even bolder anthropomorphism. Instead of loyal obedience, Israel not only took its whole duty to God lightly, but laid on Him the load of its aggravated guilt. He was compelled to mete out punishment when He yearned to scatter salvation.

25. I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions. I, against whom ye have sinned, will forgive you spontaneously, and unsought for. "A verse of perfect tenderness, which reveals the tragedy of all sin. The pathos of the situation is that Israel has despised love, a love which forgave and will still forgive" (Skinner).

hast been weary of me, O Israel. 23. Thou hast not brought me the small cattle of thy burnt offerings; neither hast thou honoured me with thy sacrifices. I have not made thee to serve with offerings, nor wearied thee with frankincense. 24. Thou hast bought me no sweet cane with money, neither hast thou satiated me with the fat of thy sacrifices: but thou hast made me to serve with thy sins, thou hast wearied me with thine iniquities. 25. I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake; and I will not remember thy sins. 26. Put me in remembrance; let us plead together:
set thou forth thy cause, that thou mayest be for mine own sake. Because God is merciful and gracious, forgiving iniquity, transgression and sin (Exod. xxxiv, 6f), God Himself takes the initiative in blotting out Israel's transgressions. This is an advance on the teaching even of Hosea and Jeremiah. To Isaiah, God is tender as a mother, (chap. lxvi, 13) with spontaneous and unconditional and unquenchable love. "For Mine own sake" may have the additional meaning, "that My Name be not profaned." God will restore Israel, not because Israel deserved restoration, but because God's Glory demanded it. This restoration will, however, be accompanied by spiritual renewal; see the Haftorah of Sabbath Parah, p. 456.

v. 25 embodies the fundamental proclamation of Judaism that there is no other Saviour beyond God. R. Akiba deepened and enlarged this teaching in the words: "Happy are ye, O Israel! Before Whom do you purify yourselves and Who is it that purifieth you? Your Father Who is in Heaven."

26–28. God Offers Israel a Free Pardon: Israel Hesitates to Admit the Need of It

1–5. PROMISE OF REVIVAL

Israel's weariness of God is only a passing phase in its history. Even as trees and plants, withered by drought, interpreters have transgressed against me. 28.

Therefore I have profaned the holy princes, and I have made Jacob a devoted thing, and Israel fall of the idolatrous nations; or, "the people of antiquity," the first inhabitants of the world (Ibn Ezra). 8. Rock. Striking figure for God as Refuge and Shelter; cf. Isa. XXVI, 4.

9–20. THE ABSURDITY OF IDOL-MAKING

The prophet repeatedly returns to this theme because, it seems, idolatry had not yet altogether ceased among the exiles; or, readiness "to come to terms" with idolatry "began to make itself felt among the younger generation born in Babylon."

of a man, to dwell in the house. 14. He heweth him down cedars, and taketh the holm tree and the oak, and strengtheneth for himself one among the trees of the forest: he planteth a fir tree, and the rain doth nourish it. 15. Then shall it be for a man to burn; and he taketh thereof, and warmeth himself; yea, he kindleth it, and baketh bread: yea, he maketh a god, and worshippeth
it; he maketh it a graven image, and falleth down

14–17. The Prophet now traces the history of the idol back to the choosing of the wood. The workman uses part of the tree to make a fire, to warm himself and cook his meals, and with the remainder he makes a god!

14. strengtheneth. Reareth.

JEREMIAH VII, 21–VIII, 3; IX, 22, 23

7 21. Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel: Add your burnt offerings unto your sacrifices, and eat ye flesh. 22. For I spake not

It was spoken by Jeremiah in the year 608 B.C.E. to some solemn gathering of the people in the Temple-area. His denunciation of mere mechanical performance of acts of worship; of the superstition that the Temple ritual could be a guarantee of security, while the people were divorced from obedience to the Moral Law; and his prediction of national disaster, which only whole-hearted repentance could avert, infuriated both priests and people, and placed him in imminent risk of death (see Jer. XXVI).

21–28. God ever demanded obedience rather than sacrifice, but Israel has not taken to heart this teaching.

21. add your burnt-offerings . . . and eat ye flesh. Burnt-offerings were wholly consumed in the flames of the Altar and were not to be eaten by the worshipper (Lev. I, 9). The Prophet bids the people treat them as if, like peace-offerings, they could be eaten by the worshipper. "For all God cares"—he in effect says to them—"you may eat the one along with the other, because both burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, when offered by guilty hands, have no value in His eyes"! They are then merely so much "flesh," having no sacred significance whatsoever.

22. I spake not . . . . . concerning burnt offerings. The commandments that God gave to Israel at the Going out of Egypt were the laws at Sinai; and the laws of sacrifice are not among the laws of primary importance that constitute the Decalogue. עיקר המצוה לא היתה על דברי עולה וזבח אלא שמעו בקולי והייתם לי לעם (Kimchi) Others regard this verse as merely an extreme antithetical expression of the truth that "to obey is better than sacrifice" (I Sam. xv, 22). The Prophet proclaims that sacrifice can be no substitute for justice and mercy, and that, compared with the latter, it is altogether of minor importance. But Jeremiah by no means opposed sacrifice brought in the right spirit. In his picture of the Restoration (Jer. xxxiii, 18), due place is given to Temple worship and priestly sacrifices. See Additional Note A, Do the Prophets oppose Sacrifice? p. 44.

Jeremiah's passionate conviction that the moral laws should have precedence over ceremonial law was at no time altogether lost sight of in Israel. This is recognised even by some Christian commentators. "In general it may be said the obedience to the Moral Law always ranked first, and sacrifices were, as is here taught, wholly worthless when offered by the immoral. The Jews read in their Services day that I brought them out of the land of Egypt,

this thing I commanded them, saying, Hearken unto my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people: and walk ye in all the way that I command you, that it may be well with you.
24. But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear, but walked in their own counsels and in the stubbornness of their evil heart, and went backward and not forward. 25. Since the day that your fathers came forth out of the land of Egypt unto this day, I have sent unto you all my servants
the prophets, daily rising up early and sending them: 26. yet they hearkened not unto me, nor inclined their ear, but made their neck stiff:

During the long reign of that king, heathendom became the established religion in Jerusalem. All the foul impurities, gruesome rites, and unspeakable practices of ancient idolatry were fostered; the laws and precepts of Israel alone were proscribed. Shameful images were erected in the Temple itself.

to burn their sons. Moloch-worship was introduced. The fact that the neighbouring nations—Phoenicians and Moabites—sacrificed their first-born to their gods, was sufficient reason for Manasseh and the worldly-minded among the Israelites to imitate the horrors of religious savagery.

neither came it into my mind. It seems that the "Progressives" of that day even quoted Scripture for their purpose, and distorted the ancient command concerning the first-born in order to support their hideous innovations.

family. Poetically used for "people."

CHAPTER IX, 22, 23

In order that the Haftorah close on a note of encouragement, these verses are added, which give the practical conclusion drawn from God's righteous dealings with His people. The people have been trusting in false values. It is not the wiles of statecraft, strong battalions, or vast wealth that are the real and permanent foundations of a national life; as little as worldly wisdom, power, and riches, are in themselves the guarantors of happiness or peace in the life of the individual.

23. let him that glorieth glory in this. If one must glory one should at least glory not in ephemeral things but in rather than life by all the residue that remain of this evil family, which remain in all the places whither I have driven them, saith the LORD of hosts.

9 °22. Thus saith the LORD, Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might, let not the rich man glory in his riches: 23. but let him that glorieth glory
in this, that he understandeth, and knoweth me, that I am the LORD which exercise lovingkindness, judgement, and righteousness, in the earth: for in these things I delight, saith the LORD.

II Samuel VI, 1–VII, 17

After restoring the unity of the nation, David consolidated it by establishing a capital, Jerusalem. But that impregnable natural fastness was destined to be far more than the royal residence of Judah and the political centre of the tribes of Israel. "She was to be the City of God; and this sacred character, which has been hers ever since, was stamped upon her by David himself. His vision went beyond the immediate foundation to the issues that lay in time to come" (Marx-Margolis). It was his first care to bring back the sacred Ark from the out-of-the-way country town to which, a generation earlier, the Philistine conquerors had taken it, and to install it in his newly acquired capital.

The Sedrah describes the consecration of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness; the Haftorah tells of the transportation of the Ark of the Covenant. An untoward and tragic incident marks both Sedrah and Haftorah. The death of Nadab and Abihu in the Sedrah is a warning that no kind of caprice can be tolerated in the service of God. The same lesson is enforced in the Haftorah by the death of Uzzah, who was guilty of irreverence towards God's Majesty.

from thence the ark of God, whereupon is called

2. from Baale Judah. The phrase is an abbreviated one, meaning, "They went from Baale Judah whither they had come to bring thence the Ark" (Kimchi). Baale Judah is another name for Kirjath-jearim (i.e. the City of Forests), about half-way between Jerusalem and Ashdod near the Mediterranean coast.

7. and God smote him there. For this act of undue familiarity. The regulations surrounding Tabernacle and Temple were to deepen the sense of God's Holiness and of reverence for Him. The Ark was in especial degree the sign of His Presence. "It has been surmised that Uzzah was crushed by a sudden and violent movement of the waggon bearing the Ark" (Ottley).

8. and David was displeased. Unlike Aaron who submitted to God's will in silence, David resented the judgment which God had inflicted, and in a petulant spirit abandoned the enterprise.

brought it out of the house of Abinadab, which was in the hill, with the ark of God: and Ahio went before the ark. 5. And David and all the house of Israel played before the LORD with all manner of instruments made of cyprus wood, and with harps and with psalteries, and with timbrels, and with castanets, and with cymbals.
6. And when they came to the threshing-floor of Nacon, Uzzah put forth his hand to the ark of God, and took hold of it; for the oxen were restive. 7. And the anger of the LORD was kindled against Uzzah; and God smote him there for his rashness; and there he died by the ark of God. 8. And David was displeased, because the LORD had broken forth upon Uzzah: and he called that place Perez-uzzah, unto this day. 9.
And David was afraid of the LORD that day;
and he said, How shall the ark of the LORD come unto me? 10. So David would not remove the ark of the LORD unto him into the city of David;
but David carried it aside into the house of Obed-edom the Gittite. 11. And the ark of the LORD remained in the house of Obed-edom the Gittite three months; and the LORD blessed Obed-edom, and all his house. 12. And it was told king David, saying, The LORD hath blessed the house of Obed-edom, and all that pertaineth unto him, because of the ark of God. And David went and brought up the ark of God from the house of Obed-edom into the city of David with joy. 13. And it was so, that when they that he sacrificed an ox. Because he saw his action now did not incur Divine displeasure. All were again swayed by religious joy. David himself flung aside all the ordinary restraints of royalty.

14-19. In a great popular celebration in which the king himself took a leading part, the Ark is brought to Jerusalem. Many are of opinion that the words of Psalm XXIV,

> Lift up your heads, O ye gates;
> And be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors:
> That the King of Glory shall come in,

were composed and sung on the occasion of that great celebration.

bare the ark of the LORD had gone six paces, he sacrificed an ox and a fatling. 14. And David danced before the LORD with all his might; and David was girded with a linen ephod. 15. So David and all the house of Israel brought up the ark of the LORD with shouting, and with the sound of the trumpet. 16. And it was so, as the ark of the LORD came into the city of David, that Michal the daughter of Saul looked out at the window, and saw king David leaping and dancing before the LORD; and she despised him in her heart. 17. And they brought in the ark of the LORD, and set it in its place, in the midst of the tent that David had pitched for it: and David offered burnt offerings and peace offerings before the LORD. 18. And when David had made an end of offering the burnt offering and the peace offerings, he blessed the people in the name of the LORD of hosts. 19. And he dealt among all the people, even among the whole multitude of Israel, both to men and women, to every one a cake of bread, and a portion of wine, and a cake of raisins. So all the people departed every one to his house. (Sephardim conclude here).

vain fellows. Worthless fellows. She had the folly to despise, and the cruelty to ridicule, him.

David's desire to build a Temple. The Prophet's message is that not David shall build a house unto God, but God shall build a "house" (i.e. a dynasty) for David.

20. Then David returned to bless his household.
And Michal the daughter of Saul came out to meet David, and said, How glorious was the king of Israel to-day, who uncovered himself to-day in the eyes of the handmaids of his servants,
as one of the vain fellows shamelessly uncovereth himself! 21. And David said unto Michal, It was before the LORD, which chose me above thy father, and above all his house, to appoint me
prince over the people of the LORD, over Israel:
therefore will I play before the LORD. 22. And I will be yet more vile than thus, and will be base in mine own sight; but of the handmaids which thou hast spoken of, of them shall I be had in honour. 23. And Michal the daughter of Saul had no child unto the day of her death.
7 1. And it came to pass, when the king dwelt in his house, and the LORD had given him rest from all his enemies round about, 2. That the king said unto Nathan the prophet, See now, I dwell in an house of cedar, but the ark of God dwelleth

v. 4. פסקא באמצע פסוק

3. go, do all that is in thine heart. Nathan speaks here as a courtier, as one who saw that David was filled with a worthy desire to honour God. That same night he receives the Divine message to David.

5. shalt thou build? i.e. thou shalt not build. He was not the man to build; he had been, perforce, too much engaged in warfare, had shed too much human blood; I Chron. XXII, 8. Moreover, in spite of appearances, the kingdom was not yet sufficiently safe from hostile efforts to overthrow it, to justify the great undertaking of building a worthy national Temple.

8. the pasture. lit. "the habitation," i.e. of the sheep and, therefore, the sheep-pen. But more likely the habitation of the shepherd, the shepherd's hut, is intended.

king, Go, do all that is in thine heart; for the LORD is with thee. 4. And it came to pass the same night, that the word of the LORD came unto Nathan, saying, 5. Go and tell my servant David, Thus saith the LORD, Shalt thou build me an house for me to dwell in? 6. For I have not dwelt in an house since the day that I brought up the children of Israel out of Egypt, even to this day, but have walked in a tent and in a tabernacle. 7. In all places wherein I have walked with all the children of Israel, spake I a word with any of the tribes of Israel, whom I commanded to feed my people Israel, saying, Why have ye not built me an house of cedar? 8. Now therefore thus shalt thou say unto my servant David, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, I took thee from the pasture, from following the sheep, that thou shouldest be leader over my people, over Israel:
9. And I have been with thee whithersoever thou wentest, and have cut off all thine enemies from before thee; and I will make thee a great name, like unto the name of the great ones that are in the earth. 10. And I will appoint a place for my people Israel, and will plant them, that they may dwell in their own place, and be moved no more; neither shall the children of wickedness afflict them any more, as at the first. 11. And as

17 יִהְיֶה נָכוֹן עַד־עוֹלָם׃ כְּכֹל הַדְּבָרִים הָאֵלֶּה וּכְכֹל הַחִזָּיוֹן הַזֶּה כֵּן דִּבֶּר נָתָן אֶל־דָּוִד׃

11. make thee an house. Establish your family as a dynasty.

12. thy seed. This Divine promise was especially welcome in view of the insecurity of dynasties in Eastern counties, and the fearful tragedies that were often perpetrated to get rid of the old king's family (Blaikie).

13. he shall build an house. The word he is emphatic, and of course refers to Solomon.

14. with the rod of men. i.e. such chastisement as men inflict upon their children to correct and reclaim them, not to destroy them (Speaker's Bible).

16. shall be made sure. i.e. permanently established. The Davidic family reigned without interruption for 347 years. It was restored to rulership after the Exile, and continued to the end of the Maccabean dynasty. In the days of the Roman Empire and well into the Middle Ages, the "Patriarchs" of Palestine and Exilarchs of Babylonia prided themselves on their Davidic descent.

"David is the most luminous figure and the most gifted personage in Israelitish history, surpassed in ethical greatness and general historical importance only by Moses, the man of God. He is one of those phenomenal men such as Providence gives but once to a people, in whom from the day that I commanded judges to be over my people Israel; and I have caused thee to rest from all thine enemies. Moreover the LORD telleth thee that the LORD will make thee an house. 12. When thy days be fulfilled, and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, I will set up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish his kingdom.

13. He shall build an house for my name, and I will establish the throne of his kingdom for ever.
14. I will be his father, and he shall be my son: if he commit iniquity, I will chasten him with the rod of men, and with the stripes of the children of men; 15. but my mercy shall not depart from him, as I took it from Saul, whom I put away before thee. 16. And thine house and thy kingdom shall be made sure for ever before thee: thy throne shall be established for ever. 17. According to all these words, and according to all this vision, so did Nathan speak unto David.

a whole nation and its history reaches once for all its climax. True, the picture of David does not lack the traits of human frailty, which Israelitish tradition, with a truly admirable sincerity, has neither suppressed nor palliated; but the charm which this personality exercised over all contemporaries without exception has not yet faded for us of later day. The king, who did more for the worldly greatness and earthly power of Israel than any one else, was a genuine Israelite in that he appreciated also Israel's religious destiny: he was no soldier-king, no conqueror of common stamp, no ruler like any one of a hundred others, but he is the truest incorporation of the distinctive character of Israel—a unique personality in the history of the world" (Cornill).

II Kings IV, 42–V, 19

The Haftorah of this and of the succeeding Sedrah bring incidents from the cycle of tales describing the activities of the Prophet Elisha. There is little resemblance between him and the sublime, storm-compelling personality of his great Master. Unlike Elijah, "he was the friend and counsellor of kings. His deeds were not of wild terror, but of gracious, soothing, homely beneficence, bound up with the ordinary tenor of human life" (Stanley). Many of these tales give us interesting glimpses into the social life of Israel in his day; e.g. the stories that form the Haftorah of Vayyera, Genesis, 456. Our Haftorah brings two stories—one in which, during the great famine, the scanty bread of a poor man's offering is multiplied, so that Elisha is enabled to feed a hundred of the "sons of the prophets"; and the other, the story of the captain of Syria's host, who is cured of his leprosy by Elisha. This incident connects with the Sedrah which deals with the diagnosis and treatment of that disease.

IV. THAZRIA

II Kings iv, 42–v, 19

4 42. And there came a man from Baal-shalishah, and brought the man of God bread of the firstfruits, twenty loaves of barley, and fresh ears of corn in his sack. And he said, Give unto the people, that they may eat. 43. And his servant said, What, should I set this before an hundred men? But he said, Give the people, that they may eat; for thus saith the Lord, They shall eat, and shall leave thereof. 44. So he set it before them, and they did eat, and left thereof, according to the word of the Lord.
5 1. Now Naaman, captain of the host of the king of Syria, was a great man with his master, and honourable, because by him the Lord had given victory unto Syria: he was also a mighty man of valour, but he was a leper. 2. And the Syrians give unto the people. i.e. to the disciples, the "sons of the prophets," who were with him (v. 38).

43. should I set this. i.e. is it not too little for them?

CHAPTER V. THE HEALING OF NAAMAN

1. but he was a leper. A famous general, great and honoured in the land, but a leper; the but's of life can be even more grim and heart-breaking than its if's. There was fame and power—and leprosy. It is unlikely that Naaman was a much-envied man. As Naaman retained his command, the malady could not have reached an advanced stage.

2. in bands. In marauding bands, raiding the territory of Israel even when no formal war existed between the two peoples. Since the death of Solomon, Syria had become a persistent and implacable foe to Israel.

3. recover. Cure; lit. "receive him back"—as the cured leper was received back into the camp and city life from which he had been excluded (Kimchi).

5. took with him. As a gift to the Prophet who, as we learn later, would receive nothing at his hands.

ten talents of silver. A very large sum.

6. recover him of his leprosy. By using his influence with the Prophet. Only the main point of the letter is quoted. The king of Israel is addressed as a vassal.

7. rent his clothes. As at the receipt of bad news. The king trembles at the Syrian's demand, and thinks he is seeking a pretext for war.

had gone out in bands, and had brought away captive out of the land of Israel a little maid; and she waited on Naaman's wife. 3. And she said unto her mistress, Would God my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria! then would he recover him of his leprosy. 4. And he went in, and told his lord, saying, Thus and thus said the maid that is of the land of Israel. 5.
And the king of Syria said, Go to, go, and I will send a letter unto the king of Israel. And he departed, and took with him ten talents of silver, and six thousand pieces of gold, and ten changes of raiment. 6. And he brought the letter to the king of Israel saying, And now when this letter is come unto thee, behold, I have sent Naaman
my servant to thee, that thou mayest recover him of his leprosy. 7. And it came to pass when the king of Israel had read the letter, that he rent his clothes, and said, Am I God, to kill and to make alive, that this man doth send unto me to recover a man of his leprosy? but consider, I pray you, and see how he seeketh a quarrel against me.

8. And it was so, when Elisha the man of God heard that the king of Israel had rent his clothes, that he sent to the king, saying, Wherefore hast thou rent thy clothes? let him come now to me, and he shall know that there is a prophet in Israel.
9. So Naaman came with his horses and with his chariots, and stood at the door of the house of Elisha. 10. And Elisha sent a messenger unto him, saying, Go and wash in Jordan seven times,

v. 9. בסוסיו ק v. 12. אמנה ק

11. Naaman was wroth. Elisha did not come out to him, and Naaman was enraged that the Prophet was no respecter of persons—in his case. He was especially annoyed at the simplicity of the remedy : he expected the Prophet to come out and play the wonder-worker.

12. Amanah and Pharpar. His patriotic pride is wounded: why was he bidden to wash in that wretched, turbid, tortuous stream—the Jordan—rather than in the pure and flowing waters of his own native Amanah and Pharpar ?.

The Prophet's bidding has a wider meaning than the ephemeral counsel to the ancient Syrian general. Whenever mankind seeks to be cured of moral leprosy, it can gain that cure only in Jordan, only in the rivers of Jewish inspiration and thy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean. 11. But Naaman was wroth, and he went away, and said, Behold, I thought,

He will surely come out to me, and stand, and call on the name of the LORD his God, and wave his hand over the place, and recover the leper.
12. Are not Amanah and Pharpar, the rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel?
may I not wash in them, and be clean? So he turned and went away in a rage. 13. And his servants came near, and spake unto him, and said, My father, if the prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldest thou not have done it?
how much rather then, when he saith to thee, Wash, and be clean? 14. Then went he down, and dipped himself seven times in Jordan, according to the saying of the man of God: and his flesh came again like unto the flesh of a little child, and he was clean.

15. And he returned to the man of God, he and all his company, and came, and stood before him: and he said, Behold now, I know that there is no God in all the earth, but in Israel: now and teaching. The waters of India and Greece, of Italy and Germany, may be far greater, stronger, clearer; but they cannot restore moral health to the ailing soul of man. In the crises of life, whether of the individual or of humanity, we turn not to the Vedas or Homer, nor to Dante or Goethe, but to the Book of the Psalms.

15. he returned. Naaman was grateful. "It is difficult to conceive the transport of a man cured of this most loathsome and humiliating of all earthly afflictions" (Farrar).

v. 18. כתיב ולא ק

take a present. Accustomed to the ways of heathen priests, he could not imagine that so great a service would be rendered to a wealthy applicant without monetary reward.

16. I will receive none. Like Abraham, who would not take even a "shoe-latchet" from the people he befriended (Gen. XIV, 23).

17. two mules' burden of earth. i.e. of the Holy Land, for constructing an altar to the God of Israel in Syria. Naaman held the heathen view that a deity was only powerful in the country which recognised him; and, therefore, that, outside of Palestine, God could only be worshipped o. soil from Israel's land!

18. bow myself in the house of Rimmon. Though he knows that the Lord God of Israel is the only living God, he must accompany his master on state occasions to the temple of his god Rimmon. The phrase, to bow in the house of Rimmon, has thus become proverbial to indicate unwilling and perfunctory homage, or dangerous and dishonest compromise.

therefore, I pray thee, take a present of thy servant. 16. But he said, As the LORD liveth, before whom I stand, I will receive none. And he urged him to take it; but he refused. 17. And Naaman said, If not, yet I pray thee let there be given to thy servant two mules' burden of earth; for thy servant will henceforth offer neither burnt offering nor sacrifice unto other gods, but unto the LORD. 18. In this thing the LORD pardon thy servant; when my master goeth into the house of Rimmon to worship there, and he leaneth on my hand, and I bow myself in the house of Rimmon, when I bow myself in the house of Rimmon, the LORD pardon thy servant in this thing. 19. And he said unto him, Go in peace. So he departed from him a little way.

19. go in peace. Elisha neither approves nor disapproves. Probably he did not wish to place too great a strain upon the devotion of the new convert. The phrase, "go in peace" means lit. "go towards peace." In the ideology of our Sages, the whole of life is a journey towards Peace; only when life is completed has man reached life's goal and entered into real peace. Hence the formula when the mortal remains are committed to the grave: "May he come to his place in peace."

METZORA

II Kings VII, 3–20

The theme of this Haftorah is again an incident in the life of Elisha during the siege of Samaria by the Syrians. It tells of four lepers who were facing death in that time of horror. All available food had been consumed, and even the refuse of the streets was sold at famine prices. The inhabitants were in the last stages of despair, and the king learns of women who had arranged to use their children for food! He blames the Prophet Elisha for all these calamities, as the Prophet no doubt encouraged the people to continue the resistance, and the king is determined to put him to death. However, when faced by the Prophet, he is overawed. Elisha then makes the astonishing announcement that the very next day God would send relief, and the famine would be at an end. A courtier standing by breaks out in mockery at the prediction. Signal punishment is announced to overtake him for this act of unbelief.

3. at the entering in of the gate. Lepers were not permitted to live in the city. In the circumstances, they would naturally keep as near the entrance as possible.

V. METZORA

II Kings vii, 3–20

7 3. Now there were four leprous men at the entering in of the gate: and they said one to another, Why sit we here until we die? 4. If we say, We will enter into the city, then the famine is in the city, and we shall die there: and if we sit still here, we die also. Now therefore come, and let us fall unto the host of the Syrians: if they save us alive, we shall live; and if they kill us, we shall but die. 5. And they rose up in the twilight, to go unto the camp of the Syrians:
and when they were come to the outermost part of the camp of the Syrians, behold, there was no man there. 6. For the Lord had made the host power was in N. Syria, and Egypt was in the South. Accordingly the Syrians thought they were entrapped, and fled in confusion.

9. punishment will overtake us. lit. "guilt will find us," for having delayed to bring the good news to their starving brethren in the city. The Heb. word iniquity (עוון) connotes also punishment for iniquity.

10. the porters. The keepers of the city gate.

Israel hath hired against us the kings of the Hittites, and the kings of the Egyptians, to come upon us. 7. Wherefore they arose and fled in the twilight, and left their tents, and their horses, and their asses, even the camp as it was, and fled for their life. 8 And when these lepers came to the outermost part of the camp, they went into one tent, and did eat and drink, and carried thence silver, and gold, and raiment, and went and hid it; and they came back, and entered into another tent, and carried thence also, and went and hid it.

9. Then they said one to another, We do not well: this day is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace: if we tarry till the morning light, punishment will overtake us: now therefore come, let us go and tell the king's household. 10. So they came and called unto the porters of the city: and they told them, saying, We came to the camp of the Syrians, and, behold, there was no man there, neither voice of man, but the horses tied, and the asses tied, and the tents as they were. 11. And he called the porters; and they told it to the king's household within. 12. And the king arose in the night, and said unto his servants, I will now shew you what the Syrians have done to us. They know that we be hungry;

11. he called the porters. The guardians of the city gate called the guardians of the king's gate who told the news within the royal household (Ralbag).

ACHAREY MOS

Ezekiel XXII, 1–19

For Ezekiel's life and message, see Genesis, p. 508; Exodus, pp. 476 and 532; and the introductions to Haftorahs Parah and Hachodesh in this volume, pp. 450 and 456.

The Sedrah ordains strict regulations for assuring the religious and moral purity of Israel; while the Haftorah is a terrible indictment of Jerusalem for callous violation of these regulations and prohibitions. "The sins mentioned in Lev. xviii were those which disgraced the heathen inhabitants of Canaan whom the Israelites were to cast out. The commission of like sins would ensure like judgment" (Speaker's Bible). This Haftorah forms part of a prophecy delivered in 590 B.C.E. Four years later, the Jewish State fell, Jerusalem was captured, the Temple burnt, and the larger portion of the People carried into Babylonian exile.

Ezekiel's role in those times that tried men's souls was a manifold one. He began as the denouncer of Israel, and ended as Israel's comforter. It was his task to utter a cry of doom, unrelenting and fierce, against Jerusalem and its inhabitants. With the destruction of the Temple, however, he opens wide the gates of hope, and prophesies an outpouring of the Divine Spirit that would lead to contrition and penitence, and the consequent resurrection of Israel in the Holy Land.

The Fall of Jerusalem and the Destruction of the Temple

VI. ACHAREY MOS

EZEKIEL XXII, 1—19

22 1. Moreover the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, 2. And thou, son of man, wilt thou judge, wilt thou judge the bloody city? then cause her to know all her abominations. 3. And thou shalt say, Thus saith the Lord GOD: A city that sheddeth blood in the midst of her,
that her time may come, and that maketh idols against herself to defile her! 4. Thou art become guilty in thy blood that thou hast shed, and art defiled in thine idols which thou hast made;
and thou hast caused thy days to draw near,
and art come even unto thy years: therefore had left Israel spiritually stunned. Were the Israelites of that generation so morally degenerate—they asked—so especially godless as to have deserved nothing less than national annihilation and all the horrors of siege and exile? "The way of the LORD is not just," many were saying to themselves (Ezek. XVIII, 25). Israel was overwhelmed by doubt as to the existence of a Righteous Ruler of the Universe.

First of all, therefore, Ezekiel deemed it necessary to vindicate the ways of God with Israel. He passes in review the entire past of Israel; and, unlike the other Prophets, he declares it to have been one long chain of ingratitude and sin. The reason for the Prophet's pitiless vehemence is plain: it is only when Israel is sincerely repentant of its apostasies and abominations, it is only when Israel sees that its sufferings are the just chastisement of a holy God, that its redemption and resurrection can begin.

v. 4. למדנחאי עת כתיב עד ק ibid. כיא בגוים

A great danger faces the Prophet: he may succeed too well in his denunciation of his people and condemnation of its entire past (Cornill). He may end in planting despair in the hearts of the exiles, and make them exclaim, "If such has been Israel's past, Israel never deserved to live; and now that it is a valley of dry bones, Israel's story is at an end (Ezek. XXXVII, 11). 'Our hope is lost, we are clean cut off'." He meets that danger by striking two notes; one is that God desires not the destruction, but the repentance, of Israel. "Say unto them, As I live, saith the LORD God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live: turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?" And the other note is, that God's glory is bound up with the resurrection of Israel. God will restore them, not because Israel deserved restoration, but because God's glory demanded it; see p. 450.

The terrible earnestness of this great Preacher of Repentance wrought a wondrous change in Israel. The result of his ministry is, as C. G. Montefiore rightly says, unique in the history of humanity. A fragment of a small people, forcibly transplanted to an enemy's land, remains there for half-a-century without disintegrating or coalescing with its environment, and returns unimpaired to its own soil and resumes its own life, with national and religious identity heightened and strengthened by half a century of trial and suspense!

Everything most sacred in the Jewish life, and all that is the basis of human society, have been outraged—filial duty, justice, love of the stranger, compassion towards orphan and widow, observance of the Sabbath; and sins most sternly prohibited and regarded with utmost horror—usury and impure relationships—have been committed.

to shed blood. By form of law; see I Kings XXI. These crimes were the order of the day among other ancient peoples, and were looked upon as part of the normal course of human events. In Israel alone did there arise teachers of religion who were dumbfounded at human ferocity, as at something against nature and reason; and whose cry of indignation at these inhumanities re-echoed the wrath of the Deity. "Greece and Rome had their rich and poor, just as Israel had, and the various classes continued to slaughter one another for centuries; but no voice of justice and pity arose from the fierce tumult. Therefore, the words of the Prophets have more vitality at the present time, and answer better to the needs of modern souls, than all the classic masterpieces of antiquity" (Darmesteter).

12. taken bribes . . . oppression. These crimes have darkened Eastern societies since times immemorial; but Israel "should have known better."

12. hast forgotten me. All their degeneracy is summed up in this crowning sin, "They have forgotten Me, saith the Lord." This was the root of their evil doing. Forgetting Him, they returned to the lower moral standards of heathenism—something that is seen over and over again in Jewish history.

13–19. The Punishment

13. I have smitten mine hand. In grief.

14. can thine heart endure. The suffering that will result from thy transgressions.

15. consume thy filthiness out of thee. The chastisements of God are not vindictive, but intended to purge the nation of its sin.

16. thou shalt be profaned in thyself. Or, "thou shalt take thine inheritance" (AV; Kimchi), i.e. of punishment and shame.

and thou shalt know that I am the Lord. Punishment will purify you, and lead you to acknowledge Him as the God of Justice and Holiness.

18. dross. The people are to be tried in the furnace of affliction. Jerusalem, and all that it contains, will be subject to the fire of God's wrath. Only the dross will be burnt away. The purified remnant shall suvive the fire.

19. I will gather you. The certainty of the siege approaches, and the people from the surrounding country take refuge within the walls of Jerusalem (Lofthouse). In brief, the end is at hand.

13. Behold, therefore, I have smitten mine hand at thy dishonest gain which thou hast made, and at thy blood which hath been in the midst of thee. 14. Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong, in the days that I shall deal with thee? I the LORD have spoken it, and will do it. 15. And I will scatter thee among the nations, and disperse thee through the countries; and I will consume thy filthiness out of thee. 16. And thou shalt be profaned in thyself, in the sight of the nations; and thou shalt know that I am the LORD. (Sephardim conclude here).

17. And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, 18. Son of man, the house of Israel is become dross unto me: all of them are brass and tin and iron and lead, in the midst of the furnace; they are the dross of silver. 19. Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD: Because ye are all become dross, therefore behold, I will gather you into the midst of Jerusalem.

KEDOSHIM (FOR ASHKENAZIM)

Amos IX, 7–15

Amos lived in the days of King Jeroboam II, about 750 B.C.E. The master-word of existence to Amos is Righteousness, which to him, as to his successors, means holiness of life in the individual and the triumph of right in the world. In His dealings with men and nations, he proclaims; God has but one test—their loyalty to the laws of righteousness; and He judges them accordingly. See Genesis p. 498.

The opening of the Sedrah strikes the note of consecration in the individual life; and the Haftorah in its earlier verses is an oracle against those who have rejected that high Jewish ideal, and thereby bring about the downfall of the Kingdom. But Israel will yet be true to its high and holy ideal, and worthy of the blessings that follow in the wake of such loyalty.

7. as the children of the Ethiopians. Two great teachings are here enunciated. The first is: God has guided other nations as well as the Israelites. All races are equally dear to Him; and the hand of Providence is seen not only in the migration of Israel, but in every historical movement. The second teaching is, God's special relationship

Have not I brought up Israel out of the land of Egypt, and the Philistines from Caphtor, and the Syrians from Kir? 8. Behold, the eyes of the Lord God are upon the sinful kingdom, and I will destroy it from off the face of the earth;
saving that I will not utterly destroy the house

9. I will sift. The whole nation will be subjected to a winnowing process, yet no good grain will be lost. Only the sinners will disappear (v. 10).

Many Bible Critics maintain that the words of Amos end with the words, "I will destroy it from off the face of the earth" (v. 8), and deem the remainder of the book to be from a later hand. This view fails to do justice to the idea of prophecy or of the prophet's office. "For a prophet to close the entire volume of his prophecies without a single gleam of hope for a happier future, is very much opposed to the analogy of prophecy. Jeremiah and Ezekiel, for instance, blame Judah not less unsparingly than Amos blames Israel; but both nevertheless draw ideal pictures of the restored nation's future felicity" (Driver). "If Amos had altogether despaired of Israel's future, he would not have had what to prophesy, nor to whom to prophesy. One does not moralise to the dead. Every preacher believes in the possibility of betterment, if the sinner repent; and he hopes that his words will lead to such repentance and consequent betterment. Thus also Amos" (Klausner).

KEDOSHIM (FOR SEPHARDIM)

Ezekiel XX, 2–20

This retrospect of the early history of Israel in the Wilderness is the opening portion of the same prophecy from which the Haftorah of the preceding Sedrah is taken. It was spoken to the exiles who had ten years earlier been deported to Babylon, after the first capture of Jerusalem in 597 B.C.E. The impending destruction of the City is declared by the Prophet to be the wages for disloyalty to the "statutes and judgments" of which the 19th chapter of Leviticus in the Sedrah is so outstanding a summary; see the introductory note, pp. 382–384.

3. son of man. In the presence of the awful majesty of God, Ezekiel is ever conscious of his mortality. This phrase occurs nearly 100 times in Ezekiel.

to inquire of me. To consult Him through His prophet; probably in 589 B.C.E., about three years before the fall of gardens, and eat the fruit of them. 15. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be plucked up out of their land which I have given them, saith the LORD thy God.

EZEKIEL XX, 2—20.

20 2. And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, 3. Son of man, speak unto the elders of Israel, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD: Are ye come to inquire of me? As I live, saith the Lord GOD, I will not be inquired of by you. 4. Wilt thou judge them, son of man, wilt thou judge them? cause them to know the abominations of their fathers; 5. and say unto the Jewish State. The anxiety of the exiles was deepening over the ultimate fate of Judea and their own chance of returning to the Holy Land.

will not be inquired of by you. Because their act of inquiry was insincere, as the elders were themselves in secret sympathy with those of the exiles who were willing to become "good Babylonians" and give up the Jewish Life and Faith. In v. 32f of this same chapter, the Prophet exclaims: "And that which cometh into your mind shall not be at all; in that ye say, We will be as the nations, as the families of the countries, to serve wood and stone. As I live, saith the Lord GOD, surely with a mighty hand . . . will I be king over you."

4. judge them. Rehearsing the sins of the past with their consequences, as the people are still one in spirit and conduct with Israel in the past.

rebelled against me in the wilderness: they walked ments, which if a man do, he shall live by them;

I said I would pour out my fury upon them in

EMOR

Ezekiel XLIV, 15-31

The Haftorah is taken from the last portion of the Book of Ezekiel (xl-xlviii), which is a Vision of the New

in the wilderness, Walk ye not in the statutes of your fathers, neither observe their judgements, nor defile yourselves with their idols: 19. I am the LORD your God; walk in my statutes, and keep my judgements, and do them: 20. and hallow my sabbaths; and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the LORD your God.

44 15. But the priests the Levites, the sons of Zadok, that kept the charge of my sanctuary when the children of Israel went astray from Jerusalem and the New Temple that are to arise when the Captivity is over; see p. 457. If, however, the new Temple is to be the embodiment in concrete form of Israel's ideals of Holiness and Purity, those that shall minister in the House of God must not, as in the past, permit any violations of those ideals. Therefore, only descendants of the loyal family of Zadok shall be the priests of the future.

this Haftorah, Ezekiel undertakes to define their duties and ministrations; and thus connects with the Sedrah which regulates the life and work of the priests.

15. sons of Zadok. The high priest appointed to that office by King Solomon (I Kings II, 35). Ezekiel was him-

gird themselves with any thing that causeth people, they shall put off their garments wherein they minister, and lay them in the holy chambers, and they shall put on other garments, that they sanctify not the people with their garments.

poll their heads. i.e. keep it at a moderate and even length all round.

22. neither shall they take . . . a widow. In the Sedrah (Lev. xxi, 14) the prohibition is restricted to the High Priest. Although this is only a more stringent application of the principle underlying the original law—possibly in that decadent age, when the moral standards had lowered, it was found necessary to do so in order to protect the purity of the priestly families—it is one of Ezekiel's apparent divergencies from the Torah, and it raised doubts in the early Rabbinic period as to whether his Book should remain in the Canon of Scripture.

23. teach. Instruction, teaching the people the eternal difference between right and wrong, holy and unholy, "Jewish" and heathen, has always been the main function and mission of priest, prophet, sage, rabbi or teacher in Judaism.

22. Neither shall they take for their wives a widow, nor her that is put away: but they shall take virgins of the seed of the house of Israel, or a widow that is the widow of a priest. 23.
And they shall teach my people the difference between the holy and the common, and cause them to discern between the unclean and the clean. 24. And in a controversy they shall stand to judge; according to my judgements shall they judge it: and they shall keep my laws and my statutes in all my appointed feasts; and they shall hallow my sabbaths. 25. And they shall come at no dead person to defile themselves:
but for father, or for mother, or for son, or for daughter, for brother, or for sister that hath had no husband, they may defile themselves. 26. And after he is cleansed, they shall reckon unto him seven days. 27. And in the day that he goeth into the sanctuary, into the inner court, to minister in the sanctuary, he shall offer his sin offering, saith the Lord God. 28. And they shall have an inheritance; I am their inheritance: and ye

27. he shall offer his sin offering. Contact with the dead was a technical, i.e. ritual, sin ; the reference is not to any moral lapse.

28–31. Enumerate the dues for the maintenance of the priests. They had no possession in Israel—in contrast to the priests of the Babylonian temples who, besides stated tariffs for their services, often had large private estates (like medieval abbeys) and did much banking business (Lofthouse).

28. I am their inheritance. The priests' inheritance is a spiritual, not a material one.

29. devoted thing. Everything on which a ban had been placed ; Lev. xxvii, 28.

30. heave offering. Heb. terumah, " contribution."

31. shall not eat. The Rabbis explain that repetition of this law was required in the case of the priests, as the manner of the slaying (e.g. מליקה) of those sacrifices, of which the priests were permitted to partake, did not altogether coincide with the laws of Shechitah outside the Sanctuary.

In connection with this verse and v. 22, it is well to remember that this Haftorah is part of a half-ideal and half-allegorical programme of the New Jerusalem that is to follow the Captivity. The Prophet's symbolic picture was every devoted thing in Israel shall be theirs. 30.

And the first of all the firstfruits of every thing,
and every heave offering of every thing, of all your heave offerings, shall be for the priests: ye shall also give unto the priest the first of your dough, to cause a blessing to rest on thine house.
31. The priests shall not eat of any thing that dieth of itself, or is torn, whether it be fowl or beast.

probably never intended for, and certainly never received, literal realisation. A deeper study of his Vision shows that the account of the Temple, the City, the Prince, and the divisions of the land are as ideal as his vision of the stream that issues from under the threshold of the Temple and flows through the desert of southern Judea into the Dead Sea, fertilising the one and transforming the other into a fresh-water lake swarming with life and surrounded by noble trees that bear fruit every month (XLVII, 1–12). Where all else is ideal, actuality is not to be affixed to the regulations alone concerning priests and their offerings. The Rabbis were therefore guided by highest spiritual wisdom (רוח הקודש) when, disregarding the apparent or real divergencies from the Torah which these chapters contain, they permitted the Book to remain part of Holy Scripture.

BEHAR

Jeremiah XXXII, 6–27

For brief characterisation of the life and message of Jeremiah see Exodus, p. 468.

The Sedrah deals with the redemption of a family inheritance; and the Haftorah furnishes a striking instance of its observance at a great crisis in Israel's history. It was in the year 587, during the siege of Jerusalem, when Jeremiah was in prison because of his outspoken foretelling of the inevitable capture and destruction of the City by the Babylonians. At that dark hour, the Prophet "redeems" a piece of land, so that it shall not pass out of his family.

IX. BEHAR

Jeremiah XXXII, 6–27

32 6. And Jeremiah said, The word of the Lord came unto me, saying. 7. Behold, Hanamel the son of Shallum thine uncle shall come unto thee, saying, Buy thee my field that is in Anathoth:
for the right of redemption is thine to buy it. 8.
So Hanamel mine uncle's son came to me in the

He looks beyond the storm of judgment to the hope of a brighter day. In the offer of redemption that is made to him by a kinsman, he sees a God-sent opportunity to show forth to his brethren a Divine pledge that the night of Captivity will be followed by the morn of Return, when houses and lands will once again be freely bought and sold. His action finds a parallel during Hannibal's invasion of Italy, when a Roman purchased, at full price in public auction, the ground on which the enemy's army was encamped.

7. Anathoth. Jeremiah's birthplace.

right of redemption. As next-of-kin, Jeremiah has the right of pre-emption to his relative's land, so that it shall not pass out of the family; Lev. xxv, 24f.

8. court of the guard. A part of the court surrounding the Palace, railed off to guard prisoners whom it was not desired to throw into the common dungeon (Driver).

then I knew that this was the word of the LORD. He had previously (v. 7) had a mysterious premonition of the visit and of its purpose; but now he is convinced that God had inspired the visit. The purchase would illustrate in a most striking manner the certainty of Israel's restoration (see v. 15).

9–11. He bought the field, and sealed the purchase with all the legal formalities. The Jews had been vassals of Assyria and Babylon for about a century; and, it seems, transference of land was now performed according to the legal procedure of the Sovereign Power. As in all Babylonian documents of that nature, the deed was written on clay, and enclosed in a clay envelope which was sealed up. On the envelope, the open copy (v. 14), was inscribed court of the guard according to the word of the LORD, and said unto me, Buy my field, I pray thee, that is in Anathoth, which is in the land of Benjamin: for the right of inheritance is thine,

and the redemption is thine; buy it for thyself.
Then I knew that this was the word of the LORD:
9. And I bought the field that was in Anathoth of Hanamel mine uncle's son, and weighed him
the money, even seventeen shekels of silver.
10. And I subscribed the deed, and sealed it, and called witnesses, and weighed him the money in the balances. 11. So I took the deed of the purchase, both that which was sealed, containing the terms and conditions, and that which was open: 12. and I delivered the deed of the purchase unto Baruch the son of Neriah, the son of Mahseiah, in the presence of Hanamel mine uncle's son, and in the presence of the witnesses that subscribed the deed of the purchase, before all the Jews that sat in the court of the guard. 13. And I charged Baruch before them, saying, 14. Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel: Take these deeds, this deed of the purchase, both that which is sealed, and this a copy of the contract. Only in case of the writing on the envelope becoming obliterated or of suspicion that it had been tampered with, was the envelope broken and the text itself examined.

12. Baruch. Jeremiah's faithful secretary who, at the Prophet's dictation, wrote down his addresses (see Chap. XXXVI). It is to him that we owe the preservation of the Prophet's utterances.

that they may continue many days. Though it would be a long time before the deed would be needed, yet the prophecy of which it is a sign would be fulfilled.

15. houses . . . again be bought. He who had been denounced as a deserter and traitor is now their best comforter and counsellor.

16–27. A wave of doubt surges over Jeremiah. He is himself overwhelmed by the darkness that is enveloping his People. From the court of the guard, he could see the works of the besiegers; and, within the City, famine and pestilence were raging. He, therefore, turns to God and seeks assurance for the faith and confidence which he has sought to implant in others by his symbolic action of purchase. And so one of the great prayers of the Bible is here given to us.

17–19. Jeremiah begins his prayer by declaring God's deed which is open, and put them in an earthen vessel; that they may continue many days.

15. For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel: Houses and fields and vineyards shall yet again be bought in this land.

16. Now after I had delivered the deed of the purchase unto Baruch the son of Neriah, I prayed unto the LORD, saying, 17. Ah Lord GOD! behold, thou hast made the heaven and the earth by thy great power and by thy stretched out arm; there is nothing too hard for thee: 18. which shewest mercy unto thousands, and recompensest the iniquity of the fathers into the bosom of their children after them: the great, the mighty God,
the LORD of hosts is his name: 19. great in counsel, and mighty in work: whose eyes are open upon all the ways of the sons of men; to give every one according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings: 20. which didst set signs and wonders in the land of Egypt, even unto this day, both in Israel and among other men; and madest thee a name, as at this day; 21. and didst bring forth thy people Israel out of the land of Egypt with signs, and with wonders, and with a strong power in creation and history, and His righteous government of humanity.

17. hard. lit. "wonderful."

18. the iniquity of the fathers. Recalling the words of the Second Commandment; Exod. xx, 5, 6.

20–23. He remembers the wonders of God wrought for Israel in Egypt, His providence over them, and the bounties bestowed on them, after the Exodus.

20. unto this day. They are known and remembered to this day (Kimchi).

BECHUKOSAI

Jeremiah XVI, 19–XVII, 14

The Sedrah proclaims the happy result of national faithfulness, and the inevitable and disastrous consequences of national faithlessness to the Divine Law. The Haftorah is the utterance of the Prophet who witnessed the destruction of the Temple and State through the religious and moral degeneracy of the nation. His words, especially in the verses preceding this section, are thus an echo of the prophecy of Moses. But Jeremiah's message here is one of great hope. Even heathen nations shall yet acknowledge that Truth and moral sanity are only to be found in the Revelation given to Israel. Let Israel trust—as he does—in God, the faithful Physician, who will heal them, and establish them on an eternal foundation.

19. have inherited nought but lies. The Prophet foresees the time when the heathen from the utmost ends of the earth will realise the vanity and falsehood of their hereditary gods, and come to acknowledge God's glorious Name.

That all mankind will at last grope their way out of the night of traditional ignorance towards the Truth, is a fundamental conviction of the Jewish spirit. This has found expression in the Oleynu prayer, with its culminating aspiration, taken from the Prophet (Zech. xiv, 9), The Lord shall be King over all the earth: in that day shall the

The action of the heathens only deepens the sin and folly of Israel, for resisting Divine teaching and sinking into the bog of the impure idolatry of Canaan.

1. with a pen of iron, and with the point of a diamond. Instruments used for cutting into hard substances; here, on the heart hardened by sin. Sin is indelibly ingrained in their nature, and their guilt is patent to all.

of your altars. A swift and effective change from the indirect (their heart) to the direct form of address (your altars). Other instances in the Scriptures are numerous (Kimchi).

2. whilst their children remember their altars. Better, like the symbols of their sons (AJ); following Ehrlich who sees in these words a reference to the symbols of their immoral rites, symbols that correspond to the wooden poles of Asherah-worship.

21. Therefore, behold, I will cause them to know, this once will I cause them to know mine hand and my might; and they shall know that my name is the LORD.

17 1. The sin of Judah is written with a pen of iron, and with the point of a diamond: it is graven upon the table of their heart, and upon the horns of your altars; 2. whilst their children remember their altars and their Asherim by the green trees upon the high hills. 3. O my mountain in the field, I will give thy substance and all thy treasures for a spoil, and thy high places,
because of sin, throughout all thy borders. 4.
And thou, even of thyself, shalt discontinue from thine heritage that I gave thee; and I will cause thee to serve thine enemies in the land which thou knowest not: for ye have kindled a fire in mine anger which shall burn for ever.

Asherim. See Exod. XXXIV, 13. Poles set up near an altar for idol worship, generally for the worship of Astarte.

3. O my mountain in the field. Better, O thou that sittest upon the mountain in the field (AJ)—Jerusalem, which was built on a hill, high above the surrounding plain or field (Rashi).

4. shalt discontinue from thine heritage. Shalt cease to retain thy land and be driven forth to foreign soil.

for ever. For a long time (Altschul); a frequent use of the phrase לעולם; cf. Exodus, p. 517.

MACHAR CHODESH (EVE OF NEW MOON)

I Samuel XX, 18–42

There is hardly a more beautiful figure in history than Jonathan. Truly he was "a very perfect knight," the very essence of chivalry. To the Rabbis, he stands for all time as the type of disinterested, self-denying friendship (Ethics of the Fathers, v, 17). His greatness was manifested in the very clash of duty between his loyalty to his father and his love of David. Jonathan's was a task of rare difficulty, to combine duty to his father with devotion to his friend. Yet he fails in neither. To Saul he was an affectionate son and faithful officer; and "no cloud of envy intercepted his admiration of the great warrior, the sweet singer of Israel, who hereafter was to supersede him" (Jowett). It is fortunate that the opening incident of the chapter, occurring on a Machar Chodesh—the eve of the New Moon, enables the story of Jonathan's friendship and self-abnegation to be included among the Lessons from the Prophets.

Saul, half-crazed by jealousy of David's popularity and growing hold on the people, seeks to destroy him. David places himself in the power of Jonathan, who at first 20 18. Then Jonathan said unto him, To-morrow is the new moon : and thou shalt be missed, because thy seat will be empty. 19. And when thou

has stayed three days, thou shalt go down quickly,
and come to the place where thou didst hide
thyself when the business was in hand, and shalt remain by the stone Ezel. 20. And I will shoot
three arrows on the side thereof, as though I shot at a mark. 21. And, behold, I will send the lad, saying, Go, find the arrows. If I say unto the lad, Behold, the arrows are on this side
of thee : take them, and come ; for there is peace
to thee and no hurt, as the LORD liveth. 22. But if I say thus unto the boy, Behold, the arrows are beyond thee : go thy way ; for the LORD hath sent thee away. 23. And as touching the matter which thou and I have spoken of, behold, the LORD is between thee and me for ever.

24. So David hid himself in the field : and when

18. new moon. The New Moon was in ancient times celebrated as an important festive occasion.

the new moon was come, the king sat him down to eat meat. 25. And the king sat upon his seat, as at other times, even upon the seat by the wall;
and Jonathan stood up, and Abner sat by Saul's theless Saul spake not any thing that day: for he thought, Something hath befallen him, he is to pass on the morrow after the new moon, which was the second day, that David's place anger was kindled against Jonathan, and he

the shame of thy mother's nakedness? 31. For Saul's violence soon assumes a murderous fury—85 priests are slain for having given bread to the hungry fugitive David. If Jonathan had, at the moment of farewell, only thought of providing his friend with a few loaves of bread, that massacre might have been averted (Talmud). David and Jonathan were never to meet again in the royal home. When the

Jonathan cried after the lad, Make speed, haste, carry them to the city. 41. And as soon as the lad was gone, David arose out of a place toward

the South, and fell on his face to the ground,

David exceeded. 42. And Jonathan said to David,

tragic end came, and both Saul and Jonathan died for their people, David lamented them in the most beautiful elegy in literature:

Thy glory, O Israel, is slain upon thy high places!
How are the mighty fallen! . . . .
Saul and Jonathan were lovely and pleasant in their lives,
And in their death they were not divided;
They were swifter than eagles,
They were stronger than lions.
Ye daughters of Israel, weep over Saul,
Who clothed you in scarlet delicately,
Who put ornaments of gold upon your apparel.
How are the mighty fallen in the midst of the battle!
O, Jonathan, slain upon thy high places,
I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan:
Very pleasant hast thou been unto me:
Thy love to me was wonderful,
Passing the love of women.
How are the mighty fallen,
And the weapons of war perished!

When, to the example of David and Jonathan, we add the deep friendship of two women, Ruth and Naomi: ("Whither thou goest I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God; where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried: the Lord do so to me and more also, if aught but death part thee and me,") we realise that the Bible is also the supreme Book of Friendship.

SABBATH AND NEW MOON

ISAIAH LXVI

The Second Temple is nearing completion, and the Prophet corrects false ideas concerning the Temple building and the worship therein. He contrasts the faithful Israelites with the apostates, given to idolatrous practices, and doomed to extinction. The chapter concludes with the renewed assurance of the triumph of the Faithful Remnant, and the universal worship of the one God. Verse 23 that enshrines this hope in the phrase, "From one New Moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another," makes the section an appropriate Haftorah for this Sabbath.

1. what manner of house. God's presence cannot be limited to one spot. ("Behold heaven and the heaven of heavens cannot contain Thee; how much less this house that I have builded!" I Kings VIII, 27). The purpose of the Temple was to lead men to reverence and uprightness, and the sacrifices were to help the worshipper expel evil thoughts and desires from his heart, and burn them as burnt offerings on the altar (Kimchi). If these conditions did not exist, the Temple was not a house fit for God's glory.

2. all these things. i.e. heaven and earth came into existence at the word of God (Abarbanel).

the existence of a humble and sincere piety among the worshippers who make their will subservient to God ("that trembleth at My word").

3. The lit. translation of the first part of this verse is: "The slaughterer of an ox, a slayer of a man; the sacrificer of the sheep, a breaker of a dog's neck; the offerer of an oblation—swines' blood, &c." This is often explained to mean that he who offers the statutory sacrifices but is not animated by a sincere spirit is no better than he who takes a leading part in some horrible and unholy cult involving human sacrifices. No Prophet, however, would be guilty of such an exaggeration. More probably, the Prophet has in mind those who combined outward observance of Jewish ceremonial with the destestable rites of some debased fetish-worship which existed among those left in Israel after the Assyrian conquest (II Kings, XVII, 33f). There is no reason, however, to assume that these heathen worshippers indulged, or were permitted by the Persian authorities to indulge, in human sacrifices. The words מכה איש only mean "striketh a man" (Ibn Ezra), and not "slayeth a man." The Heb. root of מכה is used for "inflicting stripes," and may therefore here refer to sacred flagellations or scourgings which, as is well known, formed part of many pagan secret cults. He that sacrificeth an ox at God's Temple, complains our Prophet, is at the same time acting as flagellator or sacred scourger at heathen mystery worship!

word. 3. He that killeth an ox is as he that slayeth a man; he that sacrificeth a lamb, as
he that breaketh a dog's neck; he that offereth
a meal offering, as he that offereth swine's blood;
he that burneth frankincense, as he that blesseth
an idol: yea, they have chosen their own ways,
and their soul delighteth in their abominations;
4. I also will choose their mockings, and will bring their fears upon them; because when I called,
none did answer; when I spake, they did not
hear: but they did that which was evil in mine
eyes, and chose that wherein I delighted not.

5. Hear the word of the LORD, ye that tremble
at his word: Your brethren that hate you, that cast you out for my name's sake, have said, Let
the LORD be glorified, that we may see your joy; but they shall be ashamed. 6. A voice of tumult from the city, a voice from the temple,

4. their mockings. Because they—the apostate and obstinate transgressors—have chosen to do that which mocks Me (v. 3), I will choose for them suffering that will mock their hopes.

their fears. i.e. the very things they fear, I will bring upon them.

5. your brethren. i.e. the semi-idolatrous schismatics who mocked and opposed the true worshippers of God.

cast you out. That refuse to associate with you (Cheyne). The Heb. root means, in later use, to excommunicate.

let the LORD be glorified . . joy. These are the taunting words of the irreligious and insolent opponents.

6. a voice of tumult. The Prophet already seems to hear the sounds of the coming judgment against the mockers.

v. 8. בצ״ל

7–14. The Prophet again breaks off with words of comfort and hope to the faithful community. Though ridiculed by their adversaries, great increase of population (v. 7), peace and prosperity, (v. 12) shall come, and the enemy be destroyed.

7. Zion is the mother, and the verse describes the swift increase in her population through the re-inforcement of faithful children from all parts.

8. shall a land be born in one day. Emphasises the rapidity of this remarkable increase. It will seem as if Zion were regenerated in one day.

9. The work of Restoration and salvation shall be complete. God will not leave it unfinished.

10. A call to the children restored, and those still in Exile, to rejoice with Jerusalem.

all ye that mourn over her. All those in Exile, and those who since the Return have been depressed at the slow realisation of their hopes in Zion.

11. The figure of Zion as Mother is retained.

12. Peace and prosperity shall stream into Zion, like a river that overflows its banks.

glory. Wealth.

a voice of the LORD that rendereth recompense to his enemies. 7. Before she travailed, she brought forth; before her pain came, she was delivered of a man child. 8. Who hath heard such a thing? who hath seen such things? Shall
a land be born in one day? shall a nation be brought forth at once? for as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children. 9. Shall
I bring to the birth, and not cause to bring forth?
saith the LORD: shall I that cause to bring forth
shut the womb? saith thy God.

10. Rejoice ye with Jerusalem, and be glad for her, all ye that love her: rejoice for joy with her, all ye that mourn over her: 11. that ye may suck and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolations; that ye may milk out, and be delighted with the abundance of her glory. 12.
For thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will extend peace to her like a river, and the glory of the nations like an overflowing stream, and ye shall
suck thereof; ye shall be borne upon the side,
and shall be dandled upon the knees. 13. As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you; and ye shall be comforted in Jerusalem.
14. And ye shall see it, and your heart shall

shall be borne upon the side. Continues the figure of the nursling in the preceding verse. The nations become their foster-mothers.

13. as one whom his mother comforteth. God's is not only a Father's love. "As the grown man, coming back with wounds and weariness upon him to be comforted of his mother" (G. A. Smith), finds there the comfort he seeks, so will God comfort the men of Zion. God is our Mother.

v. 17. אחת קרי

14. your bones shall flourish. Your bodily frames shall be filled with renewed youth and vigour.

15–16. The Prophet returns to the coming judgment of God against His enemies.

17. Once more a reference to the idolatries of the apostates.

they that sanctify themselves. Words used satirically of the preparation by these people for their heathenish rites (Kimchi).

unto the gardens. i.e. to join in the abominable cults which were often practised in gardens (Isa. LXV, 3).

behind one in the midst. The Massoretes read the feminine form אחת for "one." The reference therefore is to an asherah, a grove of sacred trees or poles set up near an altar for idol-worship in the garden. If the word is read as written, אחד, the reference would be to a priest who led the company of worshippers.

the mouse. Forbidden like the swine; its flesh was, with that of the other "destestable things," eaten as part of the mystic rites of this heathen cultus.

rejoice, and your bones shall flourish like the tender grass: and the hand of the Lord shall
be known toward his servants, and he will have indignation against his enemies. 15. For, behold,
the LORD will come in fire, and his chariots shall be like the whirlwind; to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. 16. For
by fire will the LORD plead, and by his sword,
with all flesh: and the slain of the LORD shall be many. 17. They that sanctify themselves and purify themselves to go unto the gardens,
behind one in the midst, eating swine's flesh,
and the abomination, and the mouse; they shall come to an end together, saith the LORD. 18. For
I know their works and their thoughts: the time
cometh, that I will gather all nations and tongues;
and they shall come, and shall see my glory.
19. And I will set a sign among them, and I will send such as escape of them unto the nations, to Tarshish, Pul and Lud, that draw the bow, to Tubal and Javan, to the isles afar off, that have not heard my fame, neither have seen my glory;
and they shall declare my glory among the nations.
20. And they shall bring all your brethren out of mighty act of judgment and retribution. Those of the peoples that survive are represented as going to far-off lands to tell of God, His greatness and glory.

Tarshish. The town of Tartessus in Spain.

Pul and Lud. Probably districts in N. Africa.

Javan. Greece.

20. Impressed by what they thus hear, these far-off nations shall bring to Jerusalem all the Israelites dwelling among them, and in a manner appropriate to the greatness of the occasion.

v. 23. סבירין יבאו

21. and of them also will I take for priests and Levites. Of the converted Gentiles and the Jews who are brought back by them, I will take to assist the priests and Levites in their service (Kimchi). This thought is quite in accordance with the universalist spirit in Isaiah.

22 and 23. In this new (and better) order of things, the race and influence of Israel will continue for ever, leading to the fulfilment of Israel's mission, i.e. the universal worship of the One God, with Jerusalem as the devotional capital of mankind.

23. from one new moon to another. lit. " as often as there is a new moon on its new moon, etc," i.e. on every New Moon and Sabbath; New Moon by New Moon and Sabbath by Sabbath.

24. A survey again of the conflict against evil, and its final defeat, through which the above great goal is reached. Delitzsch points out that, in effect, the thought is the same as in the concluding sentence of other sections of the second half of Isaiah—" there is no peace unto the wicked " (XLVIII, 22, and LVII, 21). Under the figure of the worm that dieth not, and the fire that is not quenched, we have here a symbolical representation of the lasting remorse that, on the

all the nations for an offering unto the LORD, upon
horses, and in chariots, and in litters, and upon
mules, and upon swift beasts, to my holy mountain
Jerusalem, saith the LORD, as the children of Israel
bring their offering in a clean vessel into the house of the LORD. 21. And of them also will I take for priests and for Levites, saith the LORD.
22. For as the new heavens and the new earth,
which I will make, shall remain before me, saith
the LORD, so shall your seed and your name
remain. 23. And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath
to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the LORD. 24. And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcases of the men that have transgressed against me: for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh.

And it shall come to pass that from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the LORD.

realisation of their wickedness, troubles the souls of evil-doers. The knowledge of this, which will be clear to all ("And they shall go forth and look"), will become a restraining moral influence. It will be a factor in the attainment of the great consummation (the universal worship of the one true God) described in the previous verse.

According to ancient Jewish custom, v. 23 is read a second time after v. 24, so as to conclude the book (of which this is the last chapter) with words of comfort and encouragement. There is a similar direction in regard to concluding Malachi, Lamentations and Ecclesiastes. In each case, the last verse but one is reprinted in the Heb. text, and repeated during the reading in the Synagogue.

ZACHOR

I Samuel XV, 1–34

The Additional Reading recalls how Amalek ruthlessly attacked the defenceless and the weak of the Israelites in the wilderness, " and he feared not God." The Amalekites showed their implacable enmity not only at Rephidim, but also opposed Israel's entrance into the Holy Land. It was an hereditary hatred; they were the allies of the Midianites when these harried the Israelites in the days of the Judges. The feud between the tribes of Israel and this untameable race of savages was thus of long duration. The command for exterminating them with which the Haftorah opens, may have been given in consequence of their raids having become more numerous and sanguinary under their present king; v. 33. It was clear to Samuel that the struggle with these ancient and ever-hostile opponents was a matter of life and death to Israel, a struggle which he regarded as a holy war.

The moral difficulty in connection with this command is very real. It seems to be in violent contrast to the Divine law which forbids vengeance, private vengeance. How-

15 1. And Samuel said unto Saul, the Lord sent me to anoint thee to be king over his people, over Israel: now therefore hearken thou unto the voice of the words of the Lord.

(Ashkenazim begin here:—)

2. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, I have marked that which Amalek did to Israel, how he set himself against him in the way, when he came up out of Egypt. 3. Now go and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not; but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass.

4. And Saul summoned the people, and num-ever, the truest mercy sometimes lies in the dispensation of sternest justice, and Israel here was the instrument of Divine Retribution.

Sabbath Zachor precedes the Festival of Purim, the story of which is recorded in the Book of Esther. Haman, the arch-enemy of the Jews, was deemed to be a descendant of the Amalekite king in the Haftorah. Sabbath Zachor reminds us of their godlessness and inhumanity. Its charge to the generations in Israel is to blot out from the human heart the cruel, cowardly Amalek spirit, and to heal the wounds caused by "man's inhumanity to man."

1. to be king over his people. Not thy (Saul's) people. God's people, to be ruled according to the Divine word and will.

2. I have marked. "I remember" (AJ).

3. utterly destroy. lit. "ban" or "devote." They were not to be taken as spoil. The Israelites were to derive no material profit from this punitive war.

7. Havilah. The eastern boundary of the district in northern Arabia inhabited by the Amalekites.

Shur. The western part of the desert, bordering on Egypt.

8. all the people. i.e. all that fell into his hands. Some bands survived and carried on guerilla warfare against the Israelites; but from this time they ceased to be formidable.

9. spared Agag. Saul did so, perhaps from a fellow-feeling with a king; cf. I Kings xx, 32.

11. it repenteth me. An expression signifying an apparent footmen, and ten thousand men of Judah. 5. And Saul came to the city of Amalek, and laid wait in the valley. 6. And Saul said unto the Kenites, Go, depart, get you down from among the Amalekites, lest I destroy you with them: for ye shewed kindness to all the children of Israel, when they came up out of Egypt. So the Kenites departed from among the Amalekites. 7. And Saul smote the Amalekites, from Havilah as thou goest to Shur, that is before Egypt. 8. And he took Agag the king of the Amalekites alive, and utterly destroyed all the people with the edge of the sword. 9. But Saul and the people spared Agag, and the best of the sheep, and of the oxen, and of the fatlings, and the lambs, and all that was good, and would not utterly destroy them: but every thing that was vile and

10. Then came the word of the LORD unto Samuel saying, 11. It repenteth me that I have set up Saul to be king: for he is turned back from following me, and hath not performed my commandments. And Samuel was wroth; and he cried unto the LORD all night. 12. And Samuel rose early to meet Saul in the morning; and it change in the Divine attitude towards people, brought about by a change in their character and conduct.

Samuel was wroth. Better, it grieved Samuel (AJ). He grieved for Saul, for whom he had held such high hopes.

12. Carmel. In Judah, about 7 miles S. of Hebron.
set him up a monument. To commemorate his victory.
Gilgal. In the Jordan valley. Perhaps to sacrifice there of the spoil in thanksgiving for the victory (Ralbag); see v. 15 and 21.

15. they have brought them from the Amalekites. Saul appears to lay the blame upon the people.
to sacrifice unto the Lord thy God. Saul thought that this would justify his action.

17. though thou be little in thine own sight. Samuel's answer to Saul's plea that the people were to blame (v. 15). Saul was the leader; and if he heeded the voice of his army in an act of disobedience, he was not fit to lead.

20. I have obeyed . . . and have brought Agag. Saul again seeks to justify himself. He had destroyed the Amalekites; was told Samuel, saying, Saul came to Carmel, and, behold, he set him up a monument, and is gone about, and passed on, and gone down to Gilgal. 13. And Samuel came to Saul: and Saul said unto him, Blessed be thou of the LORD: I have performed the commandment of the LORD. 14. And Samuel said, What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear? 15. And Saul said, They have brought them from the Amalekites: for the people spared the best of the sheep and of the oxen, to sacrifice unto the LORD thy God; and the rest we have utterly destroyed. 16. Then Samuel said unto Saul, Stay, and I will tell thee what the LORD hath said to me this night. And he said unto him, Say on. 17. And Samuel said, Though thou be little in thine own sight, art thou not the head of the tribes of Israel? And the LORD anointed thee king over Israel; 18. and the LORD sent thee on a journey, and said, Go and utterly destroy the sinners the Amalekites, and fight against them until they be consumed. 19. Wherefore then didst thou not obey the voice of the LORD, but didst fly upon the spoil, and didst that which was evil in the sight of the LORD? 20. And Saul said unto Samuel, Yea, I have obeyed the voice of the LORD, and have gone the way which the LORD sent me, and have brought Agag the king and the people had brought the spoil not for themselves, but for sacrifice.

v. 20. פתח בס״פ

22. delight in burnt offerings. Samuel's reply is couched in the rhythmical form of parallelism, the characteristic of Heb. poetry. He goes straight to the real disobedience behind Saul's excuses, and in a few immortal words summarises the ethical teaching of the Hebrew prophets.

to obey is better than sacrifice. "Asserts in clearest terms the superiority of moral to ritual worship" (Payne Smith).

23. teraphim. Idolatrous images. Deliberate disobedience towards God is compared to witchcraft, because both bow to an authority other than Divine; in the one case, to the individual will or passion; and in the other, to the idol. The comparison is especially appropriate here, as Saul had been zealous in abolishing witchcraft in Israel. Samuel accuses him of being as guilty as those he had himself condemned.

24. feared the people. Saul now admits the true reason of his lapse. He did not lead, though king, but was led.

of Amalek, and have utterly destroyed the Amale-kites. 21. But the people took of the spoil, sheep and oxen, the chief of the devoted things to sacrifice unto the LORD thy God in Gilgal.
22. And Samuel said, Hath the LORD as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the LORD? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams. 23. For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as idolatry and teraphim. Because thou hast rejected the word of the LORD, he hath also rejected thee from being king. 24. And Saul said unto Samuel, I have sinned: for I have transgressed the commandment of the LORD, and thy words: because I feared the people, and obeyed their voice. 25. Now therefore, I pray thee, pardon my sin, and turn again with me, that I may worship the LORD. 26. And Samuel said unto Saul, I will not return with thee: for thou hast rejected the word of the LORD, and the LORD hath rejected thee from being king over Israel. 27. And as Samuel turned about to go away, he laid hold upon the skirt of his robe, and it rent. 28. And Samuel said unto him, The LORD hath rent the kingdom of Israel from thee this day, and hath given it to a neighbour of thine, that is better than thou. 29.
And also the Strength of Israel will not lie nor

29. the Strength of Israel. He who is the Source of their strength and confidence.

he is not a man, that he should repent. He is not changeable ke man, but permanent in His purpose. He desires the ood of Israel, and it is for their good that Saul should be eprived of sovereignty. There is no contradiction here to he expression in v. 10. It is because God is unchangeable n his purposes that " change of attitude in men from good o evil, seems to develop a corresponding change of attitude owards them in God " (Sime).

30. honour me now. A touching and natural request. aul had been sufficiently humiliated ; and, as he was still ing, it was necessary that his authority should be upheld efore the people.

31. so Samuel turned again after Saul. He had vinicated himself as representative of God's will, and now llowed Saul to precede him.

32. delicately. Some translate " tremblingly " (Septuaint); others, " cheerfully," as he now preferred death o life (Kimchi) ; or, " in chains " (AJ).

the bitterness of death is past. He had lost kingdom and berty, and death held no further bitterness for him.

33. childless. He had practised the old Amalekite method f murdering the weak and defenceless, on the borders of udah. Samuel, who in more than one way was the last f the Judges, seized a sword and with his own hand struck he murderer dead. It was national vengeance, not vengeance taken by Samuel in his own cause.

repent: for he is not a man, that he should repent. 30. Then he said, I have sinned: yet honour me now, I pray thee, before the elders of my people, and before Israel, and turn again with me, that I may worship the LORD thy God. 31. So Samuel turned again after Saul; and Saul worshipped the LORD.

32. Then said Samuel, Bring ye hither to me Agag the king of the Amalekites. And Agag came unto him delicately. And Agag said, Surely the bitterness of death is past. 33. And Samuel said, As thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be childless among women. And Samuel hewed Agag in pieces before the LORD in Gilgal.

34. Then Samuel went to Ramah; and Saul went up to his house to Gibeah of Saul.

34. then Samuel went to Ramah. He saw Saul no more. He loved and grieved for Saul, and mourned for the failure of a career that had seemed so promising. "Intoxicated by his success in war, Saul was about to divert Israel into a conquering worldly kingdom pursuing purely political aims; when Samuel, watchful of Israel's true destiny, sternly reproved him and announced his rejection as ruler of his people" (Cornill). "He had begun his reign as a knightly hero in the splendour of manly strength, good fortune and victory; he died, harrassed, embittered, deranged, giving himself the death blow, avoided and forsaken by every one—by his trusted seer and counsellor, by his greatest warrior, and, finally, by the last of his faithful followers" (Kittell).

Ezekiel XXXVI, 16–38

The Additional Reading lays down the regulations for bodily purification. The object of these laws, our Sages say, was to impress on the Israelites the need of moral purification after the apostasy in connection with the Golden Calf.

Moral purification is likewise the theme of the Haftorah taken from the Book of Ezekiel. How Israel is to emerge from the grave of the Exile, renew its life on its own soil, and open an era of undefiled service of God—such is the teaching of the Haftorah. God had justly sent Israel into captivity, says the Prophet; its disasters were inevitable, seeing that God is a God of Holiness and Right. But the heathens had misunderstood this punishment, taking it as a sign of God's inability to save His people (Rashi, Kimchi). In this way, Israel had occasioned the profanation of God's Name. To vindicate His own honour, God will restore them; not because Israel deserved restoration, but because God's Glory demanded it. This Restoration will, however, be accompanied by moral renewal; on the one hand, God will implant " a new heart and a new spirit " in the nation; and, on the other hand, Israel's soul

me, saying, 17. Son of man, when the house of Israel dwelt in their own land, they defiled it by their way and by their doings: their way before me was as the uncleanness of a woman in her separation. 18. Wherefore I poured out my fury upon them for the blood which they had poured out upon the land, and because they had defiled it with their idols: 19. and I scattered them
among the nations, and they were dispersed through the countries: according to their way and according to their doings I judged them.

they went, they profaned my holy name; in that men said of them, These are the people of

will be swept by sincere Repentance that will cause it to be ashamed of its evil past. When the sinful nation has thus been purified, and the desolate land re-peopled, then the heathen will know that the whole is God's doing.

16–18. The uncleanness, religious and moral, of their ways was the real cause of the suffering of the people and their banishment.

17. their doings. Their idolatry.

18. blood which they had poured out. The Prophet probably has in mind the abominable rite of child-sacrifice which they copied from the heathens surrounding them.

20. profaned my holy name. Doubly so; by their own wrong-doing and by forcing God to punish them.

a monstrous chillul hashem, a profanation and degradation of the idea of God.

22–24. To vindicate His own honour, God will restore them, " for so only can His sole Godhead, which the ruin of His people had caused to be questioned, be generally acknowledged in the world; He can restore Israel, for of His own free grace He forgives their sins and transforms their hard heart."

22. I do not this for your sake. Because Israel was His own people, He must strictly punish Israel for its sins; cf. Amos III, 2 (Genesis, p. 502). His Name was inseparably connected with Israel. To that fact the nation owed its preservation.

23. when I shall be sanctified in you. Or, " when I shew myself holy in you." Israel is the subject through which God will show Himself to be the Omnipotent and Holy God to the nations. " The great act of reinstatement would make the heathen honour God's majesty, as the sufferings of Israel made them despise it " (Lofthouse).

house of Israel had profaned among the nations,

but for mine holy name, which ye have profaned among the nations, whither ye went.
23. And I will sanctify my great name, which hath been profaned among the nations, which ye have profaned in the midst of them; and the nations shall know that I am the LORD, saith the Lord GOD, when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes. 24. For I will take you from among the nations, and gather you out of all the countries, and will bring you into your own land. 25. And I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean: from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse
you. 26. A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh. 27. And I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgements, and do them. 28. And ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers; and ye shall be my people, and I will be your God. 29. And I will save you from all your uncleannesses: and

26. a new heart. Obedient, submissive, and desiring the good. "Heart" is the Heb. term for the whole inward being.

a new spirit. Steadfast, and predisposed to revere God.

I will call for the corn, and will multiply it, and of famine among the nations. 31. Then shall ye remember your evil ways, and your doings that were not good; and ye shall loathe yourselves in your own sight for your iniquities and for your abominations. 32. Not for your sake do I this, saith the Lord God, be it known unto you:

be ashamed and confounded for your ways, O house of Israel. 33. Thus saith the Lord God: In the day that I cleanse you from all your iniquities, I will cause the cities to be inhabited, and the waste places shall be builded. 34. And the land that was desolate shall be tilled, whereas it was a desolation in the sight of all that passed by. 35. And they shall say, This land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden; and the waste and desolate and ruined cities are fenced and inhabited. 36. Then the nations that are left round about you shall know that I the Lord have builded the ruined places, and planted that which was desolate: I the Lord have spoken it, and I will do it. (Sephardim end here).
37. Thus saith the Lord God: For this moreover will I be inquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them; I will increase them with men like a flock. 38. As the flock for sacrifice, as the flock of Jerusalem in her appointed feasts; so shall the waste cities be filled with flocks of men:
and they shall know that I am the Lord.

HACHODESH

EZEKIEL XLV, 16-XLVI, 18

For the life and message of Ezekiel see Genesis, p. 508, and the Introductory Note to the Haftorahs of Acharey Mos and Parah, p.382 and 450.

The Additional Reading describes the paschal sacrifice on the first Passover in Egypt, as well as the rules and preparation for the perennial celebration of that Festival. The Haftorah, likewise, touches upon the Passover sacrifices in the course of the Prophet's description of the Restored Temple.

The last portion of the Book of Ezekiel (chaps. XL–XLVIII) is a description of the New Jerusalem that is to arise when the Exile is over. "The Prophet, transported in thought to the Jerusalem to come, reconstructs the Temple, describes its proportions and forms, organises the future priesthood, the new cult, lays out the geographical plan of the reorganised kingdom, and divides it among the tribes that have come back from the four corners of exile. This plan of the constitution of the future is half-ideal, half allegorical" (Darmesteter). In the New Jerusalem, the Temple becomes both spiritually and materially the centre of the whole nation and its life; and the name of the City is for the future to be, The LORD is there. "Ezekiel realised that great things on earth are only produced by union. He, therefore, regarded it as the aim and task of his prophetic and pastoral mission to educate individuals, not only to be religious, but to be members of a community" (Cornill). That such a community be a holy community and serve ideal ends was, however, dependent on the people being prevented from again lapsing into their former sins. Hence, the new constitution for the nation in chaps. XL–XLVIII. Thereby the new Temple would be saved from the repetition of its profanations, and Israel rendered worthy of the God Who would make His dwelling in their midst. In this earliest of literary Utopias, the king's power is strictly limited. As wars are no more, his is no longer any military leadership; and the Prince of the nation is little else than its representative in the Temple. A rich reservation of land is assigned to him, which he tills like every other Israelite. The priests and Levites receive a definite portion of land as the material foundation of their existence.

16. oblation. i.e. the dues that were to be given to the Temple; see v. 13–15. The National Council, on behalf of the people, were to hand the dues to the Prince; he would thus possess a common stock from which the priests could draw.

17. to give the burnt offerings. From the contributions specified in the preceding verses, the Prince, as the head of the nation, would be held responsible for the supply of sacrifices at the appointed seasons.

he shall prepare the sin offering. i.e. provide the offering.

18–20. To ensure the purity of the Sanctuary, which may have been endangered by error or ignorance, Passover and Tabernacles were, according to Ezekiel's vision, to of Israel: he shall prepare the sin offering, and the meal offering, and the burnt offering, and the peace offerings, to make atonement for the house of Israel. (Sephardim begin here:—)

18. Thus saith the Lord GOD: In the first month, in the first day of the month, thou shalt take a young bullock without blemish; and thou shalt cleanse the sanctuary. 19. And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin offering, and put it upon the door posts of the house, and upon the four corners of the ledge of the altar, and upon the posts of the gate of the inner court. 20. And so thou shalt do on the seventh day of the month for every one that erreth, and for him that is simple: so shall ye make atonement for the house. 21. In the first month, in the fourteenth day of the month, ye shall have the passover, a feast of seven days; unleavened bread shall be preceded on the first of the month by a day of expiation or atonement. The ritual therewith is so novel that, on the one hand, some Rabbis held that it could only refer to the Third Temple, in the days to come; and, on the other hand, there were attempts to exclude the Book of Ezekiel from the Canon of Scripture.

20. so shalt thou do on the seventh day. According to XLIII, 25 (Haftorah Tetzaveh), the consecration of the altar was to last seven days. When that was completed, atonement could be made for the unintentional errors committed during the services of consecration (Kimchi).

erreth. Unwittingly.

him that is simple. One who has trespassed in ignorance of the law.

21–25. The Festival sacrifices. These differ in many particulars from those in Leviticus. One Rabbi declares that this Chapter will only properly be explained "when Elijah appears."

Chapter XLVI

1–15. The rights of the Prince in the Sanctuary are strictly prescribed.

2. shall stand by the post of the gate. The Prince had no right of entry within it. He stood at the threshold of the eastern gate, opposite the altar, watching his sacrifice.

3. the people. Stood in the Outer Court.

3. people of the land. Heb. am ha-aretz; the National Council. They have almost the same privilege as the Prince. They worship at the door of the same gate.

prepare for himself and for all the people of the land a bullock for a sin offering. 23. And the seven days of the feast he shall prepare a burnt offering to the LORD, seven bullocks and seven rams without blemish daily the seven days;
and a he-goat daily for a sin offering. 24. And he shall prepare a meal offering, an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram, and an hin of oil to an ephah. 25. In the seventh month, in the fifteenth day of the month, in the feast, shall he do the like the seven days; according to the sin offering, according to the burnt offering, and according to the meal offering, and according to the oil.

46 1. Thus saith the Lord GOD: The gate of the inner court that looketh toward the east shall be shut the six working days; but on the sabbath day it shall be opened, and in the day of the new moon it shall be opened. 2. And the prince shall enter by the way of the porch of the gate without, and shall stand by the post of the gate, and the priests shall prepare his burnt offering and his peace offerings, and he shall worship at the threshold of the gate; then he shall go forth: but the gate shall not be shut until the evening. 3. And the people of the land shall worship at the door of that gate before the LORD in the sabbaths and in the new moons.

offer unto the LORD shall be in the sabbath day

8. shall go forth. The Prince is to leave the inner gate as he entered it ; he is not to pass through the Inner Court. " The procedure of the Prince is thus minutely ordered that it may be understood that, though certain privileges are accorded his rank, he has no authority within the sacred precincts " (Toy).

9. in the appointed feasts. The three Pilgrim Festivals of the year (Passover, Pentecost, and Tabernacles) when all were to appear at the Temple in Jerusalem. Ezekiel lays down the regulations to prevent overcrowding. The members of the National Council, like every worshipper, were to pass reverently as near the Holy of Holies as was allowed, but pass on. There was to be no tarrying on the threshold ; no curious looking on. Public worship was not to degenerate into a public spectacle.

10. the prince shall go in the midst of them. Of the am ha-aretz, the National Council. Those who take the words " people of the land " literally, explain that on the Festival days, when the people would be there in great numbers, the Prince was to mingle freely with them. In no other way does a ruler do himself greater honour (Altschul).

And in the day of the new moon it shall be a young bullock without blemish; and six lambs, and a ram; they shall be without blemish: 7. and he shall prepare a meal offering, an ephah for the bullock, and ephah for the ram, and for the lambs according as he is able, and an hin of oil to an ephah. 8. And when the prince shall enter, he shall go in by the way of the porch of the gate, and he shall go forth by the way thereof. 9. But when the people of the land shall come before the LORD in the appointed feasts, he that entereth by the way of the north gate to worship shall go forth by the way of the south gate; and he that entereth by the way of the south gate shall go forth by the way of the north gate: he shall not return by the way of the gate whereby he came in, but shall go forth straight before him. 10. And the prince, when they go in, shall go in in the midst of them; and when they go forth, they shall go forth together. 11. And in the feasts and in the solemnities the meal offering shall be an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram, and for the lambs as he is able to give, and an hin of oil to an ephah. 12. And when the prince shall prepare a freewill offering, a burnt offering or peace offerings as a freewill offering unto the LORD, one shall open for him the gate that looketh toward the east, and he shall prepare

v. 15. יעשו ק׳

16. give a gift. The Prince was at liberty to give part of his estate inalienably to his own sons.

17. of his servants. If he presented any gifts to them, this gift reverted to the princely estate in the year of Release.

18. shall not take of the people's inheritance. The Prince is to be subject to property-laws, like any other citizen. He is prohibited from appropriating, under any pretext whatsoever, land of the common people. The story of Naboth's vineyard was never again to be enacted in Israel. The Prophet thus ends his Book with the double ideal of Holiness in Worship, and Justice to Fellow-man.

his burnt offering and his peace offerings, as he doth on the sabbath day: then he shall go forth; and after his going forth one shall shut the gate. 13. And thou shalt prepare a lamb of the first year without blemish for a burnt offering unto the LORD daily: morning by morning shalt thou prepare it. 14. And thou shalt prepare a meal offering with it morning by morning, the sixth part of an ephah, and the third part of an hin of oil, to moisten the fine flour: a meal offering unto the LORD continually by a perpetual ordinance. 15. Thus shall they prepare the lamb, and the meal offering, and the oil, morning by morning, for a continual burnt offering. (Sephardim end here.)

16. Thus saith the Lord GOD: If the prince give a gift unto any of his sons, it is his inheritance, it shall belong to his sons, it is their possession by inheritance. 17. But if he give of his inheritance a gift to one of his servants, it shall be his to the year of liberty; then it shall return to the prince; but as for his inheritance it shall be for his sons. 18. Moreover the prince shall not take of the people's inheritance, to thrust them out of their possession; he shall give inheritance to his sons out of his own possession: that my people be not scattered every man from his possession.

SABBATH HAGADOL

MALACHI III, 4–24

For a characterisation of the times and message of Malachi see Genesis, p. 472–3.

The Haftorah ends with the announcement of the re-appearance of Elijah the Prophet. Passover, as the Festival of Redemption in the past, was always associated with the Redemption of the Future (פסח לעתיד), when mankind would be delivered from all oppression, physical and spiritual. Elijah was traditionally regarded as the advance messenger who would appear at Passover-time and announce the dawn of that Messianic era.

Malachi preaches to a despondent generation, when spiritual lassitude possessed both high and low, and doubt paralysed the souls of men. Sordidness (maimed sacrifices), callousness (frequent divorces) and moral disintegration ("sorcerers, adulterers, false swearers") met him at every turn: and at the same time men asked, Where is God? Malachi answers the challenge by announcing the speedy advent of a great Judgment Day.

4. be pleasant unto the LORD. When, as stated in the previous verse, they will be offered "in righteousness."

ancient years. Parallel to the phrase, "days of old," and probably referring to the age of David and Solomon.

XVI. SABBATH HAGADOL

MALACHI III, 4–24

3 4. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the LORD, as in the days of old, and as in ancient years. 5. And I will come near to you to judgement; and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers; and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the LORD of hosts. 6. For I the LORD change not; therefore ye, O sons of Jacob,
are not consumed.

5. to judgement. An answer to the doubters who, perplexed by the social wrongs about them and the prosperity of evil doers, asked "Where is the God of Judgement?" (II, 17).

swift witness. "Judgment will not wait till witnesses are produced, for I, knowing all secrets, am witness as well as judge" (Altschul).

oppress the hireling. Defraud the hired day labourer of his hard-earned pay.

widow and fatherless. Exploitation of the weak (widow, fatherless, stranger) who cannot defend their rights, is accounted an unpardonable sin in Scripture.

fear not me. Being God-less, they are devoid of natural piety; and their dealings with the weak and helpless show a lack of fundamental humanity in their character.

6. I the LORD change not . . are not consumed. I change not in My nature, being ever the same both in loving good and hating evil as in the purpose for which you are selected as My people. Therefore, My judgment is not to destroy but to purify you for the fulfilment of your destiny in the world (Kimchi).

7–12. The neglect of tithes and the punishment therefor.

7. return. i.e. turn away from sin and turn toward God. The Heb. word for Repentance, תשובה, is derived from this root.

wherein shall we return. Pretending not to know where in their conduct there was any need for repentance.

8. in tithes and heave offerings. They have neglected or refused to pay the sacred dues for the maintenance of the Temple Service. " Israel's preservation as the people of God could only be effectively secured by a strict observance of the ceremonial obligations laid upon it, and by its holding firmly aloof from the disintegrating influence to which unrestricted intercourse with its neighbours would inevitably expose it " (Driver).

9. with the curse. Locusts and failure of crops.

for ye rob me. Better, yet ye rob Me (AJ).

10. meat in mine house. Sustenance for those ministering in the Temple.

11. the devourer. The locust; a dire plague of Palestine.

cast. Fail to ripen.

7. From the days of your fathers ye have turned aside from mine ordinances, and have not kept them. Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the LORD of hosts. But ye say, Wherein shall we return? 8. Will a man rob God? yet ye rob me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and heave offerings.
9. Ye are cursed with the curse; for ye rob me, even this whole nation. 10. Bring ye the whole tithe into the storehouse, that there may be meat
in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the LORD of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. 11. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the LORD of hosts. 12. And all nations shall call you happy: for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the LORD of hosts.

13. Your words have been stout against me, saith the LORD. Yet ye say, Wherein have we spoken against thee? 14. Ye have said, It is vain

13–24. Encouragement to the impatient.

13. stout. Hard, in censure. This is addressed to those who murmured at God's apparent indifference to their troubles and His tolerance of the prosperity of the wicked; see v. 14 and 15. They say: There is neither a judge nor justice in the universe (Kimchi).

brance was written before him, for them that

24. he shall turn the heart. The heart was considered the seat of thought as well as emotion. "Elijah" will therefore effect a reconciliation between the old and the new, not merely by awakening sympathy of one for the other, but by endowing them with a full understanding of the religious and moral obligations unitedly held by both sections.

in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and gambol
as calves of the stall. 21. And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I do make,
saith the LORD of hosts.

22. Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded unto him in Horeb for all Israel, even statutes and judgements. 23. Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the great and terrible day of the LORD come. 24.
And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers; lest I come and smite the land with a ban.

23. Behold, I will send Elijah the prophet before the great and terrible day of the LORD come.

of the children to their fathers. It is the home divided against itself, the estrangement of the youth from the elders, that especially fills the Prophet with pain and horror as something unnatural—a curse which, if unremoved, must blight the land. First reconciling parents and children, Elijah will turn the hearts of both to God.

23. he shall turn. v. 23 is repeated, as it is against Jewish custom to conclude a Reading from the Scriptures with words of threat or doom.

PREFATORY NOTE

The nature and purpose of this edition of the Pentateuch and the Haftorahs are stated in the Preface to Genesis.

The Revised Version is printed by permission of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge; and the Letteris Hebrew text, by the courtesy of the British and Foreign Bible Society.

In writing this first Jewish commentary in English on Numbers, I have embodied various glosses on that Book prepared by the Rev. Dr. J. Abelson; and on its Haftorahs, by the Rev. S. Frampton. I am also indebted to Prof. I. Epstein and the Rev. M. Rosenbaum for much helpful criticism; and to the Revs. Dr. A. Cohen and J. F. Stern, for kindly reading the book in proof.

I have pleasure in adding the names of HENRY VAN DEN BERGH, Esq., London, and his brother, SENATOR S. VAN DEN BERGH, The Hague, to those wise-hearted donors—Mr. and Mrs. Leo Shaerf, Mark Ostrer, Esq., and B. T. Globe, Esq., Liverpool—whose generosity renders possible the publication of this work.

Rabbis, the The religious authorities in the Talmudim and Midrashim.

Samaritan Pentateuch. The Samaritan adaptation of the Massoretic Text; see also Targum.

Septuagint The Greek translation of the Bible made by the Jews in Egypt in the third century B.C.E. The word Septuagint means seventy, because it was believed to be the work of seventy-two scholars selected for that purpose by one of the Ptolemy rulers.

Sifri Or, Sifré. Oldest Rabbinic Commentary on Numbers and Deuteronomy.

Symmachus A literal Greek version of the Pentateuch by a Hellenistic Jew of the second century.

Targum Ancient translations or paraphrases of the Bible into the Aramaic vernacular then spoken by the Jews. The most important of these is the translation of the Pentateuch that is ascribed to Onkelos, the Proselyte, a Mishna teacher of the first century. The Jonathan Targum is a freer paraphrase of the Bible, ascribed to Jonathan ben Uzziel, a pupil of Hillel. An earlier and fragmentary version of this paraphrase is known as the Jerusalem Targum. The Samaritans also have an Aramaic Targum, embodying their traditional interpretation of the Torah.

Talmud Body of Jewish law and legend comprising the Mishna and the Gemara, and containing the authoritative explanation of the Torah by the Rabbis of Palestine and Babylon, from the years 100 B.C.E. to 500 A.C.E.

Name. The oldest name for the fourth book of the Pentateuch is חמש הפקודים, "the Fifth of the Musterings"; i.e. that one of the five books of Moses which describes the numbering of the Israelites. Later it came to be known by the fourth word in the opening sentence—במדבר Bemidbar, "In the Wilderness"—a name that lends a unity of time and place to the varied happenings and laws in the Book. The current English designation Numbers is derived from the Septuagint.

Contents. In contrast with Leviticus which is almost entirely legislative in character, Numbers, like Exodus, combines history and law. The greater portion of the Book is devoted to the vicissitudes of the Israelites in their wanderings after the exodus till, thirty-eight years later, they are about to enter the Holy Land. Numbers is no mere chronicle of the outstanding events during the journey in the wilderness. It interprets these events, and shows forth the faithful watchfulness of God in every distress and danger, as well as the stern severity of the Divine judgments against rebellion and apostasy. In addition to the story of this discipline, it records the laws and ordinances given during that journey; laws relating to the Sanctuary, the camp, and the purification of life; and such civil and political ordinances as would enable the Israelites to fulfil the task God assigned to them among the nations.

Divisions. 1. Chapters i—x, 10 contain the laws and regulations given in the wilderness of Sinai : the first census, the choice of the Levites, the laws concerning the ordeal of jealousy, the Nazirites, the Menorah, and the Supplementary Passover. This section also includes the account of the consecration of the Altar and the Priestly Blessing.

2. Chapters x, 11—xxi cover the thirty-eight years' wanderings till the arrival at Moab. They bring the incidents of Taberah, the "Graves of Lust," the appointment of the seventy elders, the punishment of Miriam, the mission of the Spies, the rebellion of Korah, the sin of Moses, and the conquest of the Amorite kingdoms. This section contains the command concerning Tzitzis and the ritual of the Red Heifer.

3. Chapters xxii–xxxvi describe the final happenings in Moab—the Testimony of Balaam to Israel's might, the zeal of Phinehas, the appointment of Joshua as the successor of Moses, the Midianite war, and the settlement East of the Jordan. Alongside these events, we have the commands concerning the second census, festival offerings, and vows ; the itinerary from Egypt to Jordan ; and a group of laws in connection with impending occupation of Canaan. This section of Numbers forms the transition to Deuteronomy, the Fifth Book of Moses.

CHAPTER I. MUSTERING THE PEOPLE

One month after the erection of the Tabernacle, Moses is commanded to muster all the men of military age, i.e. those twenty years of age and upwards.

The total number of adult males is given in v. 46 as 603,550. This number is exactly the same as the number of individuals who paid the poll-tax six months previously—possibly because the census was taken once only, and that at the time of the taking of the poll-tax. All that is commanded in the present chapter may only be "to prepare a classified return of the census already taken, with a view to the proper arrangement of the tribes in camps, as their wanderings were about to begin" (H. Adler).

I. BEMIDBAR

Chapter I

1 1. And the Lord spake unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, in the tent of meeting, on the first day of the second month, in the second year after they were come out of the land of Egypt, saying, 2. Take ye the sum of all the congregation of the children of Israel, by their families, by their fathers' houses, according to the number of the names, every male, by their

1. tent of meeting. The Tabernacle ("the place where I will meet with you to speak there unto thee"; Exod. xxix, 42), the Tent of revelation.

2. take ye. The plural is used because the command is to be carried out by both Moses and Aaron; see next v.

take ye the sum. Heb. שאו את ראש here equivalent to, Prepare a classified return of the census already taken. It is not quite synonymous with פקד, the root used in iii, 15, 40, when the command is merely to number the first-born or the Levites.

by their polls. lit. "skulls"; individual persons, as in the English poll-tax or head-money.

number them by their hosts. As military men : the march towards Canaan was to be that of a disciplined nation and not a rabble of runaway slaves (Luzzatto). The aged, infirm and maimed were therefore exempted from the numbering, as were those under twenty years of age.

4. a man of every tribe. Twelve assessors, the head-man of each tribe, were to assist in the work of numbering.

Elizur. " God is my rock." Of the twenty-four proper names here given, nine contain the Divine name El, God ; three, the name Tzur, Rock—a frequent appellation for God ; and in three Shaddai occurs. Shaddai is usually translated " Almighty " and derived from a Heb. root " to overpower." It has also been derived from the Arabic שדא which means " to heap benefits," and " to reconcile persons at enmity with one another." This idea of beneficence and peace is amply borne out by the passages in Genesis in which Shaddai occurs (Gen. XVII, 1 ; XXVIII, 3 ; XLIII, 14). The meaning conveyed by them is that of a Friend and Protector, who watches over the Patriarchs, shepherds them and bestows upon them and their descendants great moral and material good. Shaddai can therefore be translated " Dispenser of benefits " (Baron David Gunzburg in Revue des Etudes Juives, XLVII).

14. Eliasaph. "God hath added."

Deuel. Or, "Reuel," (II, 14). "God is a friend." Both forms seem to be an abbreviation of Daruel (Luzzatto).

15. Ahira. Shortened form of Ahirea, "the (Divine Brother is a friend."

These names are invaluable documents of early life in Israel and throw light on the religious feelings of the ancient Israelite. They are genuine and trustworthy, as they can each be paralleled in Babylonian and Arabian inscriptions. If, as alleged by hostile critics, these names were merely made to pattern and the product of the age of Ezra, they should be met with in the Books of Ezra and Nehemiah. This, however, is not the case; and, in fact, such characteristic names as those compounded with Amm, Zur, and Shaddai are never found in post-Exilic times. "It is quite certain that the names contained in the lists in the Book of Numbers cannot be rightly assigned to any other period than that of Moses" (Hommel).

16. called of the congregation. "Elect of the congregation" (AJ); summoned as the congregation's representative men.

the son of Ochran. 14. Of Gad; Eliasaph the son of Deuel. 15. Of Naphtali; Ahira the son of Enan. 16. These are they that were called of the congregation, the princes of the tribes of their fathers; they were the heads of the thousands of Israel. 17. And Moses and Aaron took these men which are expressed by name: 18. and they assembled all the congregation together on the first day of the second month, and they declared their pedigrees after their families, by their fathers' houses, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, by their polls. 19. As the LORD commanded Moses, so he numbered them in the wilderness of Sinai.*ii

20. And the children of Reuben, Israel's first-born, their generations, by their families, by their fathers' houses, according to the number the thousands. A "thousand" denotes a large division of the people for judicial or military purposes (II Sam. XVIII, 1; compare the similar use of the old English word "hundred").

18. on the first day. The classifying of the returns began, but was not necessarily completed, on that one day.

they declared their pedigrees. Investigated the dates of their birth, to ascertain whether they were over twenty years of age; or, their pedigrees were written down (Ibn Ezra).

Arrangement of the Camp, and Order of the March

2. by his own standard. Or, with his own division. The Heb. degel may mean the larger field-sign of every division of three tribes, or the army corps itself. The latter is the meaning attached to the word in the recently discovered Jewish papyri at Elephantine.

ensign. The smaller banner carried at the head of the different tribes.

According to the Talmud, a pictorial emblem was engraven on the ensign of each tribe. Thus, on that of Judah was depicted a young lion, as a mark of Judah's prowess and in accordance with Jacob's blessing (Gen. xlix, 9).

that cometh nigh shall be put to death. 52. And the children of Israel shall pitch their tents,
every man by his own camp, and every man

53. But the Levites shall pitch round about the tabernacle of the testimony, that there be no wrath upon the congregation of the children of Israel: and the Levites shall keep the charge of the tabernacle of the testimony. 54. Thus did the children of Israel; according to all that the LORD commanded Moses, so did they.*iii

CHAPTER II

2 1. And the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying, 2. The children of Israel shall pitch every man by his own standard, with the ensigns of their fathers' houses: over against the tent of meeting shall they pitch round about.

The whole encampment was in the form of a quadrilateral, lying four-square with the Tabernacle in the centre. This central portion was called in the Talmud, the Camp of the Shechinah. Nearest to it, and surrounding it on all four sides as a protecting cordon, were the camps of the Levitical families. Beyond these and enclosing them was the camp of the Israelites—the tents of the twelve lay tribes, divided into four sections, each of which bore the name of its leading tribe.

as they encamp so shall they set forward. The repeated emphasis on discipline is noteworthy. Israel—God's army —however great in numbers, is nothing, unless order and discipline reign in the midst thereof. " Order is heaven's first law."

Chapter III

The Levites and their Duties

1. generations. As no descendants of Moses are named, " generations " is here equivalent to happenings; i.e. the chapter relates what happened to Aaron and his sons at the hand of Moses, who appoints the Levites ministers unto them (Ehrlich).

in the day that the Lord spake. " When the Lord spake."

threescore and two thousand and seven hundred.
27. And those that pitch next unto him shall be the tribe of Asher: and the prince of the children of Asher shall be Pagiel the son of Ochran:
28. and his host, and those that were numbered of them, were forty and one thousand and five hundred: 29. and the tribe of Naphtali: and the prince of the children of Naphtali shall be Ahira the son of Enan: 30. and his host, and those that were numbered of them, were fifty and three thousand and four hundred. 31. All that were numbered of the camp of Dan were an hundred thousand and fifty and seven thousand and six hundred. They shall set forth hindmost by their standards.

32. These are they that were numbered of the children of Israel by their fathers' houses: all that were numbered of the camps according to their hosts were six hundred thousand and three thousand and five hundred and fifty.
33. But the Levites were not numbered among the children of Israel; as the LORD commanded Moses. 34. Thus did the children of Israel;
according to all that the LORD commanded Moses, so they pitched by their standards, and so they set forward, every one by their families,
according to their fathers' houses.*iv

Moses in the day that the LORD spake with which were annointed, whom he consecrated to and Abihu died before the LORD, when they offered strange fire before the LORD, in the wilderness of Sinai, and they had no children:

and Eleazar and Ithamar ministered in the priest's office in the presence of Aaron their father.

5. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
6. Bring the tribe of Levi near, and set them before Aaron the priest, that they may minister unto him. 7. And they shall keep his charge, and the charge of the whole congregation before the tent of meeting, to do the service of the tabernacle. 8. And they shall keep all the furniture of the tent of meeting, and the charge of the children of Israel, to do the service of the tabernacle. 9. And thou shalt give the Levites unto Aaron and to his sons: they are wholly given unto him from the children of Israel.
10. And thou shalt appoint Aaron and his sons, and they shall keep their priesthood: and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.

11. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

10. keep their priesthood. Not neglect the duties which are specifically theirs by falling back upon the Levites as substitutes.

instead of all the firstborn. The sacredness of the first-born, and the priestly functions which they are enjoined to perform, date from the time of the slaying of the first-born in the land of Egypt. At the worship of the Golden Calf, the first-born forfeited their special priestly privileges through their participation in that idolatrous worship. The Levites were chosen in their stead, in recognition of their firm and faithful stand at that hour of apostasy.

13. mine they shall be. The Levites.

15. every male from a month old and upward. The Levites were numbered in this manner because they were substitutes for the first-born who, by Divine command, were to be redeemed "from a month old" (Numb. XVIII, 16).

21–26. The Gershonites were to encamp on the western side of the Tabernacle, and were charged with carrying its tapestry.

And I, behold, I have taken the Levites from among the children of Israel instead of all the firstborn that openeth the womb among the children of Israel; and the Levites shall be mine: 13. for all the firstborn are mine; on the day that I smote all the firstborn in the land of Egypt I hallowed unto me all the firstborn in Israel, both man and beast: mine they shall be; I am the LORD.*v

14. And the LORD spake unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, saying, 15. Number the children of Levi by their father's houses, by their families: every male from a month old and upward shalt thou number them. 16. And Moses numbered them according to the word of the LORD, as he was commanded. 17. And these were the sons of Levi by their names; Gershon, and Kohath, and Merari. 18. 38. those that pitch . . . eastward. The most honourable place in the camp, and the most convenient for constant and direct access to the Sanctuary.

39. twenty and two thousand. This total of 22,000 Levites falls short by 300 of the separate totals of the divisions mentioned in this chapter. The Talmud explains the discrepancy by saying that the Levites were taken and counted instead of the first-born of the Israelites and as a "redemption" for them. Hence, their own first-born, who amounted to 300, had to be excluded, as being ineligible for the purpose of redeeming other first-born.

43. twenty . . . and thirteen. The first-born number 273 more than the Levites ; and as no substitutes were available for the redemption of this extra 273, they had to be redeemed independently, by a payment of five shekels a piece, as the redemption price of a male child under five years old who has been vowed unto God ; Lev. xxvii, 6.

At first sight, the numbers in these chapters present definite difficulties. Six hundred thousand adult males imply a total population of over two millions. How did such a large multitude live on the arid peninsula of Sinai, whose present population is under 10,000 ? But Scripture nowhere affirms that the Israelites lived for forty years upon the natural produce of the desert, but that they were fed miraculously with manna (Exod. xvi, 4, 35). And unless miracles are prejudged to be impossible, account must be taken of the miraculous provision made for the sustenance of the Israelites till the time that they entered Canaan. Moreover, the resources of the Wilderness must not be judged by present conditions. The word 'Wilderness' does not mean a barren tract, but an uninhabited country which may be very fertile. And traces exist to show that the 'Wilderness' not only could but did support at one time an extensive population. For a powerful presentation of Israel. 42. And Moses numbered, as the LORD commanded him, all the firstborn among the children of Israel. 43. And all the firstborn males according to the number of names, from a month old and upward, of those that were numbered of them, were twenty and two thousand two hundred and threescore and thirteen.

44. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
45. Take the Levites instead of all the firstborn among the children of Israel, and the cattle of the Levites instead of their cattle: and the Levites shall be mine; I am the LORD. 46. And for the redemption of the two hundred and threescore and thirteen of the firstborn of the children of Israel, which are over and above the number of the Levites, 47. thou shalt take five shekels apiece by the poll; after the shekel of the sanctuary shalt thou take them (the shekel is twenty gerahs):

evidence that this whole region had a higher rainfall, and was much more productive, at the time of the Exodus than now, See Huntingon's "The Climate of Ancient Palestine (Bulletin of The American Geographical Society, vol. XL, 1908).

The other objection is that the number of first-born males is given as 22,273—a very small number in proportion to the total number of males. What is meant is the number of first-born males under twenty years of age at the time of the census. The law did not have retrospective force, so as to include all first-born sons throughout the nation who themselves were fathers or grandfathers at the time.

47. shekel of the Sanctuary. Or, "the sacred shekel"; see on Exod. XXX, 13. הקדש has the force of an adjective, as in לשון הקדש "the Sacred Language."

CHAPTER IV

NUMBERING OF THE LEVITES QUALIFIED FOR SERVICE AND RULES OF SERVICE

1–20. THE KOHATHITES AND THEIR DUTIES

2. take the sum of the sons of Kohath. This chapter gives a second mustering of the Levites for the service to be performed by those who were between the ages of 30 and 50. The Kohathites are given priority because they were of the family of Moses and Aaron.

3. the service. lit. " warfare " ; perhaps implying that the Levites formed an organised body appointed for God's work under the command of superior officials, as were the rest of the Israelites who were numbered for war (McNeile).

to do the work. In connection with the transport of the sacred objects.

48. and thou shalt give the money wherewith
the odd number of them is redeemed unto Aaron and to his sons. 49. And Moses took the redemption-money from them that were over and above them that were redeemed by the Levites: 50.
from the firstborn of the children of Israel took he the money; a thousand three hundred and threescore and five shekels, after the shekel
of the sanctuary: 51. and Moses gave the redemption-money unto Aaron and to his sons, according to the word of the LORD, as the LORD commanded Moses.*vii

CHAPTER IV

4 1. And the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying, 2. Take the sum of the sons of Kohath from among the sons of Levi, by their families, by their fathers' houses, 3. from thirty years old and upward even until fifty years old,
all that enter upon the service, to do the work in the tent of meeting. 4. This is the service of the sons of Kohath in the tent of meeting, about the most holy things: 5. when the camp
setteth forward, Aaron shall go in, and his sons,
and they shall take down the veil of the screen,
and cover the ark of the testimony with it:

4. about the most holy things. The Ark, the Table, the Candlestick, the Altars, the Veil and "the vessels of ministry" (v. 12).

5. Aaron shall go in. To cover up the holy vessels in the ways prescribed. The Kohathites would thus only have to carry the vessels, without actually touching them.

20. even for a moment. This translation of the Heb. כבלע את הקדש is quite uncertain and unsatisfactory. Better, as the sanctuary is being taken apart (Ehrlich). This explains the meaning of בלע to be, to divide, to take to pieces, to destroy; cf. Yoma 5a. The lower members of the priesthood are not to be present when the unity of the Sanctuary is being destroyed by being taken apart, as they would lose all reverence for the Sanctuary if they were to witness it.

And when Aaron and his sons have made an end of covering the sanctuary, and all the furniture of the sanctuary, as the camp is to set forward ; after that, the sons of Kohath shall come to bear it : but they shall not touch the holy things, lest they die. These things are the burden of the sons of Kohath in the tent of meeting. 16. And the charge of Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest shall be the oil for the light, and the sweet incense, and the continual meal offering, and the anointing oil, the charge of all the tabernacle, and of all that therein is, the sanctuary, and the furniture thereof.*m

Cut ye not off the tribe of the families of the Kohathites from among the Levites : 19. but thus do unto them, that they may live, and not die, when they approach unto the most holy things : Aaron and his sons shall go in, and appoint them every one to his service and to his burden : 20. but they shall not go in to see the holy things even for a moment, lest they die.

1–4. Removal of Unclean Persons from the Camp

2. put out of the camp every leper. After detailing the arrangement of the camp and the ordering of the march, there follows the injunction that the ceremonial purity of the camp is to be safeguarded. Three classes of unclean persons are to be excluded; 1) the leper; 2) one that hath an 'issue' (see Lev. xv); and 3) one who has become polluted by contact with the dead (Numb. xix, 11–22).

they defile not their camp, in the midst whereof I dwell. 4. And the children of Israel did so, and put them out without the camp: as the LORD
spake unto Moses, so did the children of Israel.
5. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

According to the Rabbis, the first was to be excluded from the whole camp. Those afflicted with issues were excluded from the Sanctuary proper (מחנה שכינה) and the Levite encampment (מחנה לויה) around the Sanctuary. One who had had contact with the dead was only excluded from the Sanctuary proper. Later in Canaan there were special houses outside the cities for lepers.

5–10. Restitution for Wrongs. The removal of physical impurities must be accompanied by the removal of moral wrongs. This section, supplementary to Lev. VI, 1–7, deals with payments to be made in compensation for wrongs done to the property of another.

a trespass against the LORD. Breach of trust or wrongful misappropriation of the property of another; see Lev. VI, 2. The laws there laid down in regard to restitution and the bringing of guilt offering are here repeated, with further provisions in v. 7 regarding public confession, and in v. 8 regarding the property of a wronged person who died without leaving any kinsman to whom restitution might be made.

10. every man's hallowed things shall be his. Every man who brings a gift to the Altar may allocate it to any priest he chooses, and no fellow-priest may dispute his right to it.

11–31. Ordeal of Jealousy

This ordinance was intended to remove the very suspicion of marital unfaithfulness in the midst of Israel. As such crime is destructive of the foundations of social order, it was necessary to arrive at certainty in cases of doubt, and at the same time to afford protection to the innocent wife against unreasonable jealousies. If a husband suspect his wife of unfaithfulness, he may bring her to the Sanctuary for an oath of purgation and the drinking of "the water of bitterness." If she is innocent, no injuries result; if guilty, the combined oath and ordeal produce physical effects that proclaim her guilt to the world. This law is the only explicit instance in Scripture of trial by ordeal, an institution that was well-nigh universal in antiquity and a regular feature of Western European life down to the late Middle Ages. In Israel, the Ordeal of Jealousy was abolished by Johanan ben Zakkai soon after the Destruction of the Temple. From that time, divorce alone was customary in cases of well-proved faithlessness.

12. if any man's wife go aside. From the right path and become suspect in the eyes of her husband. By a slight change of punctuation the Heb. verb can be translated, "if any man's wife commit folly," and the Rabbis base thereon the saying, "No one sinneth unless the spirit of folly has entered into him."

commit a trespass against him. Or, "act unfaithfully against him" (AJ).

13. be kept close, and she be defiled. Or, "she being defiled secretly" (AJ). Even the presence of one witness to such defilement ruled out the Ordeal procedure. She was then tried on the evidence.

14. spirit of jealousy. i.e. an uncontrollable impulse. The Rabbis required the husband first to prohibit the woman, in the presence of witnesses, to hold any further communication with the man suspected; and then only, in case of the wife's disobedience, could the husband subject her to the Ordeal. The Ordeal could not be made use of if there was any connivance on the part of the husband; see also on v. 28.

11. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
12. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, If any man's wife go aside, and commit a trespass against him, 13. and a man lie with her carnally, and it be hid from the eyes of her husband, and be kept close, and she be defiled, and there be no witness against her, neither she

and she be defiled: or if the spirit of jealousy

and she be not defiled: 15. then shall the man bring his wife unto the priest, and shall bring her oblation for her, the tenth part of an ephah
of barley meal; he shall pour no oil upon it, nor put frankincense thereon; for it is a meal offering of jealousy, a meal offering of memorial, bringing iniquity to remembrance. 16. And the bringing iniquity to remembrance. Unlike other offerings it is a reminder not of Divine mercy, but of the guilt to be discovered and to be punished by God. Dillmann considers this phrase to be the technical term for accusation; see I Kings XVII, 18; Ezek. XXI, 23f.

22. Amen. Its original meaning is, "So be it"! A solemn affirmation to a preceding statement. Whosoever answers Amen to an oath, it is as if he had himself pronounced that oath.

In later times, Amen becomes in the Synagogue—as distinct from the Temple—the regular liturgical response of the worshippers. It was often doubled at the end of a psalm or prayer. Great spiritual value was attached by the Rabbis to the reverent response of Amen in prayer. "Whosoever says Amen with all his strength, to him the gates of Paradise shall be opened." Amen is now one of the commonest words of human speech. Three great Religions have brought it into the daily lives of men of all races, climes and cultures.

23. in a book. On anything that can receive writing (Mishnah). In Roman times, a royal proselyte to Judaism, Queen Helena, donated a tablet of gold to the Temple, with the chapter of the Ordeal of Jealousy written on it, and the priests would transcribe the oath from that tablet.

The solemnity of the oath, and the awe-inspiring ritual which accompanied it, might of themselves deter a woman from taking it, unless she were supported by the consciousness of innocence (Speaker's Bible).

The Law of the Nazirite

The previous chapter provided for the exclusion of certain forms of guilt and defilement from the pale of God's people. The present chapter offers an opening to the life of the devotee who, not content with observing what and her thigh shall fall away: and the woman shall be a curse among her people. 28. And if the woman be not defiled, but be clean; then she shall be free, and shall conceive seed. 29. This is the law of jealousy, when a wife, being under her husband, goeth aside, and is defiled, 30. or when the spirit of jealousy cometh upon a man, and he be jealous over his wife; then shall he set the woman before the LORD, and the priest shall execute upon her all this law. 31. And the man shall be free from iniquity, and that woman shall bear her iniquity.

is obligatory, seeks austere modes of self-dedication. The Nazirite vow includes three things; 1) the hair to remain unshorn during the period of the vow; 2) abstinence from intoxicants; 3) avoidance of contact with a dead body. The Nazirite vow was often taken by men and women alike purely for personal reasons, such as thanksgiving for recovery from illness, or for the birth of a child. The minimum period of the vow was thirty days, but we have instances of Nazirite vows extending over repeated periods of seven years. Scripture records also life-long Nazirites who, however, were not bound by all the regulations of the temporary Nazirite. Mention is also made of the Rechabites, who abstained from wine (Jer. XXXV) and, in later times, the Essenes, whose life was semi-monastic. The institution in its entirety disappeared with the destruction of the Temple.

The Talmud, however, takes the phrase על הנפש as referring to the Nazirite himself, explaining that he was ordered to make atonement for his vow to abstain from drinking wine. Some Rabbis held that man would be called to account for any unnecessary self-denial in regard to the innocent pleasures of life.

22–27. THE PRIESTLY BLESSING

The simple and beautiful threefold petition which follows in v. 24–26 is known as ברכת כהנים, "The Priestly Blessing." It is as it were the crown and seal of the whole sacred order by which Israel was now fully organised as the people of God, for the march to the Holy Land. The Heb. text consists of three short verses, of three, five, and seven words respectively. "It mounts by gradual stages from the petition for material blessing and protection tc that for Divine favour as a spiritual blessing, and in beautiful climax culminates in the petition for God's most consummate gift, shalom, peace, the welfare in which all material and spiritual well-being is comprehended" (Kautzsch). The fifteen words that constitute these three verses contain a world of trust in God and faith in God. They are clothed in a rhythmic form of great beauty, and they fall with majestic solemnity upon the ear of the worshipper. The Priestly Blessing was one of the most impressive features of the Service in the Temple at Jerusalem, and holds a prominent place in the worship of the Synagogue. In the Temple it was pronounced from a special tribune (duchan; hence the current name "duchaning") after the sacrifice of the daily offering, morning and evening. In the Synagogue, it was early introduced into the daily Amidah (Authorised Prayer Book, p. 53). Its pronouncement by the Priests is in Ashkenazi communities limited, as a rule, to Festivals when not falling on Sabbaths. The ancient melody that accompanies its pronouncement by the Priests is in its original form weird and most impressive. Since the Reformation, the Priestly Blessing is a constituent of the service in many Protestant Churches.

23. on this wise ye shall bless. The Rabbis based on these words their specific regulations as to the manner in which

22. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
23. Speak unto Aaron and unto his sons, saying,
On this wise ye shall bless the children of Israel;
ye shall say unto them,
24. The LORD bless thee, and keep thee:

alone the Blessing was to be pronounced. Only a priest, and not "a stranger," was to pronounce it; it was to be done standing, and with outspread hands; the priest must be sober when blessing; and it must be given in the Hebrew tongue. These prescriptions have deep spiritual implications for all time. A stranger cannot bless; blessing requires knowledge and loving understanding of the person or cause to be blessed. Furthermore, to bless others is a difficult task, requiring readiness for sacrifice and prayerfulness. And, unless the blessing is to prove a blight, he that blesses must be quite "sober"—the fanatic or he whose judgment is beclouded by hatred or prejudice can never truly bless anyone. The requirement as to the language of the Blessing is as vital as any. As far as the Jew is concerned, every measure on his behalf must be in the Sacred Tongue—i.e. translatable into Hebrew terms, and in line with Jewish history and Jewish ideals.

24. THE GUARDIANSHIP OF GOD

24. the LORD bless thee. With life, health, prosperity.

thee. Why is the singular used? A current explanation is, as the prerequisite of all blessing for Israel is unity, all Israel is to feel as one organic body.

and keep thee. Or, "guard thee"; grant thee His Divine protection against evil, sickness, poverty, calamity. The LORD is the Keeper of Israel. He delivers our souls from death, keeps our eyes from tears, and our feet from stumbling. The Rabbis gave a wide application to these three Heb. words: May God bless thee, with possessions; and keep thee, from these possessions possessing thee. May God guard thee from sin, and shield thee from all destructive influences (מן המזיקין) that so often follow in the wake of earthly prosperity.

26 יִשָּׂא יְהוָה ׀ פָּנָיו אֵלֶיךָ וְיָשֵׂם לְךָ שָׁלוֹם׃ ס

25. The Grace of God

25. his face to shine upon thee. Light in Scripture is the symbol not only of happiness and purity but also of friendship. To cause the face to shine upon one, is the Biblical idiom for to be friendly to him. When God's "face" is said to be turned towards man and to shine upon him, it implies the outpouring of Divine love and salvation (Ps. lxxx, 20). In contrast to this, we have the prayer, "Hide not Thy face from me."

The Rabbis interpret the words, "make his face to shine upon thee," in a purely spiritual sense, to imply the gift of knowledge and moral insight. "May He give thee enlightment of the eyes, the light of the Shechinah; may the fire of Prophecy burn in the souls of thy children; may the light of the Torah illumine thy home" (Sifri).

gracious unto thee. This is more than "keep thee" in the preceding verse. May He be beneficent unto thee, and graciously fulfil thy petition. The Rabbis understand ויחנך in the sense of "May He give thee grace in the eyes of thy fellowmen"; i.e. may He make thee lovable, and beloved in the eyes of others. Rabbi Chanina ben Dosa said, "He in whom his fellow-creatures take delight, in him the All-present takes delight."

26. The Peace of God

26. lift up his countenance upon thee. Or, "turn His face unto thee"; turn His attention, His loving care unto thee.

give thee. lit. "set thee," establish for thee. The Heb. is not ויתן but וישם.

peace. "Peace in thy coming in, peace in thy going out, peace with all men. Great is peace for it is the seal of all blessings" (Talmud). The Heb. shalom means not only freedom from all disaster; but health, welfare, security and tranquility; "the peace which alone reconciles and strengthens, which calms us and clears our vision, which

25. The LORD make his face to shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee:

26. The LORD lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace.

frees us from restlessness and from the bondage of unsatisfied desire, which gives us the consciousness of attainment, the consciousness of permanence even amid the transitoriness of ourselves and of outward things" (Montefiore).

"Peace, say the Rabbis, is one of the pillars of the world; without it the social order could not exist. Therefore let a man do his utmost to promote it. Thus it is that the greatest Sages made a point of being the first to salute passers-by in the street. Peace is the burthen of the prayer with which every service in the synagogue concludes: 'May He who maketh peace in His high heavens grant peace unto us!' And so a twofold duty is indicated. We are not only to be peaceful ourselves, but to help others to be peaceful also. Peace is not only a personal, but a national ideal. There are, doubtless, occasions when war is defensible as a less evil than a disastrous and dishonourable peace. There are worse things, it is true, than war; but the worst of them is the belief that war is indispensable. Such a belief is fatal to the ultimate establishment of universal peace. The Jew who is true to himself will labour with especial energy in the cause of peace. The war-loving Jew is a contradiction in terms. Only the peace-loving Jew is a true follower of his Prophets, who set universal brotherhood in the forefront of their pictures of coming happiness for mankind, predicting the advent of a Golden Age when nations should not lift up sword against nation, nor learn war any more" (Morris Joseph).

Peace is no negative conception and is not the equivalent of inactivity. Whether for the individual or for society, it is that harmonious co-operation of all human forces towards ethical and spiritual ends which men call the Kingdom of God. The Prophets longed for a Messianic peace that should pervade the universe, and include all men, all peoples—that should include also the beasts of the field; Isaiah, XI, 6–10.

27. put my name. Announce to the children of Israel the blessed and beneficent nearness of the living God. In this prayer on behalf of Israel, the priests pronounced over the people the Ineffable Name of God. Outside the Temple, Adonay was invariably substituted for the Tetragrammaton.

and I will bless them. i.e. the children of Israel. The Israelites say; Why didst Thou order the priest to bless us? We want Thy blessing only. And God replies, It is I who stand by the priests and bless you (Talmud). The priest was no Mediator; and no priest could say, I bless the children of Israel. God is the source of, and He alone can give effect, to, the blessing pronounced by the priests. They were merely the channel through which the blessing was conveyed to the Israelites.

CHAPTER VII

THE OFFERINGS OF THE PRINCES

In this chapter we have the narrative of the presentation of identical gifts by the princes of each of the twelve tribes at the dedication of the Altar. This presentation took place at the time when Moses, after having completed the erection of the Tabernacle, anointed and sanctified it as well as the Altar and all the vessels connected with it

CHAPTER VII

7 1. And it came to pass on the day that Moses had made an end of setting up the tabernacle, and had anointed it and sanctified it, and all the furniture thereof, and the altar and all the vessels thereof, and had anointed them and sanctified them; 2. that the princes of Israel, the heads of their fathers' houses, offered; these were the princes of the tribes, these are they that were over them that were numbered: 3. and they brought their oblation before the LORD, six covered wagons, and twelve oxen; a wagon for every two of the princes, and for each one an ox: and they presented them before the tabernacle. 4. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 5. Take it of them, that they may be to do

(Lev. VIII, 10, 11). Chronologically the present chapter follows immediately after Lev. VIII. The offerings consist of gifts for the transport of the Tabernacle, and golden and silver vessels for the service of the Sanctuary, with sacrificial animals for the dedication ceremony. They were offered on twelve separate days. The narrative, describing each in unaltered language, reflects the stately solemnity that marked the repetition of the same ceremonial day by day. "None among the princes wished to outrival the others, but such harmony reigned among them and such unity of spirit that God valued the service of each as if he had brought not only his own gifts but also those of his companions" (Midrash).

12. Nahshon the son of Amminadab. The "prince" appointed to act with Moses in the census (I, 7) and as captain of the camp of Judah (II, 3). The names of the other princes and the order in which they are mentioned in the present chapter are the same as given previously in connection with the march. "Nahshon was rewarded in this way for the devotion he had shown to God during the passage through the Red Sea. When Israel, beset by the Egyptians, reached the sea, the tribes hesitated to enter the service of the tent of meeting; and thou shalt give them unto the Levites, to every man according to his service. 6. And Moses took the wagons and the oxen, and gave them unto the Levites. 7. Two wagons and four oxen he gave unto the sons of Gershon, according to their service: 8. and four wagons and eight oxen he gave unto the sons of Merari, according unto their service, under the hand of Ithamar the son of Aaron the priest. 9. But unto the sons of Kohath he gave none: because the service of the sanctuary belonged unto them; they bare it upon their shoulders. 10. And the princes offered for the dedication-gift of the altar in the day that it was anointed, even the princes offered their oblation before the altar. 11. And the LORD said unto Moses, They shall offer their oblation, each prince on his day, for the dedication of the altar.*v s

12. And he that offered his oblation the first day was Nahshon the son of Amminadab, of the tribe of Judah: 13. and his oblation was one silver charger, the weight thereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil for a meal

the sea and one urged the other to be the first to do so. At that moment Nahshon, the prince of Judah, fearlessly plunged in, firmly trusting that God would stand by Israel in their need" (Midrash).

14. spoon. Better, cup. Such incense-cups are to be seen in the representation of the Table of shewbread on the Arch of Titus.

17. peace offerings. Were an expression of the joyous gratitude of the worshipper to God. Hence they were, in these instances, the most multiplied, as befitted an occasion of joy and of thankful communion with God.

The offerings of the princes were a favourite theme for the later Rabbinical homilists. They held that though the offerings of all the princes were identical these had a different significance for each tribe. From the time of Jacob, who foretold it to them, every tribe knew his future history to the time of the Messiah; hence, at the dedication of the Altar, each prince brought such offerings as symbolized the history of his tribe. Apart from the significance that the offerings of the princes had for each tribe respectively, they were held also to symbolize the history of the world from the time of Adam to the erection of the Tabernacle. The following comments on the gifts of the princes of Issachar (v. 18), of Reuben (v. 30) and on v. 84f. are fair samples of this symbolisation.

18. prince of Issachar. "The tribe of Issachar had good claims to be among the first to offer sacrifices, for this tribe devoted itself to the study of the Torah, so that the great scholars in Israel were among them; and then, too, it was this tribe that had proposed to the others the offering ; 14. one golden spoon of ten shekels, full of incense ; 15. one young bullock, one ram, one he-lamb of the first year, for a burnt offering ; 16. one male of the goats for a sin offering ; 17. and for the sacrifice of peace offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five he-lambs of the first year : this was the oblation of Nahshon the son of Amminadab.

18. On the second day Nethanel the son of Zuar, prince of Issachar, did offer : 19. he offered for his oblation one silver charger, the weight thereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary ; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil for a meal offering ; 20. one golden bringing of the dedication offerings. As this was the tribe of erudition, its gifts symbolized things appertaining to the Torah. The silver charger and the silver bowl corresponded to the Written and to the Oral Torah ; and both vessels alike are filled with fine flour, for the two Laws are not antagonistic, but form a unity and contain the loftiest teachings. The fine flour was mingled with oil, just as knowledge of the Torah should be accompanied by good deeds ; for he who occupies himself with the Torah, who works good deeds, and keeps himself aloof from sin, fills his Creator with delight. The golden spoon of ten shekels symbolizes the Two Tables on which God wrote the Ten Commandments, and which contained between the Commandments all the particulars of the Torah, just as the spoon was filled with incense. The three burnt offerings, the bullock, the ram, and the lamb corresponded to the three groups of Priests, Levites, and Israelites ; whereas the kid of the goats alluded to the proselytes, for the Torah was revealed not only for Israel but for all the world ; and a proselyte who studies the Torah is no less than a high priest " (Midrash).

30. prince of the children of Reuben. "The gifts of the tribe of Reuben symbolised the events in the life of their forefather Reuben. The silver charger recalled Reuben's words when he saved the life of Joseph, whom his brothers wanted to kill, for 'the tongue of the just is as choice silver.' The silver bowl, from which was sprinkled the sacrificial blood, recalled the same incident, for it was Reuben who advised his brothers to throw Joseph into the pit rather than to kill him. The spoon of ten shekels of gold symbolised the deed of Reuben, who restrained Jacob's sons from bloodshed, hence the gold out of which the spoon was fashioned had a blood-red colour. The spoon was filled with incense, and so too did Reuben fill his days with fasting and prayer until God forgave his sin with Bilhah, and his 'prayer was set forth before God as incense.' As spoon of ten shekels, full of incense; 21. one young bullock, one ram, one he-lamb of the first year, for a burnt offering; 22. one male of the goats for a sin offering; 23. and for the sacrifice of peace offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five he-lambs of the first year: this was the oblation of Nethanel the son of Zuar.

24. On the third day Eliab the son of Helon, prince of the children of Zebulun: 25. his oblation was one silver charger, the weight thereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil for a meal offering; 26. one golden spoon of ten shekels, full of incense; 27. one young bullock, one ram, one he-lamb of the first year, for a burnt offering; 28. one male of the goats for a sin offering; 29. and for the sacrifice of peace offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five he-lambs of the first year: this was the oblation of Eliab the son of Helon.

30. On the fourth day Elizur the son of Shedeur, prince of the children of Reuben: 31. his oblation was one silver charger, the weight thereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with penance for this crime, Reuben offered the kid of the goats as a sin offering; whereas the two oxen of the peace offering corresponded to the two great deeds of Reuben, the deliverance of Joseph, and the long penance for his sin." (Midrash).

"The gifts of the twelve princes of the tribes were equal in number as well as in the size and width of the objects bestowed. None among them wished to outrival the others; and such harmony and unity of spirit reigned among them, that God valued the service of each as if he had brought not only his own gifts but also those of his companions. The sum total of the gifts of the twelve princes of the tribes had also a symbolical significance.

he heard the Voice speaking unto him. lit. "he heard the Voice making itself as speaking;" i.e. Moses was audibly addressed by a Voice, not as before on the peak of Sinai far away, but in the Sanctuary that was now in the midst of Israel; Exod. xxv, 22.

when Moses went into the tent of meeting to speak with him, then he heard the Voice speaking unto him from above the mercy-seat that was upon the ark of the testimony, from between the two cherubim : and he spake unto him.

"Moses in his humility felt that his mission as leader of the people ended with the erection of the Tabernacle, as Israel could now satisfy all their spiritual needs without his aid. But God said, As truly as thou livest, I have for thee a far greater task than any thou hast yet accomplished, for thou shalt instruct My children about 'clean and unclean,' and shalt teach them how to offer up offerings to Me. God hereupon called Moses to the Tabernacle, to reveal to him there the laws and teachings. The Voice that called Moses was as powerful as at the revelation at Sinai, still it was audible to none but Moses. Not even the angels heard it, for the words of God were destined exclusively for Moses" (Midrash).

THE MENORAH

viii, 1–4. The making of the Menorah is described in Exod. xxv. The command to light the lamps in the Tabernacle had been given briefly in Exod. xxv, 37 ; and in Exod. xxvii, 21 Aaron and his sons are specially entrusted with that duty.

2. when thou lightest the lamps. lit. " when thou causest the lamps to go up " ; i.e. when thou causest the flame of the lamps to go up.

" Why does this command follow immediately after the consecration of the Altar " ? asks the Midrash. The answer is, when Aaron saw the rich gifts which the princes offered on that occasion, his heart grew faint that neither he nor his tribe had a part in that consecration. Thereupon the Holy One, blessed be He, reassured him in the words, " By thy life, thine is greater glory than theirs, for thou lightest the Menorah." There is a further rabbinical saying : " The Sanctuary will on another occasion also be dedicated by kindling the lights, and then it will be done by thy descendants, the Hasmoneans. Thus greater glory is destined for thee than for the princes. Their offerings to the Sanctuary will be employed only as long as it endures, but the lights of the Chanukah festival shall shine for ever."

CHAPTER VIII

8 1. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2. Speak unto Aaron, and say unto him, When thou lightest the lamps, the seven lamps shall give light in front of the candlestick. 3. And Aaron did so; he lighted the lamps thereof so as to give light in front of the candlestick, as the LORD commanded Moses. 4. And this was the work of the candlestick, beaten work of way that they shall give out one combined blaze of light over against the central shaft of the candelabrum itself (Talmud). Israel said before God, "Lord of the Universe, Thou commandest us to illumine before Thee; art Thou not the Light of the world, and with Whom light dwelleth"? "Not that I require your light," was the Divine reply, "but that you may perpetuate the light which I conferred on you as an example to the nations of the world" (Talmud).

The Menorah is one of the favourite symbols of Judaism. Through its association with Chanukah, the Menorah has come to typify spiritual conquest, and that spiritual conquest is achieved neither by might nor by power but by God's spirit (see the Haftorah, which is the same as for the Sabbath of Chanukah). Israel, as the Servant of the Lord, is to perform his Divine task without violence: "he is not to strive nor cry; the bruised reed he is not to break, nor quench the smoking flax" (Isa. XLII, 3). The image employed by Isaiah to describe Israel's mission is the gentle agency of light, with its irresistible illumination of the surrounding darkness. "This is among the loftiest conceptions of all human thought. How new an idea it was, is measured by the length of time it has taken before the idea began slowly to make its way that force cannot conquer spirit" (Moulton).

5–26. Dedication of the Levites

The choice of the Levites for the service of the Sanctuary is given in III, 5–10 and their duties are detailed in IV. In view of the impending break-up of the camp, it was now necessary formally to dedicate them to their duties upon which they were about to enter.

6. take the Levites. “With kind words. Say unto them, Happy are ye inasmuch as ye have been found worthy to be servants to the Omnipresent” (Rashi). “For God elevates no man to an office unless He has tried him and found him worthy of his calling. He did not say, ‘and the Levites shall be Mine,’ before He had tried this tribe, and found them worthy. In Egypt none but the tribe of Levi observed the Torah, and clung to the token of the Abrahamic covenant; while the other tribes, abandoning both Torah and token of covenant, like the Egyptians, practised idolatry. In the desert, also, it was this tribe alone that did not take part in the worship of the Golden Calf. Justly, therefore, did God’s choice fall upon this godly tribe, who on this day were consecrated as the servants of God and His sanctuary” (Midrash).

cleanse them. Purify them from ritual uncleanness.

7. sprinkle. The Heb. is the infinitive. It does not, therefore, denote an act addressed to Moses which he himself must perform, an act that would have taken one person many months—but an action which he is to order to be performed (Ehrlich).

thereof, it was beaten work: according unto the pattern which the LORD had shewed Moses, so he made the candlestick.

5. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
6. Take the Levites from among the children of Israel, and cleanse them. 7. And thus shalt thou do unto them, to cleanse them: sprinkle the water of expiation upon them, and let them cause a razor to pass over all their flesh, and let them wash their clothes, and cleanse themselves. 8. Then let them take a young bullock, and its meal offering, fine flour mingled with oil, and another young bullock shalt thou take for a sin offering. 9. And thou shalt present the Levites before the tent of meeting: and thou shalt assemble the whole congregation of the children of Israel: 10. and thou shalt present
the Levites before the LORD: and the children of Israel shall lay their hands upon the Levites:

water of expiation. lit. "water of sin"; i.e. water which removes sin; according to Rashi, it was the water used in the rites connected with the ordinance of the Red Heifer (XIX, 9) for the removal of defilement due to contact with a dead body. Among the large number of Levites to be consecrated some must have required such purification.

and let them wash their clothes. An act enjoined in Scripture as a preparation for any special religious service; Gen. XXXV, 2; Exod. XIX, 10. This ceremonial cleansing symbolised the inward purity required of those who bore the vessels of the Sanctuary.

10. before the LORD. Before the Altar of sacrifice.

lay their hands upon the Levites. The representatives of the Israelites laid their hands upon the representatives of the Levites, in order to indicate that the whole community offered them to the service of God; cf. Lev. I, 4.

a wave offering. The Levites were probably led backwards and forwards by Aaron in the direction of the Holy of Holies, or he may have only waved his hand over them. The idea underlying was unmistakable. This is: having been given by the Israelites to God, the Levites were given back to the Israelites, whose servants they were to be in all matters appertaining to the Sanctuary.

12. and the Levites. i.e. the chosen representatives of the Levites.

16. for they are wholly given. lit. "for they are given, given"; given, for carrying the Tabernacle and its furniture; and given, for singing the chants of the Sanctuary (Rashi)—these being the two main branches of work assigned to the Levites.

19. the Levites as a gift. lit. "the Levites—they are given" (AJ).

11. and Aaron shall offer the Levites before the LORD for a wave offering, from the children of Israel, that they may be to do the service of the LORD. 12. And the Levites shall lay their hands upon the heads of the bullocks: and offer thou the one for a sin offering, and the other for a burnt offering, unto the LORD, to make atonement for the Levites. 13. And thou shalt set the Levites before Aaron, and before his sons, and offer them for a wave offering unto the LORD.
14. Thus shalt thou separate the Levites from among the children of Israel: and the Levites shall be mine.* ii 15. And after that shall the Levites go in to do the service of the tent of meeting: and thou shalt cleanse them, and offer them for a wave offering. 16. For they are wholly given unto me from among the children of Israel; instead of all that openeth the womb,
even the firstborn of all the children of Israel, have I taken them unto me. 17. For all the firstborn among the children of Israel are mine, both man and beast: on the day that I smote
all the firstborn in the land of Egypt I sanctified them for myself. 18. And I have taken the Levites instead of all the firstborn among the children of Israel. 19. And I have given the Levites as a gift to Aaron and to his sons from among the children of Israel, to do the service

the children of Israel. The five-fold repetition of these words in v. 19 indicates the love felt by God towards the bearers of the name of Israel (Midrash).

no plague. The explanation is indicated in Rashi's comment, which in effect states, "I have appointed the Levites to take over the service of the Sanctuary from the children of Israel upon whom it had hitherto devolved, and thereby to prevent a plague amongst the latter; because if they came near the Sanctuary there would certainly be a plague amongst them, since they have proved themselves unworthy of the priestly office."

of the children of Israel in the tent of meeting, and to make atonement for the children of Israel: that there be no plague among the children of Israel, through the children of Israel coming nigh unto the sanctuary.
20. Thus did Moses, and Aaron, and all the congregation of the children of Israel, unto the Levites: according unto all that the LORD commanded Moses touching the Levites, so did the children of Israel unto them.
21. And the Levites purified themselves from sin, and they washed their clothes; and Aaron offered them for a wave offering before the LORD; and Aaron made atonement for them to cleanse them.
22. And after that went the Levites in to do their service in the tent of meeting before Aaron, and before his sons: as the LORD had commanded Moses concerning the Levites, so did they unto them.

23. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
24. This is that which belongeth unto the Levites: from twenty and five years old and upward they shall go in to wait upon the service in the work of the tent of meeting:

15–23. The Fiery Cloud upon the Tabernacle

This section connects with Exod. xl, 34, when Moses had set up the Tabernacle and "the cloud covered the Tent of Meeting and the glory of the Lord filled the Tabernacle." It was the invariable custom to start on the march when the Cloud rose from the Tabernacle, and to halt when and as long as it rested.

15. the cloud covered the tabernacle. As the manifestation of the Divine Presence in the midst of Israel. It did not cover the whole structure, Court and all, but only that part of it in which the Ark was placed.

17. and whenever the cloud was taken up. This verse and the following to the end of the chapter are an amplification of Exod. xl, 36–38.

15. And on the day that the tabernacle was reared up the cloud covered the tabernacle, even the tent of the testimony: and at even it was upon the tabernacle as it were the appearance of fire, until morning. 16. So it was alway: the cloud covered it, and the appearance of fire by night. 17. And whenever the cloud was taken up from over the Tent, then after that the children of Israel journeyed: and in the place where the cloud abode, there the children of Israel encamped. 18. At the commandment of the LORD the children of Israel journeyed, and at the commandment of the LORD they encamped: as long as the cloud abode upon the tabernacle they remained encamped. 19. And when the cloud tarried upon the tabernacle many days, then the children of Israel kept the charge of the LORD, and journeyed not. 20. And sometimes the cloud was a few days upon the tabernacle; then according to the commandment of the LORD they remained encamped, and according to the commandment of the LORD they journeyed. 21. And sometimes the cloud was from evening until morning; and when the cloud was taken up in the morning, they journeyed: or if it continued by day and by night, when the cloud was taken up, they journeyed. 22. Whether it were two days, or a month, or a year, that the cloud tarried

X, 1–10. Clarions of Silver

They were for summoning the congregation or the princes to the Sanctuary, as well as signals to begin the journey or in times of war. The clarions were long and narrow, with an expanded mouth, as distinct from the Shofar, or ram's horn of the Jubilee (Lev. xxv, 9). There is an illustration of these clarions among the spoils of the Temple, on the Arch of Titus.

10 1. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2. Make thee two trumpets of silver; of beaten work shalt thou make them: and thou shalt use them for the calling of the congregation, and for the journeying of the camps. 3. And when they shall blow with them, all the congregation shall gather themselves unto thee at the door of the tent of meeting. 4. And if they blow but with one, then the princes, the heads of the thousands of Israel, shall gather themselves unto thee.
5. And when ye blow an alarm, the camps that lie on the east side shall take their journey. 6. And when ye blow an alarm the second time, the camps that lie on the south side shall take their journey: they shall blow an alarm for their journeys. 7. But when the assembly is to be gathered together, ye shall blow, but ye shall not sound an alarm. 8. And the sons of Aaron,

That the usage of trumpets in war was viewed from this spiritual standpoint is attested by II Chron. XIII, 12–16, as well as I Macc. IV, 40; V, 33.

And when ye go to war in your land against the adversary that oppresseth you, then ye shall sound an alarm with the trumpets; and ye shall be remembered before the LORD your God, and ye shall be saved from your enemies. 10. Paran formed an important stage in the wanderings across the wilderness. Before it was reached, there were two halting places at the "Graves of Lust" (XI, 35) and Hazeroth (XII, 16).

29–32. Hobab

Moses requests his father-in-law to remain with them and act as their guide.

29. Hobab, the son of Reuel. According to Rabbinic tradition, Hobab is identical with Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses. Reuel was the father of Jethro, or Hobab. Exod. II, 18, where the daughters of Jethro call Reuel their father, presents no difficulty. The Rabbis rightly explain that children oft times call their grandfather "father."

31. instead of eyes. As Midian bordered on Sinai and Paran, he was thoroughly familiar with that desert. The Cloud, IX, 15f, was not a guide; it only indicated the times of breaking up and of resting. Hobab's answer is not given; but it may be inferred from Judges I, 16, IV, 11 that he yielded, and consented to be "eyes" unto them in the desert.

29. And Moses said unto Hobab, the son of Reuel the Midianite, Moses' father in law, We are journeying unto the place of which the LORD said, I will give it you: come thou with us, and we will do thee good: for the LORD hath spoken good concerning Israel. 30. And he said unto him, I will not go; but I will depart to mine own land, and to my kindred. 31. And he said, Leave us not, I pray thee; forasmuch as thou knowest how we are to encamp in the wilderness, and thou shalt be to us instead of eyes. 32. And it shall be, if thou go with us, yea, it shall be, that what good soever the LORD shall do unto us, the same will we do unto thee.

33. And they set forward from the mount of the LORD three days' journey; and the ark of the went before them in the three days' journey. This is the rendering of the AV (and Seforno, Luzzatto), and is a departure from the RV which omits the words " in the," and thereby attaches an impossible meaning to the text.

34. was over them by day. This phrase, taken in conjunction with Psalm cv, 39, " He spread a cloud for a screen," would seem to indicate that the Cloud not only served the purpose of a signal but also of a shade, protecting the wanderers from the burning heat of the sun.

35–36. INVOCATION PRAYERS

These verses preserve the invocation prayers in connection with the going forward and the resting of the Ark in the wilderness; and we still feel the thrill of sacred enthusiasm that animated the men of old on hearing them. They are used to this day at the opening and closing of the Ark, whenever the Torah is read in the synagogue. These two verses are enclosed in inverted Nuns, to indicate either that they are not here in their original place (Talmud); or that they are taken from another source (possibly from " the Book of the Wars of the LORD," see xxi, 14) and form a distinct section, scroll, or even " book " of the Torah. Some of the Rabbis thought of the Book of Numbers as consisting of three parts (i–x, 34; x, 35, 36; xi–xxxvi), and, in consequence counted seven books of the Torah. Thus, according to Rabbi Johanan, " Wisdom hath hewn out her seven pillars " (Prov. ix, 1) referred to the Seven Books of the Torah.

35. when the ark set forward. The Ark going forward at the head of Israel's tribes typified God in front of His people protecting and helping them, and leading them on to final victory. " Through the wilderness Israel went, not covenant of the LORD went before them in the three days' journey, to seek out a resting place for them. 34. And the cloud of the LORD was over them by day, when they set forward from the camp.*vi a 35. And it came to pass, when the ark set forward, that Moses said, Rise up, O LORD, and let thine enemies be scattered; and let them that hate thee flee before thee. 36. And when it rested, he said, Return, O LORD, unto the ten thousands of the thousands of Israel.

rise up . . . be scattered. "The impressive war-cry of truth against error, of righteousness against sin" (Abrahams). God's enemies are the enemies of Israel. When God arises against the hosts of Israel's enemies, they scatter as the darkness before the sunlight.

36. unto the ten thousands of the thousands of Israel. Heb. רבבות אלפי ישראל. The second "thousands" is here equivalent to "families" or "clans." Ehrlich takes the whole phrase as a synonym of God—and renders, "O Thou Who art the ten thousands of the thousands of Israel"—a most appropriate invocation addressed to God as the Ark returned from victory; cf. II Kings II, 12 where Elijah is addressed as "the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof"; or the Divine title, "the LORD of Hosts."

"Long after those desert days, a psalmist laid hold of the old prayer and offered it, as not antiquated yet by the thousand years that had intervened. 'Let God arise, and let His enemies be scattered; let them that hate Him flee before Him' (Psalm LXVIII, 1). We too may take up the immortal though ancient words, and, at the beginnings and endings of all our efforts, offer this old prayer—the

MURMURINGS AND REBELLIONS

This and the following three chapters deal with the successive rebellions of the People after their departure from Sinai that resulted in their being excluded from the Promised Land.

the people cried unto Moses; and Moses prayed unto the Lord, and the fire abated. 3. And the name of that place was called Taberah:
because the fire of the Lord burnt among them.
4. And the mixed multitude that was among them fell a lusting: and the children of Israel

It is identical with the mixed multitude (Exod. xii, 38) of aliens who had attached themselves to the Israelites and accompanied them out of Egypt.

fell a lusting. Began to have a strong craving for flesh food.

the children of Israel also wept. Discontent, like sin, is contagious. "They were not so much suffering as seeking for some pretext for grumbling" (Sifri).

5. we remember. "The natural dainties of Egypt are set forth in this passage with the fulness and relish which bespeak personal experience" (Speaker's Bible). These words enable us clearly to see into those slave souls who preferred the garlic of Egypt to the bread of freedom.

11. evil entreated. Dealt ill with.

we did eat in Egypt for nought; the cucumbers, and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlick: 6. but now our soul is dried away; there is nothing at all: we have nought save this manna to look to. 7. And the manna was like coriander seed, and the appearance thereof as the appearance of bdellium. 8. The people went about, and gathered it, and ground it in mills, or beat it in mortars, and seethed it in pots, and made cakes of it: and the taste of it was as the taste of cakes baked with oil. 9. And when the dew fell upon the camp in the night, the manna fell upon it. 10. And Moses heard the people weeping throughout their families, every man at the door of his tent: and the anger of the LORD was kindled greatly; 11. and Moses was displeased. And Moses said unto the LORD, Wherefore hast thou evil entreated thy servant? and wherefore have I not found favour in thy sight, that thou layest the burden of all this people upon me? 12. Have I conceived all this people? have I brought them forth, that thou shouldest say unto me, Carry them in thy bosom, as a nursing-father carrieth the sucking child, unto the land which thou swarest unto their fathers? 13. Whence should I have flesh to give unto all this people? for they weep unto me, wherefore have I not found favour in thy sight. "This is the language of despair, not the murmuring of unbelief; it is addressed to God for the purpose of entreating help and deliverance from Him" (Keil).

it is too heavy for me. 15. And if thou deal thus with me, kill me, I pray thee, out of hand, if I have found favour in thy sight; and let me
not see my wretchedness.

16. And the LORD said unto Moses, Gather unto me seventy men of the elders of Israel, whom thou knowest to be the elders of the people, and officers over them; and bring them unto the tent of meeting, that they may stand there with thee. 17. And I will come down and talk with thee there: and I will take of the spirit which is upon thee, and will put it upon them; and they shall bear the burden of the people with thee, that thou bear it not thyself alone. 18.
And say thou unto the people, Sanctify yourselves against to-morrow, and ye shall eat flesh: for ye have wept in the ears of the LORD, saying,
Who shall give us flesh to eat? for it was well with us in Egypt: therefore the LORD will give you flesh, and ye shall eat. 19. Ye shall not eat

they prophesied. A feeling of spiritual ecstasy and exaltation possessed them, causing them to break out into praises of God, and declaring His will and His goodness. By prophecy is here meant, not prediction of the future, but the power of instructing and admonishing the people with an authority that was recognised as having its source in God.

but they did so no more. "They prophesied that day but never after" (Sifri). They were not intended to be permanent sharers with Moses in his task of leadership. Maimonides compares the recipients of Divine revelations to men whose night is illumined by flashes of lightning. "To some it is given to behold the lightning flashes in rapid

And Moses said, The people, among whom I am, are six hundred thousand footmen; and thou hast said, I will give them flesh, that they may eat a whole month. 22. Shall flocks and herds be slain for them, to suffice them? or shall all the fish of the sea be gathered together for them, to suffice them?

23. And the LORD said unto Moses, Is the LORD's hand waxed short? now shalt thou see whether my word shall come to pass unto thee or not. 24. And Moses went out, and told the people the words of the LORD: and he gathered seventy men of the elders of the people, and set them round about the Tent. 25. And the LORD came down in the cloud, and spake unto him, and took of the spirit that was upon him, and put it upon the seventy elders: and it came to pass, that, when the spirit rested upon them, they prophesied, but they did so no more. 26. But there remained two men in the camp, the name succession; they seem to be in perpetual light, and their night is as clear as day. This was the degree of prophetic excellence obtained by Moses, the greatest of the Prophets. Others perceive the prophetic flash at long intervals; this is the degree of most of the Prophets. By still others a flash of lightning is perceived only once during the whole night. This is the case of those of whom we are told, "They prophesied, but they did so no more."

29. would God that all the LORD'S people were prophets. This one saying proves the incomparable greatness of Moses' character. He loves his people more than himself. When a man is really great and good he longs that all should be as he is, and better. So far from being displeased with Eldad and Medad, he yearned for all Israel, elders or not, without the camp or within, to receive the Divine spirit. "Moses expresses the conviction which is true for all time, that the possession of the spirit is not confined to particular persons or classes" (McNeile).

CHAPTER XII

MIRIAM AND THE VINDICATION OF MOSES

Moses bore with resignation the complaints and murmurings of his People, and—as we shall see—their alternate cowardice and foolhardiness. His foes were also of his own household. This chapter tells how his only brother and only sister offended against him.

1. spake against Moses. Miriam seems to have been the instigator of the evil speaking against Moses. The story of Miriam in Scripture is brief, but memorable. She first appears during the Oppression in Egypt, guarding the ark of bulrushes in which Moses was saved from destruction. Then many years later at the crossing of the Red Sea, she led the women's refrain, 'Sing unto the LORD, for He hath triumphed gloriously.' Because of the merit of Miriam—says Jewish legend—a Well accompanied the Israelites on their wanderings till the day of her death. It is a spiritual tragedy that such a prophetic soul should have been guilty of an offence deserving the dire punishment recorded in this chapter.

spread them all abroad for themselves round about the camp. 33. While the flesh was yet between their teeth, ere it was chewed, the anger of the LORD was kindled against the people, and the LORD smote the people with a very great plague. 34. And the name of that place was called Kibroth-hattaavah: because there they buried the people that lusted. 35. From Kibroth-hattaavah the people journeyed unto Hazeroth; and they abode at Hazeroth.

CHAPTER XII

12 1. And Miriam and Aaron spake against Moses because of the Cushite woman whom he had married: for he had married a Cushite woman.
2. And they said, Hath the LORD indeed spoken only with Moses? hath he not spoken also with us? And the LORD heard it. 3. Now the

the Cushite woman. The wife in question is held by some to be Zipporah. She was from Midian, which is a synonym of Cushan (Habak. III, 7). It is now definitely known that there was a North Arabian people called "Kusi." Others take the word Cushite in the usual sense of "Ethiopian." In that case, (the second) marriage of Moses with a South Egyptian woman was the occasion of complaint by Miriam and Aaron. Further details are not given, which fact led legend to step in and fill in the gap, and supply a reason that would serve as the connection between v. 1 and 2. (Guedemann traces the growth of that legend in a masterly study in the Monatschrift for 1870).

2. only with Moses. Having spoken ill of Moses and thus belittled his importance, they asked, "Has Moses a monopoly of Divine communications? Can we not claim equality with him"?

יב v. 3. ענו ק

and the Lord heard it. God said, Moses is very meek and pays no heed to the injustice meted out to him. I will therefore defend him (Midrash).

3. now the man Moses was very meek. These words explain how it was that Moses took no steps to vindicate himself.

" There is about these words, as also about the passages in which Moses no less equivocally records his own faults (xx, 12f ; Exod. iv, 22f ; Deut. i, 37) that simplicity which is witness at once to their genuineness and inspiration. The Heb. word for meek (ענו) occurs frequently in the Psalms, and as here is applied by the writers to themselves ; cf. Psalm x, 17 and Psalm xxii, 27 " (Speaker's Bible).

4. suddenly. Reproof and retribution followed without delay.

5. both came forth. They were separated from Moses, because a man's whole praise may only be uttered in his absence (Sifri). This praise is given in v. 7, 8.

6. if there be a prophet among you. Better, if there be a prophet of the Lord among you. This is the translation required by the Heb. idiom (also used in Lev. xxvi, 42, Song of Songs, i, 15).

I the Lord will make. Better, I make ; omitting "the Lord."

man Moses was very meek, above all the men which were upon the face of the earth. 4. And the LORD spake suddenly unto Moses, and unto Aaron, and unto Miriam, Come out ye three unto the tent of meeting. And they three came out. 5. And the LORD came down in a pillar of cloud, and stood at the door of the Tent, and called Aaron and Miriam: and they both came forth. 6. And he said, Hear now my words: if there be a prophet among you, I the LORD will make myself known unto him in a vision, I will speak with him in a dream. 7. My servant Moses is not so; he is faithful in all mine house: 8. with him will I speak mouth to mouth,

I will speak. Better, I speak.

in a vision . . . dream. "With some of the higher Prophets, such as Jeremiah, dreams as a source of revelation fell into complete disrepute" (Gray).

7. faithful in all mine house. Found worthy of God's confidence in everything appertaining to the guidance of the House of Israel. Moses is pre-eminent among the Prophets. While other Prophets chiefly warned their own generation and comforted them with blessings in the remote future, Moses addresses all times, communicating to them everlasting statutes and laws for all generations.

8. mouth to mouth. The same as "face to face" (Deut. XXXIV, 10). These phrases denote figuratively "the clearest, most direct, and most simple communication, the figure being taken from the way in which men communicate to each other things which they desire to be clearly understood and to leave no doubt as to their truth or meaning" (Friedlander).

(Chapters XIII–XV)

THE SPIES AND THEIR REPORT

According to some scholars, the victory of the Israelites over the king of Arad in the extreme south of Canaan, recorded in xxi, 1–3, took place at this stage. The Israelites inflicted an annihilating defeat on the enemy, and called his territory Hormah, lit. "utter destruction." So striking had been their success, that Moses deemed the moment ripe for undertaking the conquest of the Holy Land from this advanced station of their march. As reported in Deut. i, 22, the Israelites then came to Moses, saying, "Let us send men before us that they may search the land for us." And they would have succeeded in forcing their way into the heart of Canaan, if they had been animated by the high courage required for such an enterprise. This and the following chapter relate that such was far from being the case. Twelve men are sent to explore the land, and learn its character and that of the inhabitants. After forty days they return. The "majority report," which

The incident of the Spies is the turning-point in the lives of all those that had been born in slavery. By the cowardice and murmurings with which they receive the report of the Spies, they show themselves unfit for the tasks of a free nation. They must die in the Wilderness. During thirty-eight years of wandering, a new generation that knew not Egypt was to be reared, in hardship and freedom, for the conquest and possession of the Promised Land.

16. Moses called Hoshea . . . Joshua. Better, and Moses had called Hoshea the son of Nun Joshua. The change had already been made at the time of the victory over Amalek, Exod. XVII, 9f. Hoshea signifies, "He has helped." Moses, by prefixing to it a letter of the Divine Name, changed it to Joshua, Heb. Yehoshua, i.e. "He will help," at the same time indicating the Source of salvation. According to the Midrash, however, Moses here pronounced over Joshua the prayer, "May God deliver thee from the counsel of the Spies."

Of the tribe of Judah, Caleb the son of Jephunneh. 7. Of the tribe of Issachar, Igal the son of Joseph. 8. Of the tribe of Ephraim, Hoshea the son of Nun. 9. Of the tribe of Benjamin, Palti the son of Raphu. 10. Of the tribe of Zebulun, Gaddiel the son of Sodi. 11. Of the tribe of Joseph, namely, of the tribe of Manasseh, Gaddi the son of Susi. 12. Of the tribe of Dan, Ammiel the son of Gemalli. 13. Of the tribe of Asher, Sethur the son of Michael. 14. Of the tribe of Naphtali, Nahbi the son of Vophsi. 15. Of the tribe of Gad, Geuel the son of Machi. 16. These are the names of the men which Moses sent to spy out the land. And Moses called Hoshea the son of Nun Joshua. 17. And Moses sent them to spy out the land of Canaan, and said unto them, Get you up this way into the South, and go up into the mountains: 18. and see the land, what it is; and the people that dwelleth therein, whether they be strong or weak, whether they be few or many; 19. and what the land is that they dwell in, whether it be good or bad; and what cities they be that they dwell in, whether so we were in their sight. Or, "so must we have been in their sight." Those who are in their own eyes as grasshoppers assume, and rightly so, that others have a similar estimate of them.

26. Kadesh. Was for many years the seat of encampment for the tribes during the wanderings, and the starting-point for the final march into Canaan. It has been identified with the the modern Ain Kadis ("Holy Spring"). Running water gurgled under the waving grass" (Trumbull).

The Spies traversed the entire land from south to north. The length of the Holy Land is about 180 miles, and its average breadth between the Mediterranean Sea and the River Jordan, about 40 miles. The country may be regarded as consisting of three strips running north and south. There is (1) the Maritime Plain extending inwards from the coast to a distance of from 4 to 15 miles. It is very fertile. It includes the famous Plain of Sharon and the Lowlands of the Philistines. (2) Behind this Maritime Plain, and parallel to it, rises the 'Hill Country,' the backbone of the Holy Land. On the east, it falls precipitously down to (3) the Valley of the Jordan and the Dead Sea. Across these lie the Highlands of Gilead and Moab, the modern Transjordania.

In the monumental records, the country is called 'the land of the Canaanites,' or the 'land of the Amorites'; from which it may be inferred that these were the tribes originally inhabiting it. At a very early period the Hittites, who formed a powerful kingdom to the north, established children of Israel, saying, The land, through which we have gone to spy it out, is a land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof; and all the people that we saw in it are men of great stature.

33. And there we saw the giants, the sons of Anak, which come of the Nephilim: and we were in our own sight as grasshoppers, and so we were in their sight.

themselves in Canaan. At the time of the Israelitish Conquest the land was inhabited by a mixture of tribes. Of these, the principal were the Canaanites (i.e. probably 'Lowlanders'), dwelling in the Maritime Plain and the Valley of the Jordan; the Hittites and the Jebusites in the south, in what was afterwards called Judea; the Hivites to the north of these, in what came to be known as Samaria; and, still further north, the Perizzites. The Amorites (i.e. probably, the 'Highlanders') were found in the north, and also in the south, to the east of the Jordan. The Philistines had obtained a settlement in the southern part of the Maritime Plain.

Chapter XIV, 1–10. Panic, Wailing and Rebellion

1. wept that night. "When the sound of their weeping reached heaven, God said: 'Ye weep now without cause; the time will come when ye shall have good cause to weep on this day.' It was then decreed that the Temple be destroyed on this same day, the ninth day of Ab; so that it became forever a day of tears" (Talmud).

had died in the land of Egypt! or would God we had died in this wilderness! 3. And wherefore doth the LORD bring us unto this land, to fall by the sword? Our wives and our little ones shall be a prey: were it not better for us to return into Egypt? 4. And they said one to another, Let us make a captain, and let us return into Egypt. 5. Then Moses and Aaron fell on their faces before all the assembly of the congregation of the children of Israel. 6. And Joshua the son of Nun and Caleb the son of Jephunneh, which were of them that spied out the land, rent their clothes: 7. and they spake unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, saying, The land, which we passed through to spy it out, is an exceeding good land.*iii 8. If the LORD delight in us, then he will bring us into this land, and give it unto us; a land which floweth with milk and honey. 9. Only rebel not against the LORD, neither fear ye the people of the land; for they are bread for us: their defence is removed from over them, and the LORD is with us: fear them not. 10. But all the congregation bade stone them with stones. And the glory of the LORD appeared in the tent of meeting unto all the children of Israel.

The word לחמנו ("our bread") may refer to the manna, and סר צלם, lit. "their shadow is removed from over them," to the melting of the manna at noonday (Exod. XVI, 21). The meaning of the passage would then be: "Fear not the people of the land, for they are like the manna when the shadows pass, i.e. when the sun has come out. There is then no manna left. The LORD is with us: our enemies shall melt away—fear them not" (Ephraim Lenczic).

make of thee a nation. Moses would be a second Abraham, and thus the oath sworn to the Patriarchs that their seed should inherit the land would be fulfilled.

13. Egyptians shall hear. Moses, the faithful shepherd, leaves an unsurpassed example of self-denial to the children of men. He refuses a glorious future for himself and his descendants, solely because Israel would have no share in it. He begs God to spare His people out of regard for His own Honour. The nations would misunderstand the destruction of Israel, and attribute it to His want of power to lead them into the land He promised them.

17. let the power of the Lord be great. Show, in the sight of all the nations, the greatness of Thy power in forbearing with sinners and forgiving sin. "In God's mercy is also revealed His power. He triumphs by His love and gentleness over the follies and frailties of men, and even in spite of

11. And the LORD said unto Moses, How long will this people despise me? and how long will they not believe in me, for all the signs which I have wrought among them? 12. I will smite them with the pestilence, and disinherit them, and will make of thee a nation greater and mightier than they. 13. And Moses said unto the LORD, Then the Egyptians shall hear it; for thou broughtest up this people in thy might from among them; 14. and they will tell it to the inhabitants of this land: they have heard that thou LORD art in the midst of this people; for thou LORD art seen face to face, and thy cloud standeth over them, and thou goest before them, in a pillar of cloud by day, and in a pillar of fire by night. 15. Now if thou shalt kill this people as one man, then the nations which have heard the fame of thee will speak, saying, 16. Because the LORD was not able to bring this people into the land which he sware unto them, therefore he hath slain them in the wilderness. 17. And now, I pray thee, let the power of the Lord be great, according as thou hast spoken, themselves, they must at last fulfil the chosen and holy purposes of God" (Montefiore). Moses then pleads with God to spare His people out of regard for His own self-revealed Thirteen Attributes of Divine Mercy and Forgiveness, enumerated in Exod. XXXIV, 6–7 and reproduced here; see Exodus, 392–394. In Exod. God is spoken of as רב חסד ואמת, "abounding in lovingkindness and truth," to teach mortals that in our dealings with fellow mortals "lovingkindness" must precede "truth." Speak the truth to your fellow men by all means, but be quite sure that you

33. bear your strayings. Although the children were to be spared the fate of their sinning parents, they would not altogether escape the consequences of that falling away from God. "Strayings" is a departure from the RV which gives the lit. translation of the Heb. זנות, the metaphor of marital infidelity used in Scripture to express Israel's disloyalty to God through the worship of strange gods.

45. even unto Hormah. lit. " unto the Hormah " : They suffer a crushing defeat and are driven back to the Hormah which they had only recently conquered. Their direct march northwards is now definitely barred. Henceforth they can enter Canaan only by passing through—and if that is impossible, around—the territories situated to the south and east of the Dead Sea, till they have arrived north of the Dead Sea and can cross the Jordan into Western Palestine. It will be some thirty-eight years before a fresh military enterprise is undertaken. " In estimating the historical value of this story, we must remember that no nation gratuitously invents or accepts accounts of defeats it has never experienced. If Hebrew history tells us that the Israelites on attempting to enter the land they subsequently inhabited met with an overthrow so annihilating as to leave them too weak to do anything but wander helplessly in a wilderness for nearly forty years thereafter, we cannot refuse it credence. The tendency is always to minimise defeats, not to exaggerate them ; and a story such as this bears the hallmark of truth " (Wiener).

The Rabbis, however, laid it down that the dough in order to become subject to the law of Challah must consist of at least one omer of flour (about three quarts). The portion for Challah must be 1/24th of the dough of a private householder, and 1/48th of that of a baker.

17. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 18. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye come into the land whither I bring you, 19. then it shall be, that, when ye eat of the bread of the land, ye shall offer up an heave offering unto the LORD. 20. Of the first of your dough ye shall offer up a cake for an heave offering: as ye do the heave offering of the threshing-floor, so shall ye heave it. 21. Of the first of your dough ye shall give unto the LORD an heave offering throughout your generations.

21. unto the LORD. i.e. unto the priest; "ye shall also give unto the priest the first of your dough, to cause a blessing to rest on thine house" (Ezek. XLIV, 30).

According to v. 18, the law of Challah applied only to Palestine. But in order that this institution should not be forgotten, the Rabbis ordained that it remain in force beyond Palestine and for all time. It is still kept in observant Jewish households where bread is baked. The חלה is, however, thrown into the fire and is not given to the "priest," because Kohanim are to-day precluded from observing the laws of priestly purity, and hence are disqualified from eating anything that is in the nature of a holy sacrifice.

22. all these commandments. According to the Talmud, the reference in the present passage is to the sin of idolatry committed unintentionally. That sin, involving as it does apostasy from the fundamental doctrines of Judaism, is equivalent to breaking all the commandments of the Torah. Other commentators, like Nachmanides, are inclined to refer these words to any comprehensive breach with the ordinances of the Torah.

And when ye shall err, and not observe all these commandments, which the LORD hath spoken unto Moses, 23. even all that the LORD hath commanded you by the hand of Moses, from the day that the LORD gave commandment, and onward throughout your generations; 24. then it shall be, if it be done in error, without the knowledge of the congregation, that all the congregation shall offer one young bullock for a burnt offering, for a sweet savour unto the LORD, with the meal offering thereof, and the drink offering thereof, according to the ordinance, and one he-goat for a sin offering. 25. And the priest shall make atonement for all the congregation of the children of Israel, and they shall be forgiven; for it was an error, and they have brought their oblation, an offering made by fire unto the LORD, and their sin offering before the LORD, for their error: 26. and all the congregation of the children of Israel shall be forgiven, and the stranger that sojourneth among them; for in respect of all the people it was done in error.*vii 27. And if one person sin in error, then he shall offer a she-goat of the first year for a sin offering. 28. And the priest shall make atonehis Maker, and not only of involuntary transgressions. By the sincere repentance which Yom Kippur demands, the sinner shows that his wilful sins also were largely due to ignorance; and hence are treated by God as if they were done "in error" (בשגגה); see Leviticus, 162.

27. and if one person sin in error. According to the Talmud, this too refers to the sin of idolatry.

and remember. The Tzitzis are to be a constant reminder to the Israelite of all his duties to God, and of the special relationship in which the Israelite stands to God, whose "colours" he wore. The blue thread in the Tzitzis, say the Rabbis, resembles the sea, the sea resembles the heavens, and the heavens resemble the Throne of Glory. Thus, the outward act of looking upon the Tzitzis was to the Israelite an inward act of spiritual conformity with the precepts of God. It was such fine spiritualisation of ceremonial that led to the beautiful verses of Psalm XXXVI ("How precious is Thy lovingkindness, O God, and the children of men take refuge under the shadow of Thy wings. For with Thee is the fountain of life: in Thy light do we see light") being recited by the worshipper on putting on the Tallis.

after your own heart. The heart and the eyes are the agents of Sin—the eye seeth, the heart desireth, and the person executeth (Talmud). The true Israelite, however, arrayed in the sacred covering, reminding him of the Divine Presence, does not stray after the satisfaction of bodily pleasures; but is mindful that he is a member of a "holy" People, dedicated unto God and holiness; see next v.

40. and be holy unto your God. The aim of this precept is thus distinctly stated to be the furtherance of holiness in the life of the individual and the nation.

In later generations, the law of the fringes was carried out by means of the Arba Kanfos and the Tallis. The former is an undergarment consisting of a rectangular piece of cloth, about three feet long and one foot wide, with an aperture in the centre sufficient to let it pass over the head. To its four corners are fastened the Tzitzis.

The Tallis is a woollen or silken mantle worn over the garments during worship by day (except on the eve of Atonement when it is put on some minutes before nightfall).

"By the thirteenth century it had become unusual for Jews to mark their ordinary outward garments by wearing fringes. But the fringed garment had become too deeply associated with Israel's religious life to be discarded entirely at the dictate of fashion in dress. Pope Innocent III in 1215 compelled the Jew to wear a degrading badge ; the fringed garment became all the more an honourable uniform, marking at once God's love for Israel and Israel's determination to 'remember to do all God's commandments and be holy unto his God'" (I. Abrahams).

V. KORACH

(Chapters XVI–XVIII)

THE GREAT MUTINY

Whenever the discouragements and hardships of the wandering proved more than usually grim, it was almost inevitable that discontent should find open expression; and also that some of the tribal chiefs should oppose the authority of the God-chosen leader. In the last Sedrah we had seen the people threatening to appoint a chieftain who was to take them back to Egypt. Though but an idle threat, it was ominous of further serious revolt. When the rebellion broke out, it was widespread though not homogeneous. There were two simultaneous lines of revolt. On the one hand, there were those who were discontented with the leadership of Moses. These were led by Dathan and Abiram, of the tribe of Reuben, the tribe that once possessed but had now lost the "birthright" in Israel, and was, it seems, chafing for the recovery of that primacy. On the other hand, there were Korah—himself a Levite—and his followers, who were aggrieved with Aaron, to whose family all priestly privileges were now confined. These two groups of malcontents, though united in common effort to depose Moses from his position as the head of the nation's civil life and Aaron as the head of its religious life, worked separately, and they were in the end cut off by entirely different acts of God (v. 32 and 35). Their punishment was signal, since the vindication of Moses and Aaron had to be complete. Otherwise, anarchy would soon have destroyed national unity; and, in its trail, there would have followed the total frustration of whatever Divine Mission was in store for Israel on the arena of history.

The general drift of the story of Korah and his companions is thus quite clear, though we cannot follow all the details. Bible Critics have their own explanation of this chapter of Scripture. It is a fantastic explanation, and is quite unbelievable. The unprejudiced student finds nothing improbable in the story of such a revolt; and he knows that if it did arise, it could only have taken place in the Desert. During that period alone, the tribes of Reuben and Levi marched side by side, their joint conspiracy growing out of their proximity to one another at that time. "The two tribes afterwards became entirely parted asunder in their characters and fortunes; the one was incorporated into the innermost circle of the settled civilisation of Palestine; the other hovered on the very outskirts of the Holy Land and Chosen People, and dwindled away into a Bedouin tribe. But the story of Korah belongs to a time when Levi was still fresh from the great crisis in Sinai, by which that tribe had been consecrated and divided from the rest; when the recollection of the birthright of Reuben still lingered in the minds of his descendants" (Stanley).

KORAH

The great Mutiny sank deep into the memory of after-generations in Israel. To the Rabbis, this whole movement, of which Korah was the principal spokesman, became typical of all controversies that had their origin in personal motives—"not in the Name of Heaven"—and that could not therefore lead to any beneficent results (Ethics of the Fathers, v, 20). In Rabbinic legend, Korah is actuated by the malice of foiled ambition, and that ambition is represented as fanned into a flame of hatred by his wife. He was consumed by jealousy of his kinsman Moses. "He has passed me by in the appointment of all the high offices"—he is made to exclaim; "therefore, I will stir up rebellion against him, and overthrow the institutions founded by him." This the Rabbis illustrate in picturesque detail, possibly with an oblique reference to schismatic contemporaries. Korah—they state—began by attempting to make Moses appear ridiculous in the eyes of the people. In connection with the law of fringes that had just been promulgated by Moses (xv, 37–41), Korah had garments made entirely of blue wool for his two hundred and fifty men; and, thus arrayed, he and his company appeared before Moses and asked him whether these garments required fringes. Moses answered, "Yes." Korah replied: "The blue wool of which the entire garment is made, does not make it ritually correct; yet, according to your direction, four threads would!" Again he asked: Does a house filled with books of the Torah require a mezuzah? Moses answered, "Yes." Then Korah said: "The presence of the whole Torah does not fulfil the command, yet thou sayest that the few verses thereof contained in the mezuzah do make the house fit for human habitation!" He could not share the spiritual outlook of Moses which holds that knowledge, no matter how abounding, must ever be accompanied by reverent submission of mind and heart to the will of God (קבלת עול מלכות שמים) as proclaimed in the mezuzah.

Then Korah undertook to show that the laws instituted by Moses were hard beyond endurance. He told the following parable: "A poor widow had a field. When she came to plough it, Moses forbade her to plough it with an ox and an ass together; when she began to sow, Moses forbade her to sow it with mingled seeds. At the time of the harvest, Moses ordered her to leave unreaped the corners of the field and not to gather up the gleanings, but to leave them for the poor. He furthermore demanded the heave-offering for the priests, and the tithe for the Levites. The woman sold the field and purchased ewes, in the hope that she might live undisturbed. However, when the firstling of the sheep was born, Aaron appeared and demanded it as his due. At shearing-time Aaron reappeared and demanded 'the first of the fleece of the sheep,' which, according to Moses' Law, was his. He reappeared again and again with new demands, till the long-suffering woman slaughtered the sheep, and in her anger consecrated it to the Sanctuary. Thereupon it all fell to Aaron." "Such men," Korah concluded, "are Moses and Aaron!"

In brief, Korah was a demagogue, and recoiled from no weapon that would discredit Moses. Perhaps the best judgment on the man and the Cause he sought to destroy is contained in the following curious rabbinic legend. Rabbah bar Bar Chanah—the Munchausen of the Talmud—with Dathan and Abiram. They were leading men in the tribe of Reuben, who could not forget that theirs was the eldest tribe and from it—they held—should the rulers of Israel be recruited. The men of Levi and Reuben came to join hands—the Rabbis say—because they always marched next each other (II, 16, 17; X, 18, 21), illustrating the old proverb, " Woe to the wicked, woe to his neighbour."

On, the son of Peleth. He is not mentioned again either in this chapter or elsewhere. Legend represents him as saved from destruction by his wife. " When On told his wife that he had joined Korah's rebellion, she said to him, 'What benefit shalt thou reap from it? Either Moses remains master and thou art his follower, or Korah becomes master and thou art his follower.' It was Korah's wife who through her inciting words plunged her husband into destruction, and it was to his wife that On owed his salvation; as it is written in the Book of Proverbs, every wise woman buildeth her house; but the foolish plucketh it down with her own hands" (Midrash).

3. all the congregation are holy. With the instinct of the true demagogue, Korah posed as the champion of the People against the alleged dictatorship of Moses and Aaron, the two brothers who usurped all power and authority in Israel. Translated into modern parlance, their cry was : " Your action is un-Jewish ; Judaism is a spiritual democracy ! "

4. he fell upon his face. Either an expression of despair at this sinful rebellion, or, of prayer for guidance ; v. 22.

5. who are his . . . holy. God will reveal which tribe He has chosen to be nearest unto Him, and who in that chosen tribe is fitted to be High Priest.

6. take you censers. Moses here addresses Korah and those Levites who were envious of the higher privileges of the priesthood. He challenges them to test their claims to equality with Aaron by undergoing a species of ordeal. They are to assume, for once, the functions of priesthood, up before Moses, with certain of the children of Israel, two hundred and fifty princes of the congregation, called to the assembly, men of renown: 3. and they assembled themselves together against Moses and against Aaron, and said unto them, Ye take too much upon you, seeing all the congregation are holy, every one of them, and the LORD is among them: wherefore then lift ye up yourselves above the assembly of the LORD? 4. And when Moses heard it, he fell upon his face: 5. and he spake unto Korah and unto all his company, saying, In the morning the LORD will shew who are his, and who is holy, and will cause him to come near unto him: even him whom he shall choose will he cause to come near unto him. 6. This do; take you censers, Korah, and all his company; 7. and put fire therein, and put incense upon them before the LORD to-morrow: and it shall be that the man whom the LORD doth choose, he shall be holy: ye take too much upon you, ye sons of Levi. 8. And Moses said unto Korah, Hear now, ye sons of Levi: 9. seemeth it but a small thing unto you, that the God of Israel hath and God would show whether or not He approved of such assumption.

7. ye take too much upon you. Indignantly he retorts upon the rebels in their own words.

8–11. Moses upbraids Korah and the Levites for their discontent with the position already assigned to them.

8. unto Korah. While Moses deals with Korah and his group, Dathan and Abiram stand in the background with their grievance; v. 12.

11. that ye murmur against him. Aaron was not self-appointed. God Himself had called him to his office, and his duties and privileges were duly assigned to him. As a result of this appeal by Moses, some of the Levites—the children of Korah among them—seem to have been detached from the body of rebels. Furthermore, we learn from I Chronicles VI, 22, that in the line of Korah's descendants appeared leaders of sacred song. Several of the Psalms are attributed to the "Sons of Korah." See on XXVI, 11.

12–15. Dathan and Abiram contemptuously refuse Moses' summons to attend before him, accuse him of misleading the people, and charge him with playing the prince over the People on the strength of promises he cannot fulfil.

13. a land flowing with milk and honey. Insolently—and ironically—they apply to Egypt the very words by which Moses described the Promised Land.

14. not brought us. Probably a satiric reference to the disaster that overtook the Israelites when, despite the warning of Moses, they attempted to enter Cannan, recorded

Therefore thou and all thy company are gathered together against the LORD: and Aaron, what is he that ye murmur against him? 12. And Moses sent to call Dathan and Abiram, the sons of Eliab: and they said, We will not come up: 13. is it a small thing that thou hast brought us up out of a land flowing with milk and honey, to kill us in the wilderness, but thou must needs make thyself also a prince over us?*ii 14. Moreover thou hast not brought us into a land flowing with milk and honey, nor given us inheritance of fields and vineyards: wilt thou put out the eyes of these men? we will not come up. 15. And Moses was very wroth, and said unto the LORD, Respect not thou their offering: I have not not taken one ass. "They accuse me of tyranny. But I have never so far abused my power and position as to accept even the meanest gift from any one of them!" In I Sam. VIII, 11–17, we read what an autocrat of early times had it in his power to do.

16–19. Korah and His Company Accept Moses' Challenge

16. Moses said unto Korah. Moses repeats his charge to Korah (v. 6, 7) to be ready on the morrow and put his claim to the test.

19. assembled all the congregation. The rebellion was indeed a serious matter. Korah's demagogy, in addition to his rallying round him the ambitious leaders, had won over to his banner large sections in all the tribes.

20–24. Moses' Intercession

21. separate yourselves from among this congregation. As the whole congregation, favouring Korah, had rendered itself worthy of extermination.

incense upon them, and bring ye before the LORD every man his censer, two hundred and

24. the tabernacle. Better, the dwelling. It is not impossible, however, that the rebels had dared to put up a rival Tabernacle.

25–34. Destruction of the Rebels

Nothing could now have prevented the complete disintegration of the People save the destruction of the instigators of the sedition. That destruction, moreover, had to be in so striking a way that it would clearly reveal the Divine purpose.

25. the elders of Israel. Ibn Ezra suggests that these were the 70 elders who, according to xi, 16, 17, were to assist Moses in bearing the burden of the people. These remain loyal during the upheaval.

And Moses rose up and went unto Dathan and Abiram; and the elders of Israel followed him. 26. And he spake unto the congregation, saying, Depart, I pray you, from the tents of these wicked men, and touch nothing of theirs, lest ye be consumed in all their sins. 27. So they gat them up from the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, on every side: and Dathan and Abiram came out, and stood at the door of their tents, and their wives, and their sons, and their little ones. 28. And Moses said, Hereby ye shall know that the LORD hath sent me to do all these works; for I have not done them of mine own mind. 29. If these men die the common death of all men, or if they be visited after the visitation of all men; then the LORD hath not sent me. 30. But if the LORD make a new thing, and the ground

16–28. VINDICATION OF AARON

Moses deposits twelve wands for each of the twelve tribes, and an additional rod inscribed with the name of Aaron as head of the tribe of Levi. Ibn Ezra suggests that as the two tribes of the children of Joseph (Ephraim and Manasseh) were reckoned together (Deut. XXVII, 12), the total number of the rods did not exceed twelve. Next morning, Aaron's rod had budded and brought forth fruit, confirming the Divine choice of Levi. Henceforth, Aaron's right to the priesthood is unchallenged.

17. Speak unto the children of Israel, and take of them rods, one for each fathers' house, of all their princes according to their fathers' houses, twelve rods: write thou every man's name upon his rod. 18. And thou shalt write Aaron's name upon the rod of Levi: for there shall be one rod for each head of their fathers' houses. 19. And thou shalt lay them up in the tent of meeting
before the testimony, where I meet with you.
20. And it shall come to pass, that the man whom I shall choose, his rod shall bud: and I will make to cease from me the murmurings of the children of Israel, which they murmur against you. 21.
And Moses spake unto the children of Israel,
and all their princes gave him rods, for each prince one, according to their fathers' houses, even twelve rods: and the rod of Aaron was among their rods. 22. And Moses laid up the rods before the LORD in the tent of the testimony.
23. And it came to pass on the morrow, that Moses went into the tent of the testimony; and, behold, the rod of Aaron for the house of Levi was budded,
and put forth buds, and bloomed blossoms, and bare ripe almonds. 24. And Moses brought out all the rods from before the LORD unto all the children of Israel: and they looked, and took every man his rod.*vi 25. And the LORD

we are undone. A despairing outburst on the part of defeated and disheartened men. Korah, Dathan and Abiram and their company had perished, and furthermore a plague had swept away several thousands of the people. It looked as if the end had come to all!

28. shall we perish all of us? Better, shall we ever have finished dying?; "have we not yet done expiring"? (Benisch). It was in response to this agonising cry, that Aaron and the Levites were bidden in XVIII to guard the Sanctuary against the approach by any "stranger."

Duties and Emoluments of Priests and Levites

27. And the children of Israel spake unto Moses, saying, Behold, we perish, we are undone, we are all undone. 28. Every one that cometh near, that cometh near unto the tabernacle of the LORD, dieth: shall we perish all of us?

And as to their redemption money, from a month old shalt thou redeem them, according to thine estimation, for the money of five shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary (the same is twenty gerahs). 17. But the firstling of an ox, or the firstling of a sheep, or the firstling of a goat, thou shalt not redeem; they are holy: thou shalt sprinkle their blood upon the altar, and shalt burn their fat for an offering made by fire, for a sweet savour unto the LORD. 18. And the flesh of them shall be thine, as the wave breast and as the right thigh, it shall be thine. 19. All the heave offerings of the holy things, which the children of Israel offer unto the LORD, have I given thee, and thy sons and thy daughters with thee, as a due for ever: it is a covenant of salt for ever before the LORD unto thee and to thy seed with thee. 20. The Levites were to contribute to the priests a tithe of that which they had received from the people.

service of the tent of meeting, and they shall ever throughout your generations, and among the children of Israel they shall have no inherit-which they offer as an heave offering unto the LORD, I have given to the Levites for an inheritance: therefore I have said unto them, Among the children of Israel they shall have no inheritance.

26. Moreover thou shalt speak unto the Levites, and say unto them, When ye take of the children of Israel the tithe which I have given you from them for your inheritance, then ye shall offer up an heave offering of it for the LORD, a tithe of the tithe. 27. And your heave offering shall be reckoned unto you, as though it were the corn of the threshing-floor, and as the fulness of the winepress. 28. Thus ye also shall offer

27. the corn of the threshing-floor. This tithe by you to the priests shall be regarded as though it were direct from your threshing-floor and wine-press.

Chapter XIX. The Red Heifer

The law set forth in this chapter belongs to the group of commandments dealt with in Lev. xii–xv; see the introductory note, " Laws of Purification," Leviticus, 110.

It provides for the removal of defilement resulting from contact with the dead. A red heifer, free from blemish and one that had not yet been broken to the yoke, was to be slain outside the camp. It was then to be burned, cedar-wood, hyssop and scarlet being cast upon the pyre. The gathered ashes, dissolved in fresh water, were to be sprinkled on those who had become contaminated through contact with a dead body.

This ordinance is the most mysterious rite in Scripture, the strange features of which are duly enumerated by the Rabbis. Thus, its aim was to purify the defiled, and yet it defiled all those who were in any way connected with the preparation of the ashes and water of purification. " It purifies the impure, and at the same time renders impure the pure "! So inscrutable was its nature—they said—that even King Solomon in his wisdom despaired of learning the secret meaning of the Red Heifer regulations. To a high-placed Roman questioner, who expressed his amazement at the procedure in connection with the Red Heifer, Johanan

ben Zakkai replied by referring him to a Pagan analogy: "Just as a person afflicted by melancholy or possessed of an 'evil spirit' is freed of his disease by taking certain medicaments or by the burning of certain roots, in the same manner the ashes of the Red Heifer, prepared in the prescribed way and dissolved in water, drive away the 'unclean spirit' of defilement resulting from contact with the dead." The Roman was satisfied with the answer, and went his way. Thereupon the pupils of Johanan said to him: "That man's attack thou hast warded off with a broken reed, but what answer hast thou for us?" "By your lives," said the Master, "the dead man doth not make impure, neither do the ashes dissolved in water make pure: but the law concerning the Red Heifer is a decree of the All-holy, Whose reasons for issuing that decree it behoves not mortals to question." In brief, the attitude of Judaism as to the meaning of this law is not merely a confession of ignorance, but the realisation that we shall never know why such defilement should be removed in that specified manner ("ignorabimus").

Nevertheless there have been many attempts at explanation, at any rate of symbolisation, of this law both by Jews and non-Jews. One of them is, The majestic cedar of Lebanon represents pride, and hyssop represents humility; uncleanness and sin and death are all associated ideas: the ceremony, therefore, is a powerful object-lesson, teaching the eternal truth that a holy God can be served only by a holy People.

2. statute of the law. Heb. חקת התורה. The word "statute" is used in connection with all laws and ordinances whose reason is not disclosed to us; see Genesis, 222. "Because Satan and the heathens taunt Israel with this and similar commandments, Scripture uses in this connection the term חֻקָּה 'statute,' implying, 'It is a decree from before Me, and you are not at liberty to cavil at My decrees'" (Rashi). This law served the generations in Israel as a pure instance of absolute obedience to the decrees of God.

red heifer. Heb. parah adumah; a young cow, not a calf or a full-grown cow. The early Jewish conception was that the sacrifice of the red heifer was an expiatory rite to atone for the sin of the Golden Calf תבא פרה ותכפר על מעשה העגל.

without spot. Faultlessly red; two hairs of another colour on its body were sufficient to disqualify it.

no blemish. Such as blindness and others referred to in Lev. XXII, 22–24, as rendering an animal unfit for sacrifice.

upon which never came yoke. A "virgin" animal in the sense of never having been used for secular purposes.

3. unto Eleazar. "As Aaron had made the Golden Calf, this rite was not to be carried out by him, because the prosecuting counsel cannot become the defending counsel"; i.e. Aaron who had caused the sin was not the fitting person to atone for it (Moses Haddarshan, quoted by Rashi). In

Aaron, saying, 2. This is the statute of the law which the LORD hath commanded, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, that they bring thee a red heifer without spot, wherein is no blemish, and upon which never came yoke: 3. and ye shall give her unto Eleazar the priest, and he shall bring her forth without the camp, and one shall slay her before his face: 4. and Eleazar the priest shall take of her blood with his finger, and sprinkle of her blood toward the front of the tent of meeting seven times: 5. and one shall burn the heifer in his sight: her skin, and her flesh, and her blood, with her dung, shall he burn: 6. and the priest shall take cedar wood, and hyssop, and scarlet, and cast it into the midst of the burning of the heifer. 7. Then later times, it was usually—though by no means invariably—the High Priests who officiated on these occasions.

he shall bring her forth. The Heb. is idiomatic, and is equivalent to "one shall bring her forth"; probably by the person ordered to slaughter her. Such person might be a layman.

4. toward . . . tent of meeting. An indication that the blood of the sacrifice was dedicated to the Sanctuary, and thereby acquired its atoning and purifying power.

seven times. As in the case of all sin-offerings; Lev. IV, 6, 17.

6. cedar wood, and hyssop, and scarlet. These were also employed in the purgation ritual of the lepers; Lev. XIV, 4. The scarlet may have been symbolic of sin (Isa. I, 18), just as the redness of the heifer.

sin offering. Better, a purification from sin ; something that removes sin. The ashes of the heifer shall be a medium for the purification from sin ; cf. "water of purification," in VIII, 7.

10. shall . . . be unclean. Everyone, priest or layman, who had something to do with the preparation of this water of purification became unclean.

A word must be said on the paradox of the parah adumah מטהרת את הטמאים ומטמא את הטהורים i.e. the simultaneous possession of sanctification and defilement. There have been great institutions and movements in both Jewish and general history that have sanctified others, and yet have at the same time tended to defile those that created or directed those institutions and movements. The very men who helped others to self-sacrifice and holiness, not infrequently themselves became hard and self-centred,

10. And he that gathereth the ashes of the heifer shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even: and it shall be unto the children of Israel, and unto the stranger that sojourneth among them, for statute for ever.

that toucheth him. i.e. the person that has any contact with the person mentioned in the foregoing clause. This is a departure from the RV, which has "that toucheth it." According to the Rabbis, contact with a corpse is the primary source of ritual impurity (אבי אבות הטומאה). He that has contact with the person thus contaminated becomes a secondary source of impurity (אב הטומאה), which in diminishing intensity is transmitted to food and liquids.

until even. When he becomes "clean," having bathed his body.

According to the Mishna, the ceremonial of the burning of a Red Heifer was enacted seven times; once by Moses, once by Ezra, and five times after Ezra. It naturally disappeared from Jewish life with the Destruction of the Temple.

Chapter XIX forms the reading for Sabbath Parah, one of the so-called four Extraordinary Sabbaths, on the last Sabbath but one in Adar; or on the last, if the first day of Nisan falls on a Saturday. The reading is to commemorate the purification of the unclean by sprinkling them with the "water of separation," so that they may be enabled to bring the Passover sacrifice in a state of purity. The Haftorah on Sabbath Parah is Ezek. XXXVI, 16–38, see Exodus, 596; Leviticus, 450.

not purify himself, that soul shall be cut off from the midst of the assembly, because he hath defiled the sanctuary of the LORD: the water of separation hath not been sprinkled upon him;
he is unclean. 21. And it shall be a perpetual statute unto them: and he that sprinkleth the water of separation shall wash his clothes; and he that toucheth the water of separation shall be unclean until even. 22. And whatsoever the unclean person toucheth shall be unclean; and the soul that toucheth it shall be unclean until

CHAPTER XX

CHAPTER XX

This chapter is, chronologically, the sequel of XIV, where it is related that the Israelites were condemned to wander forty years, and were foiled in an unauthorised attempt to enter Canaan from the south (XIV, 40–45). The events narrated in the present chapter belong to the last, the fortieth, year of the wanderings. As Ibn Ezra correctly points out, the history of the preceding thirty-eight years is a blank page in the Book of Numbers. And the reason is not far to seek. The men of that generation had been found wanting, and condemned to a dying life in the wilderness. Their story was, therefore, of no further spiritual value to the Israel of the future. And yet, " the ages of silence in the history of the Hebrews were generally ages of growth. These thirty-eight almost uneventful years are one of those numerous gaps in the nation's history, during which real progress was made. From them Israel emerged transformed from a fugitive body of slaves into a nation; and it is an evidence of the greatness of the character of Moses, that he knew how to wait in silence, till his people were ready to advance to conquest in obedience to God's command " (Foakes-Jackson).

XX, 1. Death of Miriam

1. into the wilderness of Zin. This, the third and last stage of the journey from Sinai to the Promised Land started at Kadesh, was continued round the land of Edom (xxi, 4), and ended at the heights of Pisgah in the country of Moab, near the Dead Sea and the fords of the Jordan.

in the first month. Of the fortieth year of wandering.

Kadesh. See on xiii, 26.

Miriam died there. She died towards the end of the desert wanderings, and like her brothers did not reach the Promised Land. She is spoken of as one of the three good leaders of Israel (פרנסים טובים); and to her merit was due the Well, which according to the legend, accompanied the children of Israel as long as she lived.

there. 2. And there was no water for the congregation: and they assembled themselves together against Moses and against Aaron. 3.
And the people strove with Moses, and spake, saying, Would God that we had died when our brethren died before the LORD! 4. And why have ye brought the assembly of the LORD into this wilderness, that we should die there, we and our cattle? 5. And wherefore have ye made us to come up out of Egypt, to bring us in unto this

2–23. STRIKING OF THE ROCK. SIN OF MOSES AND AARON

Over and over again Scripture brings out, on the one hand, the fickleness of the people—their murmurings, mutinies, vehement repentance, and woeful self-assertion; and, on the other hand, the marvellous constancy of Moses,—his humility, faithfulness, generosity and his sublime patience. Once only was his mighty spirit unable to stand the strain. The meaning of "ye believed not in Me" (v. 12) does not make it quite clear whether the sin was a momentary presumptuousness, or disobedience to a Divine command. It is but a single blot in his career, and in any other man would have been unnoticed. "Judaism teaches that the greater the man, the stricter the standard by which he is judged and the greater the consequent guilt and punishment, if there is a falling away from that standard" (S. R. Hirsch). For this sin, recorded in this chapter, Moses forfeits his right to enter the Promised Land.

3. when our brethren died. In the revolt of Korah, or at other occasions of "murmuring."

4. and our cattle. "'A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast'; and the fact that these people, so near death, still considered the sufferings of their beasts, shows that they were, notwithstanding their attitude towards Moses and Aaron, really pious men. And in truth, God did not take amiss their words against Moses and Aaron, for God holds no one responsible for words uttered in distress" (Midrash).

6. went from the presence of the assembly. Abarbanel and other commentators understand this in the sense of fleeing from before the assembly, and see in this action the lack of faith for which Moses and Aaron were condemned.

8. take the rod. With which the miracles had been wrought in Egypt and the rock at Rephidim had been smitten, when likewise the people strove with Moses; Exod. XVII, 4 ("what shall I do unto this people? They be almost ready to stone me").

9. took . . . the LORD. It had been deposited in the Tabernacle.

10. ye rebels. Heb. morim; the Midrash connects it with the Greek word for "fools," and also with the Heb. word for "teacher," and renders it, "Hear now, ye who presume to teach your teachers"; i.e. ye who imagine yourselves to be wiser than your leaders! "This impatience with the people was considered reprehensible in Divinely appointed leaders" (Maimonides).

evil place? it is no place of seed, or of figs, or of vines, or of pomegranates; neither is there any water to drink. 6. And Moses and Aaron went from the presence of the assembly unto the door of the tent of meeting, and fell upon their faces: and the glory of the LORD appeared unto them.*iii(ii) 7. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 8. Take the rod, and assemble the congregation, thou, and Aaron thy brother, and speak ye unto the rock before their eyes, that it give forth its water; and thou shalt bring forth to them water out of the rock: so thou shalt give the congregation and their cattle drink. 9. And Moses took the rod from before the LORD, as he commanded him. 10. And Moses and Aaron gathered the assembly together before the rock, and he said unto them, Hear now, ye rebels; shall we bring you forth water out of this rock? 11. And Moses lifted up his hand, and smote the rock with his rod twice: and water came forth abundantly, and the congregation drank, and their cattle. 12. And the LORD said shall we bring you forth. i.e. can we bring forth water out of this rock? In that moment of irritation and gloom, Moses gives expression to doubt in front of the masses as to the fulfilment of God's promise.

11. smote the rock. Carried away by anger, Moses still further forgot himself, and instead of speaking to the rock as he had been commanded, he struck it twice. Had he merely spoken to the rock, the miracle would have been undeniable, and God's Name would then have been sanctified in the eyes of the unbelieving multitude.

12. because . . . in the eyes of the children of Israel. In what did the offence really consist for which Moses and Aaron were excluded from the Promised Land? Some commentators hold that Scripture intentionally does not specify the sin of Moses: his sin, like his grave, was to remain unknown to posterity. Such, however, is not the opinion of the Rabbis, who maintain that this sin is sufficiently indicated in v. 10 and 11. "'Thou hast decreed'—said Moses—'that I die in the desert like the generation of the desert that angered Thee. I implore Thee, write in Thy Torah wherefore I have been thus punished, so that future generations may not say I had been like the generation of the desert.' God granted his wish, and in several passages, Scripture sets forth the offence for which Moses was not to enter the Promised Land" (Midrash).

east. For this purpose, they must traverse the territories of Edom and Moab that lie south of the Dead Sea; see Map. The land of Edom was held by a warlike race, and its king gruffly refused Israel's request for permission to pass through his land. This refusal forced the Israelites to take a still more circuitous route round the southern portion of Edom; and then, keeping to the east of Edom and Moab, march northwards towards the river Arnon. The journey was a terrible one. Nevertheless, the days of penal wandering were at an end, and the hour of conquest was at hand.

all the travail. lit. "the weariness." The sufferings which the Israelites had undergone should have filled the Edomites with brotherly sympathy, and induced them to to help their kinsfolk. The unnatural hostility of Edom towards Israel at a later period is the subject of the Book of Obadiah; see Genesis, 492f.

And Edom said unto him, Thou shalt not pass through me, lest I come out with the sword against thee. 19. And the children of Israel said unto him, We will go up by the high way: and if we drink of thy water, I and my cattle, then will I give the price thereof: let me only, without doing any thing else, pass through on my feet. 20. In later Jewish thought, Aaron is the ideal peace-maker; and Hillel bids every man to be a "disciple of Aaron, loving peace and pursuing peace, loving his fellowmen and bringing them near to the Torah." According to rabbinic legend, he would go from house to house, and whenever he found one who did not know how to recite the Shema, he taught him to recite it. He did not, however, restrict his activities to "establishing peace between God and man," but strove to establish peace between man and his fellow. If he discovered that two men had fallen out, he hastened first to the one, then to the other, saying, to each: "If thou didst but know how he with whom thou hast quarrelled regrets his action!" Aaron would thus speak to each separately, until both the former enemies would mutually forgive each other, and as soon as they were again face to face greet each other as friends. This kindness of his led many a sinner to reform, who at the moment when he was about to commit a sin thought to himself, "How shall I be able to lift up my eyes to Aaron's face, I, to whom Aaron was so kind!" When Aaron died, the angels lamented in the words, "The law of truth was in his mouth, and unrighteousness was not found in his lips: he walked with Me in peace and uprightness, and did turn many away from iniquity" (Malachi II, 6).

1–3. Battle with Canaanites

the South. Or, "the Negeb"; lit. "the dryness," was the southern district of Canaan that bordered on the desert and was itself largely desert.

of Atharim. Or, "of the spies" (Targum). As the territory of the king of Arad extended to the desert of Zin, he must have anticipated an invasion and sought to forestall it. Most commentators, however, regard the word as the name of a place.

2. utterly destroy. i.e. "devote," or place under a ban, dedicate wholly to the Deity.

3. Hormah. Heb. חרמה from the same root as חרם a ban, a devoted thing, i.e. a thing "doomed" to destruction. The collective name of all the destroyed cities was Hormah, which was thus a district and not a single town; see on xiv, 45 and introductory note to xiii.

This incident cannot be assigned to the period when the Israelites had begun to compass the land of Edom, for they were nowhere in the neighbourhood of Arad. It therefore must precede that event. "After leaving Sinai, the Israelites proceeded to Kadesh-barnea. From this base, they could march due north and invade Southern Palestine

21 1. And the Canaanite, the king of Arad, which dwelt in the South, heard tell that Israel came by the way of Atharim; and he fought against Israel, and took some of them captive. 2. And Israel vowed a vow unto the LORD, and said, If thou wilt indeed deliver this people into my hand, then I will utterly destroy their cities.
3. And the LORD hearkened to the voice of Israel, and delivered up the Canaanites; and they utterly destroyed them and their cities: and the name of the place was called Hormah.
4. And they journeyed from mount Hor by the way to the Red Sea, to compass the land of (the Negeb). This they did, and the result is given in the above three verses. It ended in the annihilation of the Canaanite ruler, and his chief city was henceforth called Hormah. Spies were thereupon sent out to explore Canaan proper, as related in Chapter XIII. But their report was unfavourable. On hearing it, the people lost heart, and it became clear that success could not be expected until a new generation had grown up. The order was therefore given to evacuate Kadesh, and proceed towards Edom. But the people suddenly veered round, and refused to obey. In defiance of the Divine command, they embarked on a campaign of conquest. The result was disastrous. They were utterly routed and chased to Hormah (XIV, 45), the scene of their former triumph" (Wiener).

4–9. THE BRAZEN SERPENT

4. by the way to the Red Sea. Forbidden to cut through Edom, they had to pass around it, by journeying in a southern direction until they reached Ezion-Geber, on the eastern gulf of the Red Sea, the Gulf of Akaba. They then turned eastwards of Mt. Seir; and thereafter northwards towards the steppes of Moab; see Map.

No, but so long as the Israelites looked upwards and subjected their hearts to their Father in Heaven, were they healed. But when they refused, then were they destroyed " (Mishna). The brazen serpent was " a token of salvation to put them in remembrance of the commandments of Thy Law, for he that turned toward it was not saved because of that which was beheld but because of Thee, the Saviour of all " (Wisdom of Solomon).

This brazen serpent made by Moses was naturally preserved as an object of veneration by the Israelites. But which is in the wilderness. i.e. that part of it which is in the Wilderness.

"The Arnon is an enormous trench across the plateau of Moab. It is about 1700 feet deep and two miles broad from edge to edge of the cliffs which bound it, but the floor of the Valley over which the stream winds is only forty yards wide. About nineteen miles from the Dead Sea, the trench divides into two branches, and each of them again dividing into two. The whole plateau up to the desert is thus not only cut across, but up and down, by deep ravines, and a very difficult frontier is formed. All the branches probably carried the name Arnon" (G. A. Smith).

14. the book of the Wars of the Lord. The lines from that book quoted here support the statement that Arnon was the border of Moab. There is no further mention of this book in the whole of Scripture. Ibn Ezra says, "It was an independent book in which were written the records of the wars waged by God on behalf of those that fear Him. Many books have been lost and are no longer extant among us; e.g. the Words of Nathan and Iddo, and the Chronicles of the Kings of Israel." Evidently it was a collection of ballads and songs. "The Book of the Wars of the Lord, like the Sefer Hayashar (Josh. x, 13 and II Sam. i, 18) is a proof that there was no absence of literary activity in the days of Moses. It furthermore proves that the Torah is not the result of such literary activity, otherwise the alleged compiler could have indicated his sources as he has done in this instance" (S. R. Hirsch).

Vaheb. This name of an unidentified town is in the accusative, and requires some verb like, "we captured," to be understood before it.

Zunz and Leeser translate v. 14 and 15 as follows : " Therefore mention is made in the Book of the Wars of the LORD of Vaheb in Suphah, and of the brooks of Arnon, and the descent of the brooks, that turneth toward Shebeth-Ar and leaneth upon the border of Moab." 21–32. CONQUERING THE AMORITE KINGDOMS

In contrast to former pictures of murmuring and mutiny, we now get events which bring out the glad surprise of the new people as their strength is tried against the gigantic Sihon and Og, and the foes are utterly exterminated (Moulton).

The Ammonites lay to the east; but as their border fortresses were strong and impregnable, the Amorites had been unable to penetrate into their territory. The reason why the Israelites did not enter the land of the Ammonites is given in Deut. II, 19.

The moshelim were bards who expressed in pithy poetic snatches what was uppermost in the popular mind at important occasions in the national life. In the present instance we have a quotation from a popular ballad, referring to the jubilation of the Amorites over their conquest of Moab; and another, to the exultation of Israel over the defeat of the Amorites.

come ye to Heshbon. This and the next two verses are the victory song of the Amorites when they in their day had wrested that land from the rulers of Moab. The poet invites the victorious Amorites to lose no time in entering upon and enjoying the greatest trophy in their victory, namely, the captured capital, Heshbon.

Unto Sihon king of the Amorites.

It was at Dibon that the so-called Moabite Stone was discovered in 1868—the most famous of all inscriptions bearing on Bible history. It is a contemporary document of the highest importance, giving the Moabite side of the conflict between Israel and Moab in the ninth pre-Christian century, the days of the Prophet Elijah and King Ahab.

(Chapters XXII–XXXVI)

VII. BALAK

(Chapters XXII, 2–XXV, 9)

The Book of Balaam

The Israelites now enter upon the last stage of their journey to the Promised Land. They are within sight of their goal, being encamped on the northern end of the Dead Sea, near the mouth of the Jordan.

When the story of the Exodus opens, Israel was a people of slaves under the taskmasters of Pharaoh. Forty years of toilsome travel pass. We now behold an irresistible People about to undertake the conquest of its national home, and a renowned heathen prophet giving solemn testimony to its sublime destiny. Such tribute to Israel's unique character is all the more impressive, as it is that of a stranger, speaking against his intention and interest, under the compulsion of a Higher Power. He proclaims the utter futility of all attempts on the part of man to foil the purposes of God in regard to that People; and in rapturous strains, he foretells the glorious future which awaits Israel. Such is the burden of chapters xxii–xxiv, probably known in ancient times as "The Book of Balaam" ספר בלעם. (This is the reading found in the Munich Manuscript—the only complete manuscript—of the Talmud, instead of פרשת בלעם as in the printed editions; Baba Bathra 15a). These chapters were found worthy to be incorporated by Moses into the Torah; and they form "the spiritual counterpart to Israel's military victory recorded in Chapter xxi" (Dillmann).

CHARACTER OF BALAAM

Balaam's personality is an old enigma which has baffled the skill of commentators. It seems probable that he had from the first learned some elements of pure and true religion in his home in Mesopotamia, the cradle of the ancestors of Israel. He thus belongs, with Melchizedek, Job, and Jethro, to the scattered worshippers of the true God, who are unconnected with Israel. But unlike these, he is represented in Scripture as at the same time heathen sorcerer, true Prophet, and the perverter who suggested a peculiarly abhorrent means of bringing about the ruin of Israel. Because of these fundamental contradictions in character, Bible Critics assume that the Scriptural account of Balaam is a combination of two or three varying traditions belonging to different periods. This is quite unconvincing; it is as if we were to maintain that the current life-story of Francis Bacon, for example, was due to the combination of two or three traditions belonging to different periods of English history, since no one man could at the same time be an illustrious philosopher, a great statesman, and "the meanest of mankind." Such a view betrays a slight knowledge of the fearful complexity of the mind and soul of man. It is only in the realm of the Fable that men and women display, as it were in a single flash of light, some one aspect of human nature. It is otherwise in real life. "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it?" (Jeremiah XVII, 9) is, alas, a far truer summary of human psychology.

In post-Biblical times, most Jewish authorities represent Balaam in an unfavourable, and often in a detestable, light. Although his utterances are a rhapsodic praise of Israel, they pay regard to his intention, which was to curse and not to bless. They therefore speak of him as בלעם הרשע, Balaam the Wicked. An evil eye, a haughty mind, and a proud spirit—they declare—mark his disciples. With Amalek and Haman, he is a permanent type of the enmity of the impious against Israel. All the more noteworthy is the fact that some Jewish opinions are decidedly and emphatically favourable. According to these opinions, he is as a prophet on a level with Moses; and his story is of such importance that it is given in the Law, the Prophets (Micah VI), and the "Sacred Writings" (Neh. XIII). There was even a suggestion that the utterances of Balaam should find a place in the Shema. Although this was not done, one noted saying of his, מה טבו אהליך יעקב משכנותיך ישראל ("How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, thy tabernacles, O Israel") forms the opening sentence of every Synagogue service.

In the early Church, the view taken of Balaam is one of unrelieved blackness: he is the embodiment of avarice and unholy ambition. Modern Christian theologians have depicted him as a warning example of self-deception which persuades man in every case that the sin which he commits may be brought within the rules of conscience and revelation; and as the combination of the purest form of religious belief with a standard of conduct immeasurably below it. A violent reaction in his favour set in with Lessing and Herder, long before the rise of the Critical School; and, among these newer estimates, we may mention that of Kalisch who considers Balaam faultless in character and his utterances unsurpassed for poetic beauty in the whole of Scripture: "firm and inexorable like eternal Fate, he regards himself solely as an instrument of that Omnipotence which guides the destinies of nations by its unerring wisdom. Free from all human passion, he is like a mysterious spirit from a higher and nobler world." Careful reading of chapters xxii–xxiv, however, shows that those who approve of everything Balaam says or does, are as far from a true estimate of him as those to whom he is a semi-diabolical being.

For the unique incident of the speaking ass, that has for centuries proved a source of merriment to the semi-educated, see introductory note to v. 22–34.

xxii, 2–4. Balak King of Moab

The Israelites fresh from victory over the Amorite kings were now settled on the border of Moab, and filled both king and people of Moab with dread.

22 2. And Balak the son of Zippor saw all that Israel had done to the Amorites. 3. And Moab

3. abhorred. Or, "loathed"; because they hated the children of Israel, they had a horror of them; cf. Exod. I, 12.

4. elders of Midian. Who conducted the general affairs of the desert tribes that had their origin in Midian, east of the Gulf of Akaba. The Midianites were a roaming race, and many clans had pitched their tents in territories adjacent to Moab. The Moabites and Midianites, although hostile to one another, joined forces in order to oppose those whom they falsely held to be their enemy—Israel. There was certainly no enmity on the part of Israel towards Moab (Deut. II, 29). Neither did Israel in any way cross the path of the Midianites or harbour any ill-will against them. Moses had spent many years in Midian; and Jethro, the Midianite priest, was an honoured guest in Israel's tents. The plot of the Moabites and Midianites against Israel was thus the outcome of "causeless hatred" (שנאת חנם), the source of the most terrible cruelties in human relations.

5–14. The First Deputation to Balaam

They place their hope in Balaam, far-famed throughout the East as a soothsayer whose curse is irresistible. Balak sends messengers to Balaam inviting him to cast a baneful spell upon this rising People of the desert. In a vision, God forbids Balaam to accompany them.

5. Balaam. Heb. "Bileam," probably a shortened form of בעל העם, "lord of the people" (Kalisch).

land of the children of his people. According to Heb. idiom this means Balaam's native land (Nachmanides). Midrash and Rashi, however, refer it to Balak, and deem him a foreign conqueror of Moab.

6. come now. The curse cannot be pronounced at a distance. The diviner must behold those whom he is to blight by his incantations.

curse me this people. The whole ancient world, Greece and Rome no less than the Near Eastern nations, had a firm belief in the real power of blessings and curses. This was especially so in Mesopotamia. Babylonian religion was rooted in demonology. It taught that certain persons had the power of directing or changing the decree of the gods, and could by their spells and incantations secure prosperity of Moab at that time. 5. And he sent messengers unto Balaam the son of Beor, to Pethor, which is by the River, to the land of the children of his people, to call him, saying, Behold, there is a people come out from Egypt: behold, they cover the face of the earth, and they abide over against me: 6. come now therefore, I pray thee, curse me this people; for they are too mighty for me: peradventure I shall prevail, that we may smite them, and that I may drive them out of the land: for I know that he whom thou blessest is blessed, and he whom thou cursest is cursed. 7. And the elders of Moab and the elders of Midian departed with the rewards of divination in their hand; and they came unto Balaam, and spake unto him the words of Balak. 8. And he said too mighty for me. cf. Exod. I, 9. Balak's phraseology, as well as his whole attitude, is reminiscent of Pharaoh—both illustrating the fatal madness of those who oppose God's purposes (Gray).

whom thou blessest is blessed. An expression of Balak's profound belief in the efficacy of curses; also the language of flattery with the object of securing the expert soothsayer's services before he—Balak—undertakes to fight the Israelites.

7. the rewards of divination. lit. "the instruments of the diviner's art"; here, the reward or pay to be given him (Samuel Hanaggid, the famous Spanish Talmudist, poet and statesman).

8. lodge here this night. Balaam is not disinclined to follow the invitation. The name "Israel" has not even been mentioned. To judge by Balaam's surprise when he caught his first glimpse of the Israelites, his knowledge of them could not have been extensive.

as the LORD shall speak unto me. Balaam is a prophet of the true God, in familiar intercourse with Him, and expects to receive some Divine communication in a dream or a vision of the night; cf. Gen. xx, 3. "This recognition of God's revelation of His purposes concerning Israel to a non-Israelite is striking evidence of the universality of Judaism" (Stanley).

Balak thought that the seer's motive for refusing was to elicit higher reward for his services.

But instead of this, he desires the princes of Moab to tarry that night with him also ; and for the sake of the reward deliberates whether he might not be able to obtain leave to do that which had been before revealed to him to be contrary to the will of God " (Joseph Butler).

that I may know. After God had distinctly said unto him, " thou shalt not curse this people," what need was there for him to say, " that I may know what the LORD will speak unto me more " ? It is evident that he harboured evil thoughts in his heart (Ibn Ezra). " Balaam said, Perhaps I may persuade Him, and He will agree that I should curse " (Rashi).

20. rise up, go with them. " Audacity may prevail even before God. Balaam's steadfast insistence upon his wish wrested from God His consent to Balaam's journey to Moab. He warned him of its consequences, saying to him, I take no pleasure in the destruction of sinners, but if thou art bound to go to thy destruction, do so " (Talmud).

BALAAM AND THE ASS

We now come to the best-known episode in the story of Balaam; viz. the speaking ass. God makes the dumb animal rebuke the blindness and obstinacy of man. Balaam, like many a one before and after him, is saved from dishonour by unforeseen hindrance, and brought to reason through means which human pride despises.

Many expositors, both in ancient and modern times, take the account of the miracle in these verses literally. Nothing is impossible to Omnipotence, they hold; and a speaking ass is no more marvellous than a speaking serpent or any of the other miracles. In the Ethics of the Fathers, the mouth of the earth that swallowed Korah (XVI, 32), the mouth of the well (see note on XXI, 16), and the mouth of Balaam's ass, are classed among those strange and wonderful phenomena that had their origin in the interval between the close of the work of Creation and the commencement of the Sabbath. In this way, the Rabbis gave expression to their conception of the miraculous in the scheme of things. Miracles, they held, were not interruptions of Nature's laws; for at Creation, God had provided for them in advance, as part of the cosmic plan. "The Fathers of the Mishna, who taught that Balaam's ass was created on the eve of the Sabbath, in the twilight, were not fantastic fools, but subtle philosophers, discovering the reign of universal law through the exceptions, the miracles that had to be created specially and were still a part of the order of the world, bound to appear in due time much as apparently erratic comets are" (Zangwill).

21 וַיָּקָם בִּלְעָם בַּבֹּקֶר וַיַּחֲבֹשׁ אֶת־אֲתֹנוֹ וַיֵּלֶךְ עִם־שָׂרֵי מוֹאָב׃
22 וַיִּחַר־אַף אֱלֹהִים כִּי־הוֹלֵךְ הוּא וַיִּתְיַצֵּב מַלְאַךְ יְהוָה בַּדֶּרֶךְ

For over a thousand years, however, the literal has largely given place to other interpretations of this incident. One of these explanations—that of Saadyah and Maimonides—considers v. 22–34 as enacted in a dream, or vision of the night. This would account for the many incongruous things in these verses. Thus, Balaam appears with but two attendants, and travelling alone without the brilliant accompaniment of princes and "honourable" ambassadors. Again, he does not show the least astonishment at the startling fact of the ass speaking. In the light of this interpretation, v. 22–34 depict the continuance on the subconscious plane of the mental and moral conflict in Balaam's soul; and the dream-apparition of the angel and the speaking ass is but a further warning to Balaam against being misled through avarice to violate God's command. Another explanation holds that the Text nowhere states that the ass gave utterance to human sounds. Its weird behaviour in the presence of the angel, and its wild cries at the cruel beatings, were understood by Balaam to mean the words given in the Text (Luzzatto).

In brief, there is not in Judaism any one authoritative interpretation of the Book of Balaam; and "in regard to its narrative, readers are free to think what they please" (Josephus). Therefore, those who do not deem any of the above interpretations acceptable, should feel too deeply the essential veracity of the story to be troubled overmuch with minute questions about its details. In whatever shalt thou do.* iii 21. And Balaam rose up in the morning, and saddled his ass, and went with the princes of Moab. 22. And God's anger was kindled because he went: and the angel of the LORD placed himself in the way for an adversary against him. Now he was riding upon his ass, and his two servants were with him. 23. And the way we conceive of the narrative, its representation of the strivings of conscience is of permanent human and spiritual value.

21–35. THE JOURNEY

22. God's anger was kindled. This seems to contradict what is said in v. 20, that God gave him permission to go. But that permission was conditional. He might go, but he must speak only what is given him to say. Balaam gladly seized the opportunity of going, for he was hankering after the reward. For the present, he ignored the condition. In his heart he hoped to evade it and satisfy Balak. But God who is the discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart, sees the double-mindedness of Balaam and gives him to know that there must be no trifling (Dummelow).

angel of the LORD. "This was an angel of mercy who desired to restrain him from committing a sin and perishing" (Midrash). "In many unforeseen, singular, and often homely ways, men are checked in the endeavour to carry out the schemes which ambition and avarice prompt. The angel of the LORD who opposes one bent on a bad enterprise often appears in familiar guise. To some men their wives stand in their way, some are challenged by their children" (Expositor's Bible).

29. I had killed thee. "At this, the ass laughed. He is intent on destroying a whole people by word of mouth; and to slay a poor ass he requires a sword" (Midrash).

32. wherefore hast thou smitten thine ass. "I have been commissioned to demand restitution from thee for the injustice thou hast offered to the ass" (Midrash). This v. is a classical text for the preaching of humane treatment of animals. "There is a rule laid down by our Sages, that ass saw the angel of the LORD standing in the way, with his sword drawn in his hand: and the ass turned aside out of the way, and went into the field: and Balaam smote the ass, to turn her into the way.

24. Then the angel of the LORD stood in a hollow way between the vineyards; a fence being on this side, and a fence on that side.
25. And the ass saw the angel of the LORD, and she thrust herself unto the wall, and crushed Balaam's foot against the wall: and he smote her again.
26. And the angel of the LORD went further, and stood in a narrow place, where was no way to turn either to the right hand or to the left.
27. And the ass saw the angel of the LORD, and she lay down under Balaam: and Balaam's anger was kindled, and he smote the ass with his staff.
28. And the LORD opened the mouth of the ass, and she said unto Balaam, What have I done unto thee, that thou hast smitten me these three times?
29. And Balaam said unto the ass, Because thou hast mocked me: I would there were a sword in mine hand, for now I had killed thee.
30. And the ass said unto Balaam, Am not I thine ass, upon which thou hast ridden all thy life long unto this day? was I ever wont to do so unto thee? And he said, Nay.
31. Then the LORD opened the eyes of Balaam, and he saw the angel of the LORD standing in the way, with his sword drawn in his hand: and he bowed his head, and fell on his face.
32. And the angel of the LORD said unto him, Wherefore hast thou smitten thine ass these

I will get me back again. Balaam was now convinced that it was useless hoping to bend God's will to his, and wished to have nothing more to do with Balak. But Balaam must now go as God's messenger and bless Israel.

35. So Balaam went. Resolved strictly to adhere to the Divine communications that were to be made to him. Having thus changed his disposition, he received God's revelation and was endowed with the Divine Spirit (Ewald).

adversary, because thy way is perverse before me: 33. and the ass saw me, and turned aside for I knew not that thou stoodest in the way against me: now therefore, if it displease thee,

I will get me back again. 35. And the angel of the LORD said unto Balaam, Go with the men: but only the word that I shall speak unto thee, that thou shalt speak. So Balaam went with the princes of Balak. 36. And when Balak heard that Balaam was come, he went out to meet him unto the City of Moab, which is on the border of Arnon, which is in the utmost part of the border. 37. And Balak said unto Balaam, Did I not earnestly send unto thee to call thee? wherefore camest thou not unto me?
am I not able indeed to promote thee to honour?

37. to promote thee. Balak seems surprised that his power to reward the prophet had not secured immediate compliance with his request. He is the type of worldly-minded man who thinks that blessings and curses, nay all things in heaven and on earth, can be bought, if only the buyer will pay a high enough price for them.

לך v. 13. חסר ה׳

the fourth part. Heb. רבע; or "progeny." Balaam's parable is highly poetic in form, and marked by parallelism or "thought-rhythm" between the two parts of a verse—a characteristic of all Heb. poetry. Now, neither "progeny" nor "fourth part" corresponds to the word "dust" in the first half of the verse. And yet, though none of the commentators have realized it, the parallelism between the two halves of the verse is perfect. Forty years ago, a wandering scholar called my attention to the fact that the word רבע means "ashes," and that therefore the correct rendering of the verse is:

"Who can count the dust of Jacob,
Or, by number, the ashes of Israel?"

This meaning of רבע is attested by the Samaritan Targum of "I am but dust and ashes" in Gen. XVIII, 27 (ואנה קטם ורבוע). In 1902, B. Jacob found that also in the Aramaic of the Palestinian Christians, the word רבע is a synonym of "dust." Nothing is, of course, more natural than that Balaam, the Aramean, should have made use of an Aramaism in his poetic outburst.

11–17. NEW ARRANGEMENTS

What Balaam had seen of the camp of Israel had so impressed him with the numbers, power and unity of Israel that he found it impossible to curse them. The distracted king changes the seer's place of outlook, and to this Balaam consents.

v. 18. קמץ בז״ק

17. what hath the LORD spoken? Balak is impatient, and asks for the result as soon as Balaam returns.

18–24. BALAAM'S SECOND PROPHECY

The change of place has all been in vain. Balaam, despite himself, must confirm and even transcend his former blessing; God is unchangeable in His purpose to bless His people. There is neither iniquity nor perverseness in Israel, and no magical arts can avail against him. With God as Defender, Israel is certain to be victorious.

18. rise up, Balak. The soothsayer while giving his answer has to address the person for whom he divines (Daiches).

19. God is not a man. With this first utterance, Balaam dashes Balak's hopes to the ground. Man breaks his word: but God is not man.

the son of man. Better, a son of man; i.e. a mere mortal.

repent. The Heb. denotes change of mind or purpose.

21. iniquity in Jacob. Israel is here, as in v. 10, spoken of ideally as a nation without spot or stain. Israel hath not committed any such wrong as would warrant God's withdrawal of His blessing from them, much less His permitting them to suffer destruction.

perverseness. This is the translation of Septuagint and Ibn Ezra; but the Heb. עמל means also calamity—and the phrase may indicate the absence of disasters in Israel. " The Israelites are with God—hence there is among them he came to him, and, lo, he stood by his burnt offering, and the princes of Moab with him. And Balak said unto him, What hath the LORD spoken?

18. And he took up his parable, and said.

Rise up, Balak, and hear;
Hearken unto me, thou son of Zippor:
19. God is not a man, that he should lie;
Neither the son of man, that he should repent:
Hath he said, and shall he not do it?
Or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?
20. Behold, I have received commandment to bless:
And he hath blessed, and I cannot reverse it.
21. He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob,
Neither hath he seen perverseness in Israel:
The LORD his God is with him,
And the shout of a king is among them.

no און iniquity; and God is with the Israelites—therefore they are free from עמל, calamity" (Kalisch).

the LORD his God is with him. Israel enjoys the fellowship of God; and hence no weapon hurled against him can prosper.

the shout of a king. Better, the trumpet-call of the King; i.e. they are constantly reminded of the dominion of their God, and summoned to His worship, by the solemn sound (תרועה) of the Shofar, which they obey with a joyful readiness, proving the sincerity of their faith and devotion (Kalisch). All holy seasons were announced, and all public sacrifices accompanied, by the "blast of the trumpet."

v. 24. קמץ בפשטא

22. bringeth them forth. lit. "is bringing them forth," representing the Exodus as still in progress, and lasting up to the entrance of Canaan (Gray). The most striking proof that God is with Israel is the deliverance from Egypt.

he hath . . . wild-ox. In consequence of God's presence, and of what He does for His people, Israel is as irresistible as the re'em—a species of buffalo, now extinct.

23. with Jacob. Or, "in Jacob." In Israel men do not resort to oracles, enchantments, or magic arts (Rashi). The next half-verse gives the reason. Some translate, "no enchantment prevails against Jacob" (Mendelssohn, Luzzatto, Malbim), implying that the arts of the magician and all the ways of divination are powerless against Israel.

at the due season. Heb. כעת; "at the right time" (Septuagint); "whenever required" (Rashi). Kalisch translates these two verses as follows:

"In due time it is told to Jacob
And to Israel what God doeth."

what God hath wrought. This translation is that of the Septuagint, Rashi, Ibn Ezra, Rashbam. "The poet reckons it among the advantages of Israel that whenever it is fitting, God causes to be announced what he intends to do" (Kuenen). Another translation is: "Now one can only say concerning Israel, What hath God wrought!" i.e. everything concerning Israel is irrevocably settled by Divine Will, and one can only exclaim in wonder at God's dealings with His people (Dillmann).

22. God bringeth them forth out of Egypt;
He hath as it were the strength of the wild-ox.
23. Surely there is no enchantment with Jacob,
Neither is there any divination with Israel:
At the due season shall it be told to Jacob and Israel
What God hath wrought.
24. Behold, the people riseth up as a lioness,
And as a lion doth he lift himself up:
He shall not lie down until he eat of the prey,
And drink the blood of the slain.

25. And Balak said unto Balaam, Neither curse them at all, nor bless them at all. 26. But Balaam answered and said unto Balak, Told not I thee, saying, All that the LORD speaketh, that I must do?*vi(vii) 27. And Balak said unto Balaam, Come now, I will take thee unto another place;
peradventure it will please God that thou mayest

24. riseth up as a lioness. Figurative description of an invincible hero (Gen. XLIX, 9), and general prediction of the strength that would mark Israel's progress in coming times.

XXIII, 25–XXIV, 2. REMONSTRANCES AND NEW PREPARATIONS

25. neither curse them at all. Balak abandons the hope of a curse, and would be satisfied if the prophet withheld his blessing from Israel. But hoping against hope, he invites Balaam to make a third attempt.

27. unto another place. Change of place, thought Balak, might mean a change of fortune!

28. the top of Peor. A mountain in the neighbourhood of Pisgah (Deut. iii, 27–29).

Chapter XXIV

1. enchantments. Or, "omens." He would no longer, even outwardly, act the sorcerer and retire to a lonely mountain peak for his auguries. He would remain in the presence of Balak, and there and then speak as the Spirit of God moved him. "He now rose from the character of heathen seer to that of true prophet" (Abarbanel).

2. according to their tribes. He saw the orderly encampment of the hosts of Israel, as described in Numbers ii.

the spirit of God came upon him. His conscience is now stirred to its depths. He no longer addresses Balak as he did when he announced the results of a divination: he speaks to the future, and to all mankind.

curse me them from thence. 28. And Balak took Balaam unto the top of Peor, that looketh

Balak, Build me here seven altars, and prepare me here seven bullocks and seven rams. 30. And Balak did as Balaam had said, and offered up a bullock and a ram on every altar.

Chapter XXIV

24 1. And when Balaam saw that it pleased the Lord to bless Israel, he went not, as at the other times, to meet with enchantments, but he set his face toward the wilderness. 2. And Balaam lifted up his eyes, and he saw Israel dwelling according to their tribes; and the spirit of God came upon him. 3. And he took up his parable, and said,

Balaam the son of Beor saith,
And the man whose eye is opened saith:
4. He saith, which heareth the words of God,
Which seeth the vision of the Almighty,
Falling down, and having his eyes open:

3. whose eye is opened. See note on next v.

4. falling down, and having his eyes open. Overpowered by the inrush of the Divine Spirit which renders the recipient weak and unable to stand on his feet. It is spiritual ecstasy; when the bodily senses become numbed, and only the eyes of the mind are opened to see the Divine vision and to comprehend the Prophetic message.

5. how goodly are thy tents, O Jacob. He is swept away in rapt admiration of the Israelite encampments and homes arrayed harmoniously and peacefully, a picture of idyllic happiness and prosperity. According to the Rabbinic interpretation, the "tents" are the "tents of Torah," and the "tabernacles" (lit. "homes") are the Synagogues. There loomed up before Balaam's mental vision the school-houses and synagogues which have ever been the source and secret of Israel's spiritual strength.

6. as valleys. The encampment of Israel is like a series of vast fertile plains, stretching away into the far distance and watered by running streams.

5. How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob,
Thy tabernacles, O Israel!

As gardens by the river side,

As cedar trees beside the waters.
7. Water shall flow from his buckets,
And his seed shall be in many waters,
And his king shall be higher than Agag,
And his kingdom shall be exalted.
8. God bringeth him forth out of Egypt;
He hath as it were the strength of the wild-ox:
He shall eat up the nations his adversaries,
And shall break their bones in pieces,
And smite them through with his arrows.
9. He couched, he lay down as a lion,
And as a lioness; who shall rouse him up?
Blessed be every one that blesseth thee,
And cursed be every one that curseth thee.
10. And Balak's anger was kindled against of Israel in time of peace, as XXIII, 24 described his terrific might in war.

9. blessed be every one that blesseth thee. Far from being affected by blessings and cursings from without, Israel would himself be a source of blessing or cursing to others, according as they treated him. Hence let Balak and all Israel's enemies be warned!

10–14. BALAK'S ANGER

Balaam, having disappointed the king three times, is dismissed by him in anger. In parting, Balaam reveals to him the fate in store for Moab.

mine enemies, and, behold, thou hast altogether blessed them these three times. 11. Therefore

And now, behold, I go unto my people: come,

18–24. Oracles concerning the Nations

In prophetic ecstasy, Balaam now sees the foes of Israel fall helpless all around, until the vision fades away in the far horizon of history.

23. who shall live. i.e. who can live.

24. from the coast of Kittim. lit. "from the hand (i.e. side, or direction) of Kittim." Kittim (derived from Kition, a town of Cyprus) was a name also used for Greece. There is here a possible reference to those lands across the Mediterranean, from which later were to come the conquerors of the mighty empires of the East.

25. returned to his place. As Balaam was slain among the Midianites shortly after (xxxi, 8), he must have set off homewards but tarried at the headquarters of the Midianites, where he met his end.

How long? Asshur shall carry thee away

23. And he took up his parable, and said,
Alas, who shall live when God doeth this?

Kittim,
And they shall afflict Asshur, and shall afflict
Eber,
And he also shall come to destruction.

to his place: and Balak also went his way.

XXV, 1–9. The Sin of Baal-Peor

Many Israelites accepted the invitation of the women of Moab and Midian to a sacrificial festival, and then joined them in the worship of Baal-Peor that was associated with, and partly consisted in, the most licentious rites. In XXXI, 16, we are told that it was Balaam who counselled the Midianites to take this evil course, in order to encompass the ruin of the Israelites by their own sins. There is nothing improbable in this heathen prophet, when his enthusiasm for Israel and righteousness had died away, sinking back into the old sorcerer, and telling the Moabites and Midianites that, though he could not curse the Israelites, he knew a way whereby the Israelites would curse themselves.

1. in Shittim. The last halting-place of the Israelites before they crossed the Jordan.

XXVI), the tribe of Simeon, to whom Zimri belonged, showed the greatest loss in population as compared with the previous census. (Chapters XXV, 10–XXX, 1)

XXV, 10–15. Phinehas' Reward

Filled with unsparing hatred of evil and burning indignation against a deed that was a monstrous profanation of God's holy Name, Phinehas executed summary vengeance on Zimri and Cozbi. That action gained Phinehas the reward of hereditary High Priesthood.

11. jealous with my jealousy. Better, very jealous for My sake (AJ). Zimri's conduct within the sacred precincts of the camp was a combination of idolatry and immorality. By his promptness and righteous zeal, Phinehas stayed the moral plague that threatened to destroy the character of Israel. The Rabbis have a saying: "Phinehas is Elijah"; and in this fearless deed, inspired by motives absolutely pure and holy, he is certainly a counterpart of the Prophet of storm and fire.

12. my covenant of peace. lit. "my covenant, the covenant of peace"; i.e. I assure him of My friendly attitude towards him (Rashi, Gray). Phinehas should be free from any fear of retaliation by the brethren of Zimri who, being princes,

11. Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, hath turned my wrath away from the children of Israel, in that he was jealous with my jealousy among them, so that I consumed not the children of Israel in my jealousy.
12. Wherefore say, Behold, I give unto him my covenant of peace: 13. and it shall be unto him, and to his seed after him, the covenant of an everlasting priesthood; because he was jealous for his God, and made atonement for the children of Israel. 14. Now the name of the man of possessed great power (Ibn Ezra). The word "covenant" is here used, not in the sense of a compact between two persons, but as an unconditional promise on God's part. In addition to the Divine blessing with which Phinehas' action was rewarded, it received the grateful admiration of succeeding ages. In Psalm CVI, we read that his zeal "was counted unto him for righteousness unto all generations for evermore."

13. an everlasting priesthood. A second promise to Phinehas on God's part—the dignity of the High Priesthood is to be the possession of his descendants. With the exception of a brief interruption in Eli's days, it continued in his family until the fall of the Jewish state.

atonement for the children of Israel. The act of Phinehas was accepted by God as a national atonement; i.e. a "covering" of the nation's sin.

14. the name of the man. Just as in the case of good men, so also are the names and families of evil-doers recorded —an immortality of infamy is theirs.

a prince. Of one of the five "fathers' houses" comprised in the tribe of Simeon (xxvi, 12f). "The fact that Zimri was the prince of a great house, was nothing to Phinehas when punishment had to be meted out and the honour of God vindicated" (Rashi).

head of the people of a fathers' house. That the daughter of such a man should have consented to play so immoral a role, is an indication of the dangerous lengths to which the Midianites would resort in their efforts to destroy the Israelites through sin (Rashi).

16–18. War declared against the Midianites

17. vex the Midianites. Or, "harrass the Midianites"; i.e. count them as dangerous enemies and smite them. The Israelites who had been seduced into sin had been severely visited by God. And now, as was just, the Midianites too are to be punished; see xxxi, 1. No punishment is meted out to the Moabites—the Rabbis explain—because these had at least the excuse of fear for their infamous conduct towards the Israelites; whereas the Midianites were actuated by pure hatred.

Israel that was slain, who was slain with the Midianitish woman, was Zimri, the son of Salu,

that was slain was Cozbi, the daughter of Zur;
he was head of the people of a fathers' house

17. Vex the Midianites, and smite them: 18. for they vex you with their wiles, wherewith they have beguiled you in the matter of Peor, and in the matter of Cobzi, the daughter of the prince day of the plague in the matter of Peor. 19. And it came to pass after the plague,

XXV, 19—XXVI. THE SECOND CENSUS

Nearly forty years had passed since the first numbering of the Israelites, and a new census had become a necessity. The Land was shortly to be divided amongst the tribes for an inheritance; and the exact number of fighting men and families had to be known.

19. after the plague. It had seriously diminished the numbers of at least one of the tribes. "The Divine command to number the Israelites at this juncture may be likened to the case of a shepherd whose flocks have been depleted by an inrush of wolves. When the catastrophe is over, the shepherd lovingly counts his sheep in order to know how many are left alive" (Rashi).

10. became a sign. A warning for all time to others.

11. the sons of Korah died not. See on XVI, 11. "From the earthquake and the consuming flame and the raging plague that put an end to the schemes of those who took counsel together against the chosen of the LORD, the sons of Korah survived—survived to become the founders of a whole family or guild of Psalmists, whose meditations in the noble group of Psalms bearing their name are still with us for our delight, our instruction and our comfort" (Singer).

2. Take the sum of all the congregation of the children of Israel, from twenty years old and to go forth to war in Israel. 3. And Moses and Eleazar the priest spake with them in the plains

children of Israel, which came forth out of the 52–56. Concerning the Division of the Land

The extent of each territory is to be proportionate to the size of the tribe to whom it is allotted.

55. divided by lot. In settling the geographical position of each tribe's inheritance, recourse was had to the "lot," in order to refer the matter to God unto Whom alone the land belonged. Thus jealousy and strife among the tribes would be prevented. See xxxiii, 54.

57–62. Census of the Levites

A separate census was necessary, as the Levites were numbered from the age of one month, whilst the other tribes were counted from 20 years of age, as only to such was a parcel of land to be apportioned.

58. the families of Levi. The families enumerated in this verse are the issue of the three Levitical families; viz., the Gershonites, the Kohathites and the Merarites, mentioned in the preceding verse. The Libnites were the descendants of the Gershonites (iii, 21); the Hebronites were Kohathites (iii, 19); and the Mahlites and Mushites, inheritance according to the number of names.

54. To the more thou shalt give the more inheritance, and to the fewer thou shalt give the less inheritance: to every one according to those that were numbered of him shall his inheritance be given. 55. Notwithstanding the land shall be divided by lot: according to the names of the tribes of their fathers they shall inherit. 56. According to the lot shall their inheritance be divided between the more and the fewer.

57. And these are they that were numbered of the Levites after their families: of Gershon, the family of the Gershonites: of Kohath, the family of the Kohathites: of Merari, the family of the Merarites. 58. These are the families of Levi: the family of the Libnites, the family of the Hebronites, the family of the Mahlites, the family of the Mushites, the family of the Korahites. 59. And Kohath begat Amram. And the name of Amram's wife was Jochebed, the daughter of Levi, who was born to Levi in Egypt: and she bare unto Amram Aaron and Moses, and Miriam their sister. 60. And unto Aaron were born Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar.
61. And Nadab and Abihu died, when they offered strange fire before the LORD. 62. And they Merarites (111, 33). Two other families, viz., the Shimeites (888, 21) and Uzzielites, as well as a few others, are omitted in the present enumeration, possibly because they had died out.

61. offered strange fire. See Lev. x, 1–7.

Chapter XXVII

Laws of Inheritance. Joshua the successor of Moses

1–11. The Daughters of Zelophehad

The request made by the daughters of Zelophehad arose naturally out of the census which, under Divine direction, was taken with a view to the peaceful and equitable distribution of the land amongst the tribes of Israel. Landed property was not to be alienated from the family or tribe that were numbered of them were twenty and three thousand, every male from a month old upward: for they were not numbered among the children of Israel, because there was no inheritance given them among the children of Israel.

63. These are they that were numbered by Moses and Eleazar the priest; who numbered the children of Israel in the plains of Moab by the Jordan at Jericho. 64. But among these there was not a man of them that were numbered by Moses and Aaron the priest; who numbered
the children of Israel in the wilderness of Sinai.
65. For the LORD had said of them, They shall surely die in the wilderness. And there was not left a man of them, save Caleb the son of Jephunneh, and Joshua the son of Nun.

CHAPTER XXVII

27 1. Then drew near the daughters of Zelophe-had, the son of Hepher, the son of Gilead, the son of Machir, the son of Manasseh, of the families of Manasseh the son of Joseph: and these are the names of his daughters; Mahlah, Noah, and Hoglah, and Milcah, and Tirzah. 2. And they stood before Moses, and before Eleazar the priest, and before the princes and all the

to which it belonged. However, in the absence of a male heir to an estate, its legal possession by a female heir might on the latter's marriage cause such alienation. Hence the necessity for definite regulation of this question.

5. before the LORD. He submitted their contention to the judgment of God, presumably by going into the "tent of meeting" and awaiting the revelation of the Divine Will; Exod. XVIII, 19. This is what the daughters of Zelophehad desired. They said: "God's love is not like the love of a mortal father; the latter prefers his sons to his daughters, but He that created the world extends His love to all His children. His tender mercies are over all His works" (Midrash).

11. statute of judgement. A fixed and authoritative custom; see further XXXVI.

The Order of Inheritance as developed by later Jewish Law is as follows: (1) sons and their descendants; (2) daughters and their descendants; (3) the father; (4) brothers and their descendants; (5) sisters and their descendants; (6) the father's father; (7) the father's brothers and their descendants; (8) the father's sisters and their descendants; (9) the great-grandfather and his collateral descendants; and so on. To this list, the Rabbis added another legal heir, the husband. Each of the sons of the deceased receives an equal share of the estate of his father or of his mother, except the first-born of the father, who receives a double share. In the case of the death of a son during his father's life, his children inherit his portion of the estate. The Rabbis, while denying the daughters a share in the inheritance where there are sons, still make ample provision for their maintenance and support, as long as they remain unmarried. The cost and provision of such maintenance constitute the first charge upon the estate of the deceased. In case the estate was small, the principle was laid down: "The daughters must be supported, even if the sons are reduced to beggary."

12–23. Joshua appointed successor of Moses

Moses is commanded to view the Land of Promise, which he may not enter, and is given an intimation of his approaching death. This command is repeated in Deut.

have no brethren, then ye shall give his inheritance unto his kinsman that is next to him of his family, and he shall possess it: and it shall be unto the children of Israel a statute of judgement, as the LORD commanded Moses.

12. And the LORD said unto Moses, Get thee up into this mountain of Abarim, and behold the land which I have given unto the children of Israel. 13. And when thou hast seen it, thou also shalt be gathered unto thy people, as Aaron thy brother was gathered: 14. because ye rebelled against my word in the wilderness of Zin, in XXXII, and its fulfilment related in XXXIV, the last chapter of the Torah. In the interval, Moses delivered the laws contained in the remaining chapters of Numbers and the addresses that constitute the Book of Deuteronomy—besides the sacred war against Midian. The Midrash accounts for the insertion here of his summons to die, in the following way: Moses had just received the Divine instructions concerning the ways in which the Promised Land was to be distributed amongst the tribes, and he said to himself, "Peradventure, I too may be allotted a share. Peradventure, the Divine decree forbidding me to enter the Promised Land has now been revoked." But God said unto him, "My decree stands unchanged."

12. mountain of Abarim. The top of Pisgah, one of the peaks of Mt. Nebo.

and behold the land. Moses had already been told that he should not enter the Promised Land (xx, 12), yet he is allowed the consolation of seeing it with his eyes before his death. Furthermore, Moses was to see how near Israel was now to the Promised land, and hence his labours had not been in vain.

13. as Aaron thy brother. The Rabbis explain this to mean that like Aaron he was to die "by the mouth of the LORD"; i.e. his also would be "death by a Divine kiss."

14. because ye rebelled. See on xx, 12, 13.

15. Moses spake unto the LORD. Rashi remarks, "This verse tells us the praise of righteous men who at the hour of their departure from the world abandon all thought of their own wants and think only of the wants of the community." The solicitude of Moses for the appointment of his successor is singularly and touchingly disinterested.

16. the God of the spirits of all flesh. "God who knows the varying spirits of men, and who therefore knows what type of spirit is required in the man who is to fill the place of Moses" (Ibn Ezra). This same phrase occurs in XVI, 22. According to the Midrash, Moses prayed, "Sovereign of the universe, Thou knowest the minds of all men, and how the mind of one man differs from that of another. Appoint over them a leader who will be able to bear with the differing minds of every one of Thy children."

lay thine hand upon him. Heb. וסמכת את ידך עליו, a symbolic action to show the transference of his authority to Joshua. From this Heb. word is derived the noun Semicha, the act of admission in the Talmudic age to the rights and duties of a Rabbi—ordination. In modern times, when ordination in the olden sense has lapsed, the certificate of admission to the Rabbinate is still called Semicha, as well as by the more general designation Hattarath Horaah—"permission to render decisions on ritual questions."

19. give him a charge. i.e. instruct him publicly in the duties appertaining to his great and sacred office.

20. of thine honour upon him. i.e. Moses was to confer honour and dignity upon Joshua publicly; so that, when the people saw the high esteem in which he was held by Moses, they would feel it incumbent upon them to honour him likewise, as well as to obey him. The lit. translation is "put some of thy majesty upon him," as no man was worthy to receive the whole of Moses' majesty.

PUBLIC DAILY AND FESTIVAL OFFERINGS

Israel had once more been numbered, and a Leader selected for the conquest of the Land. In this and the following chapter we have a detailed description of the public sacrifices to be brought at the Sanctuary, whether in the daily offering or on each of the Festivals. The sacrifices in these chapters may be regarded as supple-

And he shall stand before Eleazar the priest, who shall inquire for him by the judgement of the Urim before the LORD: at his word shall they go out, and at his word they shall come in, both he, and all the children of Israel with him, even all the congregation. 22. And Moses did as the LORD commanded him: and he took Joshua, and set him before Eleazar the priest, and before all the congregation: 23. and he laid his hands upon him, and gave him a charge, as the LORD spake by the hand of Moses.*v

XXIX, 1–11. New Year and Day of Atonement Offerings

7 ye shall afflict your souls. A phrase denoting the self-denial and abstention accompanying a fast. Isaiah lviii, which has always been taken as referring to the Day of Atonement, designates it repeatedly as a "fast," and emphasises not only its religious but also its social message to the Jewish life. See Lev. xvi, 29, xxiii, 27–29.

v. 15. נקוד על ו׳ בתרא

12–38. Offerings for the Feast of Tabernacles

The sacrifices on this Festival were more numerous than on any other of the Feasts. As it was the Feast of Ingathering, marking the close of the labours of the year in field and vineyard, threshing-floor and winepress, the joys associated with it found expression in a profusion of offerings to God, the bounteous Giver of the harvest.

The number of bullocks, diminishing on each of the seven days by one, totalled seventy altogether. In the Rabbinic view, these seventy bullocks corresponded to the seventy nations of the world, and were intended as an atonement for all mankind. Tabernacles was thus early conceived atonement, and the continual burnt offering, and the meal offering thereof, and their drink offerings.*vii

12. And on the fifteenth day of the seventh month ye shall have an holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work, and ye shall keep a feast unto the LORD seven days: 13. and ye shall offer a burnt offering, an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD; thirteen young bullocks, two rams, fourteen he-lambs of the first year; they shall be without blemish: 14.
and their meal offering, fine flour mingled with oil, three tenth parts for every bullock of the thirteen bullocks, two tenth parts for each ram of the two rams, 15. and a several tenth part for every lamb of the fourteen lambs: 16. and one he-goat for a sin offering; beside the continual burnt offering, the meal offering thereof, and the drink offering thereof.

17. And on the second day ye shall offer twelve young bullocks, two rams, fourteen he-lambs of the first year without blemish: 18. and their meal offering and their drink offerings for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, according to their number, after the ordinance: 19. and one he-goat for a sin offering; beside the continual burnt offering, and the meal offering thereof, and their drink offerings.

Chapter XXX. Concerning Vows

This chapter emphasises the solemnity and binding character of religious vows, and in what circumstances vows of women can be annulled by the father or husband.

2-3. Sacredness of Vows

3. voweth a vow. Heb. neder ; denotes a solemn promise to consecrate something to God, or do something in His service or His honour. A vow was usually made in a time of distress, and its motive was the desire to secure Divine help; cf. Gen. xxviii, 20-22. Or it might be an expression of gratitude for Divine aid received. " The manifest emotion with which many a singer in the Psalter records his gratitude to God as he pays his vows, shows that they must often have represented a warm and genuine religious experience " (McFadyen).

a bond. Heb. issar. In contrast to neder, this may be called a negative vow : a self-imposed pledge to abstain from doing or enjoying something that is perfectly allowable.

IX. MATTOS

tribes of the children of Israel, saying, This is the thing which the LORD hath commanded. 3. When a man voweth a vow unto the LORD, or sweareth an oath to bind his soul with a bond, he shall not break his word; he shall do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth. 4. Also when a woman voweth a vow unto the LORD, and bindeth herself by a bond, being in her father's house, in her youth; 5. and her father heareth her vow, and her bond wherewith she hath

according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth. There is a tendency in human nature to forget in health and security the vows that were made in sickness and danger; but the rule remains, Whatever a man has promised unto God, that he must fulfil.

4-6. VOWS OF A YOUNG UNMARRIED WOMAN

After laying down the general principle, Scripture proceeds to qualify it in three special cases of vows made by women under authority; viz. a) women before marriage; b) married women; c) women after marriage, i.e. widows and divorced women.

4. in her youth. A young unmarried woman still under her father's guardianship; i.e. till the age of adolescence.

5. holdeth his peace. The father's silence amounts to a ratification of the vow.

6. disallow her. If the father verbally disapproves of her vow on the day he hears of it, such disapproval amounts to a veto and the vow becomes annulled; see on v. 13.

7-9. Case of a Married Woman who made the Vow whilst Single

7. while her vows are upon her. This is the second of the three afore-mentioned cases; viz., the vow of a woman who marries whilst under a vow made by her before marriage, whether during the stage of adolescence and with the requisite approval of the father, or when she was a full-grown woman and outside the range of her father's veto.

bonds wherewith she hath bound her soul, shall her father disallowed her. 7. And if she be married to a husband, while her vows are upon her, or the rash utterance of her lips, wherewith she hath bound her soul; 8. and her husband

that he heareth it: then her vows shall stand, and her bonds wherewith she hath bound her her in the day that he heareth it; then he shall make void her vow which is upon her, and the rash utterance of her lips, wherewith she hath bound her soul: and the LORD shall forgive her. 10. But the vow of a widow, or of her that is divorced, even every thing wherewith she hath bound her soul, shall stand against her.

bound her soul by a bond with an oath, 12. and women are fully binding. They fall under the general principle in v. 3.

11. in her husband's house. This is a sub-section of the second of the aforementioned cases; viz., the vow of a married woman. In this instance, the husband has the same authority to allow or disallow the vow, as the father had in regard to his young adolescent daughter.

13. shall forgive her. As it was no fault of hers, if the husband or father cancelled her vow.

14. to afflict the soul. By fasting or any kind of abstinence.

16. he shall bear her iniquity. If the husband tacitly consented to the vow in the first instance, and afterwards forbade her to fulfil it, then the guilt rests upon him.

VOWS AND VOWING IN THE LIGHT OF JUDAISM

The Rabbis fully endorsed the Biblical demand for man uncompromisingly to honour his word, whether accompanied by a vow or not. Their position on this matter is absolutely clear : " Let thy yea be yea, and thy nay be nay. He who changes his word commits as heavy a sin as he who worships idols ; and he who utters an untruth, is excluded from the Divine Presence "

A vow to be valid must be uttered aloud ; it must be made voluntarily, without any compulsion from without, and the person making it must be fully conscious of its scope and implications. A man may impose a restriction upon himself by vow ; he cannot so restrict others. Vows whose fulfilment is rendered impossible by force majeure are void.

Scripture discourages vowing. " If thou shalt forbear to vow, it shall be no sin in thee " (Deut. XXIII, 22) : " Be not rash with thy mouth . . . Better is it that thou shouldest her, and disallowed her not; then all her vows shall stand, and every bond wherewith she bound her soul shall stand. 13. But if her husband made them null and void in the day that he heard them; then whatsoever proceed out of her lips concerning her vows, or concerning the bond of her soul, shall not stand: her husband hath made them void; and the LORD shall forgive her. 14. Every vow, and every binding oath to afflict the soul, her husband may establish it, or her husband may make it void. 15. But if her husband altogether hold his peace at her from day to day; then he establisheth all her vows, or all her bonds, which are upon her: he hath established them, because he held his peace at her in the day that he heard them. 16. But if he shall make them null and void after that he hath heard them; then he shall bear her iniquity. 17. These are the statutes, which the LORD commanded Moses, between a man and his wife, between a father and his daughter, being in her youth, in her father's house.*ii not vow, than that thou shouldest vow and not pay" (Eccl. v, 2, 5). The post-Biblical teachers, whether in Alexandria, Palestine or Babylon, shared this attitude towards vows. Philo declares, "The word of the good man should be his oath, firm and unchangeable, founded steadfastly on truth. Therefore vows and oaths should be superfluous. Some men make vows out of wicked hatred of their fellow men; swearing, for example, that they will not admit this or that man to sit at the same table with them, or to come under the same roof. Such men should seek to propitiate the mercy of God, so that they may find some cure for the diseases of their souls." The Rabbis were equally zealous in their attempt to dissuade men from vowing. "Do not form a habit of making vows," was an ancient Tannaite teaching; while Samuel, the great teacher in Babylon, roundly declared, "He who makes a vow, even though he fulfil it, is called a rosho, a wicked man." In the time of the Mishna, the habit of taking vows was considered a sign of bad breeding, and affected the honour of the vower's parents, just as swearing would nowadays point to a man's low origin. One exception was admitted. The making of vows was tolerated, when it was done in order to rid oneself of bad habits, or in order to encourage oneself to do good; but—says the Shulchan Aruch—even in such cases one should strive for the desired end without the aid of vows. "Even vows for charitable purposes are not desirable; if one has the money, let him give it straightway without a vow; and if not, let him defer his vow until he have it."

The fact must however be recorded that the mass of the people did not rise to these moral heights, and the popular Oriental passion for vow-making continued unabated. And just because the Rabbis assigned such sacredness to the spoken word, they were faced with a grave problem. For altogether aside from imbecile and rash minds, men in time of danger or under momentary impulse would make vows which they could not fulfil. These self-imposed obligations or abstentions might clash with man's domestic duties, or interfere with his proper relations to his neighbours. In such cases, the Rabbis would consider it their duty to afford a man the facility, under certain definite conditions and restrictions, of annulling his thoughtless or impossible vows. Such annulment could never be effected by himself, but only by a Beth Din of three learned men in the Law, after they had carefully investigated the nature and bearing of the vow, and had become convinced that its purpose was not, on the one hand, self-improvement; nor did it, on the other, infringe upon the rights of others. For not all vows or oaths could be absolved. A vow or oath that was made to another person, even be that person a child or a heathen, could not be annulled except in the presence of that person and with his consent; while an oath which a man had taken in a court of justice, could not be absolved by any other authority in the world. Far from being animated by a loose regard for morality, the annulment of vows ordained by the Rabbis has an ethical intent, that of saving persons who have made virtually impracticable vows from the guilt of breaking them, and of preventing the hardship and injustice which their fulfilment will entail upon others (Z. Frankel, Schechter).

Kol Nidré

The formula for the annulment of vows that ushers in the Service on the Eve of the Day of Atonement refers to such vows which we may have voluntarily promised to the Almighty, and had not been kept, or the fulfilment of which might prove to be beyond our ability to carry out. "But it does not in the least possible degree affect the promises or obligations entered into between man and man, as the latter can only be dissolved by the mutual consent of the parties, nor can it absolve any man from an official oath" (Editor's note, Sephardi Eve of Atonement Prayer Book).

The Kol Nidré has had a curious history. "The awe and solemnity with which it is pronounced, the beauty and pathos of the threefold chant, the scattered millions of Israel gathered in every synagogue in the world, are sure signs that the words of the prayer, written like an old inscription, are full of meaning; beneath them lurks the thought that is God-inspired, a conception of the sanctity of Truth" (Editor's note, Ashkenazi Eve of Atonement Prayer Book, in "The Service of the Synagogue"). And yet its introduction was opposed by some Geonim over a thousand years ago: it was recast, though not improved, by a noted rabbi in the 11th century; and has been a welcome weapon in the hands of anti-Semites, who, in defiance of all truth and justice, have used it to prove to their hate-blinded followers that "the word of a Jew cannot be trusted." The pioneers of Reform Judaism abolished it a century ago: and every now and then voices are raised in Orthodox communities that, in view of the misunderstandings to which it has given rise, the time has come for its official removal from the Festival Prayer Book. I append the reply I sent to an Overseas Congregation which recently submitted this suggestion to me.

> "Proposed alterations in the Liturgy, even of its non-essential portions, call for the greatest care and consideration. The question of altering the Kol Nidré prayer especially bristles with difficulties. Chief among them is this: the prayer as it stands has for centuries been a weapon of malicious attack by enemies of Israel. If, in consequence, the prayer is abolished, we are held as pleading guilty to their charges, and by our action seem to justify these charges. Historic Judaism has, therefore, ever braved these misrepresentations. Conscious of the sacredness and inviolability which attaches to an oath in Jewish Law and life, it indignantly repudiates the construction its maligners place upon this Prayer, and proclaims that the dispensation from vows in it refers only to those in which no other persons or interests are involved; and that no private or public vow, promise or oath which concerns another person, is implied in the Kol Nidré."

"One further consideration. Recent historical studies have shown the Kol Nidré to be an unique memorial of Jewish suffering and repentance. It arose in Spain, as a result of the Jewish persecutions by the West Goths, in the seventh century. Entire Jewish communities were then doomed to torture and the stake, unless they forswore their Faith, and by the most fearful oaths and abjurations bound themselves nevermore to practise any Jewish observances. In this way, even when better times came and the fury of the oppressor abated, the unfortunate members of those communities felt themselves perjured before God and man if they returned to their Holy Faith, or kept even the most sacred of its Festivals.. It was to ease the conscience of these crushed and distracted men and women, that the Kol Nidré was formulated. In view of this origin of the prayer—which has only recently become known and which alone explains all its anomalies—various congregations on the Continent that had formerly abolished the Kol Nidré have reintroduced it, realising that the awakening of historic memories, and the forging of links with the past, are vital factors in Jewish traditional life and worship."

Chapter XXXI

The War against the Midianites

In xxv, 16-18, Moses is bidden to smite the Midianites because they had enticed the Israelites to the licentious and idolatrous worship of Baal-Peor. In the present chapter, he is ordered to carry out the command forthwith; and we are given full details of the campaign.

The war against the Midianites presents peculiar difficulties. We are no longer acquainted with the circumstances that justified the ruthlessness with which it was waged, and therefore we cannot satisfactorily meet the various objections that have been raised in that connection. "Perhaps the recollection of what took place after the Indian Mutiny, when Great Britain was in the same temper, may throw light on this question. The soldiers then, bent on punishing the cruelty and lust of the rebels, partly in patriotism, partly in revenge, set mercy altogether aside" (Expositor's Bible). The Midianites affected were only the clans that lived in the neighbourhood of Moab. This accounts for the persistence of Midianites in later periods of Israelite history.

3. execute the Lord's vengeance. The preceding v. refers to Israel's vengeance on Midian; this v. speaks of God's vengeance on Midian. Both mean the same thing. The cause of Israel is the cause of God. "Vengeance" is here used in the broad sense of retributory punishment.

CHAPTER XXXII

TRIBES REMAINING EAST OF THE JORDAN

The tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh desire to settle east of the Jordan. Moses objects to this, as it would discourage the rest of Israel in their undertaking to possess Canaan. They protest their willingness, after having provided shelter for their families and cattle, to accompany the other tribes until Western Palestine is conquered.

Eastern or Transjordanic Palestine is a country 150 miles long from Mt. Hermon on the north to the south end of the said unto Moses, Thy servants have taken the sum of the men of war which are under our charge, and there lacketh not one man of us. 50. And we have brought the LORD'S oblation, what every man hath gotten, of jewels of gold, ankle chains, and bracelets, signet-rings, earrings, and necklaces, to make atonement for our souls before the LORD. 51. And Moses and Eleazar the priest took the gold of them, even all wrought jewels. 52. And all the gold of the heave offering that they offered up to the LORD, of the captains of thousands, and of the captains of hundreds, was sixteen thousand seven hundred and fifty shekels. (53. For the men of war had taken booty, every man for himself.) 54. And Moses and Eleazar the priest took the gold of the captains of thousands and of hundreds, and brought it into the tent of meeting, for a memorial for the children of Israel before the LORD.*vi(iii)

CHAPTER XXXII

32 1. Now the children of Reuben and the children of Gad had a very great multitude of cattle:

Dead Sea; its breadth, from the Jordan River to the edge of the desert, varies from thirty to eighty miles. It is throughout over 2,000 feet above sea-level, with a temperate climate lifted above the almost tropic heats which surround it to the west and south. It is a land of health and fertility. The middle region—Gilead—bore perfume and medicine for the whole Eastern world. Gilead is covered with forests; and its valleys, by orchards and vineyards. Even more famous was its pasture. "Flocks and pastures have ever been the wealth, the charm, the temptation of Eastern Palestine—a land of opulence and insecurity" (George Adam Smith).

Gilead. Gilead sometimes stands for the whole territory east of the Jordan (e.g. in v. 29) that was occupied by the Israelites. Sometimes, however, as in v. 39f, it denotes only the land north of the river Jabbok, as far as the river Jarmuk.

and when they saw the land of Jazer, and the land of Gilead, that, behold, the place was a place for cattle; 2. the children of Gad and the children of Reuben came and spake unto Moses, and to Eleazar the priest, and unto the princes of the congregation, saying, 3. And they said, If we have found grace in thy sight, let this land be given unto thy servants for a possession; bring us not over Jordan. 6. And Moses said unto the children of Gad and to the children of Reuben, Shall your brethren go to the war, and shall ye sit here? 7. And wherefore discourage ye the heart of the children of Israel from going over into the land which the LORD hath given them? 8. Thus did your fathers, when I sent them from Kadesh-barnea to see the land. 9. For when they went up into the valley of Eshcol, and saw the land, they discouraged the heart of the children of Israel, that they should not go into the land which the LORD had given them. 10. And the LORD's anger was kindled in that day, and he sware, saying, 11. Surely none of the men that came up out of Egypt, from twenty years old and upward, shall see the land which I sware unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob; because they have not wholly followed me: 12. save Caleb the son of Jephunneh the contained in this phrase became a general moral maxim among the Rabbis. "Man should be clear not only before God but also in the estimation of his fellowmen." It is not enough that a man's conscience is pure. He must strive to make even his outward actions irreproachable and above suspicion. A man should avoid doing things that appear wrong, משום מראית עין.

23. be sure your sin will find you out. Better, and know your sin—i.e. the punishment for your sin, which will overtake you. The rendering of the RV that has passed into a proverbial expression in the English language, is based upon an ancient notion that sin, like a curse, has, so to speak, an individual existence. The sinner cannot escape its consequence; it will seek and find him out.

28. So Moses gave charge concerning them to Eleazar the priest, and to Joshua the son of Nun, and to the heads of the fathers' houses of the tribes of the children of Israel.
29. And Moses said unto them, If the children of Gad and the children of Reuben will pass with you over Jordan, every man that is armed to battle, before the LORD, and the land shall be subdued before you; then ye shall give them the land of Gilead for a possession:

33. half tribe of Manasseh. The sub-tribes of Manasseh were pure warriors who had taken the most prominent part in the conquest of the Gileadite districts. The word "half" in the phrase "half tribe of Manasseh" is not to be taken in a precise arithmetical sense. It denotes a section. According to XXVI, 29-32 there were eight sub-tribes of Manasseh, six of whom were allotted territory on the west of Jordan.

(Chapters XXXIII—XXXVI)

XXXIII, 1-49. Itinerary from Egypt to the Jordan

This chapter supplies us with the stages of the journey of the Israelites from Egypt to the Plains of Moab. It was written to serve as a memorial not only of historical interest but of deep religious significance. Every journey and every halting-place had its suggestions for the instruction, admonition, or encouragement of Israel. The Midrash says, " It may be likened unto a king who had taken his ailing son to a distant place to be cured. On the return journey, the king would lovingly recount to the lad all the experiences they went through at each of their halting-places. 'At this spot we slept; at that, we had a cool resting-place from the heat; at the other, you were overcome with pains in the head!' Israel is God's child, upon whom He bestows compassion, even as a father bestows compassion on his son."

2. goings out. Or, " goings forth " ; i.e. each place from which they went forth to proceed to another place.

Chapter XXXIII

33 1. These are the stages of the children of Israel, by which they went forth out of the land of Egypt by their hosts under the hand of Moses and Aaron. 2. And Moses wrote their goings out according to their stages by the commandment of the Lord: and these are their stages according to their goings out. 3. And they journeyed from Rameses in the first month, on the fifteenth day of the first month; on the morrow after the passover the children of Israel went out with an high hand in the sight of all the Egyptians, 4. while the Egyptians were burying all their firstborn, which the Lord had smitten among them: upon their gods also the Lord executed judgements. 5. And the children of Israel journeyed from Rameses, and pitched in Succoth. 6. And they journeyed from Succoth, according to their stages. Better, stage by stage (AJ).

3. with an high hand. See Exod. xiv, 8.

in the sight of all the Egyptians. The departure was public. There was nothing clandestine or ignominous in the way in which they left the land of their oppressors.

4. burying. Israel was joyous and strong, whilst his erstwhile master, Egypt, was bent low and broken.

upon their gods. See Exod. xii, 12 for the meaning of this phrase. The false deities of Egypt were made contemptible in the eyes of their worshippers.

5-15. These verses detail the stages of the journey from Raamses in Egypt to the Wilderness of Sinai. This is related in Exod. xii, 37 and xix, 2. Two stations, Dophkah and Alush are not mentioned in Exod.

16-36. These verses give the places visited between the Wilderness of Sinai and the Wilderness of Zin. At this distance it is exceedingly difficult to identify the exact route of march, more especially as the names were not names of cities or conspicuous landmarks. They have changed with the centuries, and the designation of the temporary landmarks was forgotten (Dummelow).

XXXIV, 1-29. The Boundaries of the Holy Land

This chapter indicates the ideal limits of the Holy Land. "These, the providential (Gen. xv, 18, Ex. xxiii, 31) and in some sense natural, boundaries of the territory of Israel, were only attained for a brief period during the reigns of David and Solomon" (Dummelow). Great uncertainty exists in regard to many of the geographical terms, especially those connected with the Northern border. S. H. Isaacs, The True Boundaries of the Holy Land, Chicago, 1917, is a valuable contribution to the solution of a difficult problem, and has been followed in these comments.

2. shall fall unto you. This expression is used because the Land was to be divided by lot.

them be as pricks in your eyes, and as thorns in your sides, and they shall vex you in the land wherein ye dwell. 56. And it shall come to pass, that as I thought to do unto them, so will I do unto you.

Command the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye come into the land of Canaan, (this is the land that shall fall unto you for an inheritance, even the land of Canaan according to the border thereof), 3. then your south quarter shall be from the wilderness of Zin along by the side of Edom, and your south border shall be from the end of the Salt Sea eastward : 4. and your border shall turn about southward of the ascent of Akrabbim, and pass along to Zin : and the goings out thereof shall be southward of Kadesh-barnea ; and it shall go forth to Hazar-addar, and shall be your west border. The western border of Palestine is to be the Mediterranean coast. "The Great Sea—that is the whole eastern flank of the Great Sea from its south-eastern to its north-eastern corner—shall be the western boundary of the land. If any point on the coast, between these two corners were meant, the Text would surely have designated that point. As it did not, the whole eastern shore of the Mediterranean must be intended. The western border of the Holy Land, therefore, begins at the south-east corner of the Mediterranean where the "Brook of Egypt" falls into it; thence it runs northward, passing Mount Carmel, Tyre, Zidon, the Lebanons, unto the north-eastern border of the Bay of Alexandretta" (S. H. Isaacs).

And this shall be your north border: from the great sea ye shall mark out for you mount Hor: 8. from mount Hor ye shall mark out unto the entering in of Hamath; and the goings out of the border shall be at Zedad: 9. and the border shall go forth to Ziphron, and the goings out thereof shall be at Hazar-enan: this shall be your north border. 10. And ye shall mark out your east border from Hazar-enan to mount Hor. This is quite distinct from the mountain of the same name in the Wilderness of Zin, where Aaron died; but no two geographers can be said to agree where it was. Isaacs follows Jewish tradition. He writes: "If the starting-point of the northern border is the north-eastern corner of the Sea, and the direction of the line is eastward, this line will strike on its way the Mountain of Amanus."

Targum Jonathan and the Tosefta also identify this Mount Hor with Mount Amanus. Mount Amanus is the modern Giaour Dagh.

8. the entering in of Hamath. The Pass across Mount Amanus to the territory of Hamath. Zedad is identified with Baghche Pass.

9. Ziphron. Afrin, on the river of the same name.

Hazar-enan. Aintab. This last-named brings us to lands inhabited in ancient times by Hittites. "Numerous mounds covering the remains of Hittite and other towns attest its former settlement and cultivation" (Sir Chas. Wilson). This extension of the northern boundary so as to include ancient Hittite habitations accords with Josh. I, 4: "All the land of the Hittites, and unto the great sea toward the going down of the sun, shall be your border."

Levitical Cities and Cities of Refuge

1-8. Levitical Cities

Forty-eight cities, with a portion of land attached to each, are to be set aside for the support of the Levites. The carrying into effect of this law is given in Josh. xxi. "The purpose of this institution seems to be the following. The tribe consecrated to God's service shall, through its equal distribution among the other tribes, be enabled to labour among them for the cause of God; guide those that seek instruction in His Law: and at the same time be saved from utter dispersion by living together in family groups in the Levitical cities. Such distribution among the other tribes was further rendered necessary by the fact that the maintenance of the Levites depended on the tithes, given by the people" (Dillmann). According to Rabbinic tradition, the institution of Levitical cities ceased with the destruction of the first Temple.

commanded to divide the inheritance unto the children of Israel in the land of Canaan.*v.

6. cities of refuge. Places of asylum to shelter the involuntary homicide, see v. 9-15. Levitical cities were selected for this purpose; both because they were regarded as having a sacred character, and because they were inhabited by men who knew the Law, and who could decide in doubtful cases between wilful murder and accidental homicide.

8. from the many. The more populous the tribe, the more cities they were to provide for the Levites. East of the Jordan, the Levites had ten such cities, and in Canaan proper 38. It is clear from what is said in Josh. XXI, that this principle of proportionate giving was not literally

And the pasture lands of the cities, which ye shall give unto the Levites, shall be from the wall of the city and outward a thousand cubits round about. 5. And ye shall measure without the city for the east side two thousand cubits, and for the south side two thousand cubits, and for the west side two thousand cubits, and for the north side two thousand cubits, the city being in the midst. This shall be to them the pasture lands of the cities. 6. And the cities which ye shall give unto the Levites, they shall be the six cities of refuge, which ye shall give for the manslayer to flee thither: and beside them ye shall give forty and two cities. 7. All the cities which ye shall give to the Levites shall be forty and eight cities: them shall ye give with their pasture lands. 8. And concerning the cities which ye shall give of the possession of the children of Israel, from the many ye shall take many; and from the few ye shall take few: every one according to his inheritance which he inheriteth shall give of his cities unto the Levites.*vi (vii)

9-15. Cities of Refuge

Six cities of refuge, three on either side of the Jordan are to be set aside as places of asylum for accidental homicides. In later times, the forty-eight Levitical cities were deemed Cities of Refuge. Nor did the six Cities of Refuge always need to remain the same. Others might be substituted, provided their situation conformed to the Biblical law with regard to distances and geographical position.

11. shall appoint you. lit. "cause to happen"; i.e. make ready, prepare.

may flee thither. Any one guilty of unpremeditated taking of human life could escape to one of these cities and find shelter and protection.

12. from the avenger. Heb. goel, more usually, goel haddam, lit. "the avenger of blood"; "redeemer." It refers to the nearest representative of the family of the slain man, whose duty it was to "vindicate" the death of the victim. In primitive society, if one member of a family was murdered, an intolerable shame rested upon the family until "satisfaction" had been inflicted on the manslayer at the hands of the "redeemer," or avenger of the family honour. It was the sacred aim of the Mosaic legislation to take the decision of the guilt or innocence of the manslayer out of the hands of the "avenger," and assign it to an impartial tribunal.

them, When ye pass over Jordan into the land of Canaan, 11. then ye shall appoint you cities to be cities of refuge for you; that the manslayer which killeth any person through error may flee thither. 12. And the cities shall be unto you for refuge from the avenger; that the manslayer die not, until he stand before the congregation for judgement. 13. And the cities which ye shall give shall be for you six cities of refuge. 14. Ye shall give three cities beyond Jordan, and three cities shall ye give in the land of Canaan; they shall be cities of refuge. 15. For the children of Israel, and for the stranger and for the sojourner among them, shall these six cities be for refuge: that every one that killeth any person through error before the congregation. The tribunal of elders and judges appointed by the community to which the homicide belongs. In later times, it was understood to refer to a duly constituted Sanhedrin.

14. cities. These six cities are specified in Josh. xx, 1-9. Moses in his lifetime set aside three cities for the two and a half tribes on the eastern side of the Jordan, as their land, especially Gilead, was wild border country, and homicide was more frequent there than in Western Palestine. The other three cities were set aside by Joshua.

15. for the stranger. Heb. ger; the resident alien. The Cities of Refuge were to be for everyone, including both the resident alien and the non-Israelite who was making but a temporary stay in the land of Israel. "All human life is holy (Exod. xxi, 12), and no innocent blood should be suffered to be shed. Homeborn and stranger alike, therefore, shall have one law in regard to asylum" (Dillmann).

were nurseries of criminals. In the time of Tiberius, the swarms of desperadoes at shrines had become so dangerous that the right was limited to a few cities. Conditions were not much better when the Medieval Church began to offer "sanctuary" to criminals of every description. The Torah alone forbade the granting of protection to the wilful offender. "If a man come presumptuously upon his neighbour to slay him with guile, thou shalt take him from mine altar that he may die" (Exod. xxi, 14). Even if it was a priest who officiated at the Altar, says the Talmud, he is not to escape punishment, if his act was other than unintentional homicide.

22. without enmity. An explanation of the phrase "killing a person through error." The main criterion is the absence of motive. The Rabbis distinguished three grades in unpremeditated homicide: 1) grave carelessness; 2) contributory negligence; 3) complete innocence. Only in case of the second is exile to the Cities of Refuge prescribed. Complete innocence needs no atonement; and for grave carelessness, exile was not deemed a sufficient punishment.

25. shall restore him. They shall send him back under safe escort to the City in which he had taken refuge until the time of the trial. death of the high priest. Like that of a king, it represented a definite landmark in the national life. And as Asylum was connected with the Altar of the Central Sanctuary and with Cities of the Levites, it was but natural that the death of the High Priest, and not that of the king, should have been selected as the date terminating the exile of the unfortunate manslayer (Dillmann).

Various other explanations have been given as to why the death of the High Priest should be the signal for giving a man may die, seeing him not, and cast it upon him, so that he died, and he was not his enemy, neither sought his harm : 24. then the congregation shall judge between the smiter and the avenger of blood according to these judgements : 25. and the congregation shall deliver the manslayer out of the hand of the avenger of blood, and the congregation shall restore him to his city of refuge, whither he was fled : and he shall dwell therein until the death of the high priest, which was anointed with the holy oil. 26. But if the manslayer shall at any time go beyond the border of his city of refuge, whither he fleeth ; 27. and the avenger of blood find him without the border of his city of refuge, and the avenger of blood slay the manslayer ; there shall be no bloodguiltiness for him : 28. because he should have remained in his city of refuge until the death of the high priest : but after the death of the high priest the manslayer shall return into the land of his possession. 29. And these the homicide his freedom. Maimonides thinks that the death of the High Priest was an event that moved the entire people so much that no thoughts of vengeance could arise in the avenger of blood. According to the Talmud, the High Priest should by the power of prayer have made such a calamity as murder an impossibility in Israel. That he had not succeeded in doing so, was a proof that he had failed in his duty. Hence he had to bear the penalty of knowing how welcome his death would be to the man exiled to a City of Refuge !

30-34. Concerning Murder

These regulations emphasise the extreme sacredness of human life. "In ancient custom, loss of life could be compensated for by the death of any member of the man-slayer's family. Here the Law insists that the murderer only is to forfeit his life" (Gray). Murder, furthermore, is such a heinous crime that it cannot be atoned for by the payment of a money-fine; and not even the man who has unintentionally killed another shall purchase his release from the City of Refuge before the death of the High Priest.

30. at the mouth of witnesses. It was stated in v. 16-18 that a man guilty of wilful murder should be put to death. The present v. and the one following tell us that the tribunal may only carry out the death-sentence if the murder is attested by two witnesses.

31. no ransom for the life of a manslayer. The wilful murderer cannot have his death-sentence commuted by a money payment. The Rabbis rightly deduced from this wording, that other injuries could be thus compounded for; see Exodus p. 289.

32. fled to his city of refuge. Neither can the homicide escape exile by a ransom.

things shall be for a statute of judgement unto you throughout your generations in all your dwellings. 30. Whoso killeth any person, the manslayer shall be slain at the mouth of witnesses: but one witness shall not testify against any person that he die. 31. Moreover ye shall take no ransom for the life of a manslayer, which is guilty of death: but he shall surely be put to death. 32. And ye shall take no ransom for him that is fled to his city of refuge, that he should come again to dwell in the land, until the death of the priest. 33. So ye shall not pollute the land wherein ye are: for blood, it polluteth the land: and no expiation can be made for the land for the blood that is shed therein, but by the blood of him that shed it. 34. And thou shalt not defile the land which ye inhabit, in the midst of which I dwell: for I the LORD dwell in the midst of the children of Israel.*vii

30. manslayer. Better, murderer; so also in next v.

33. ye shall not pollute the land. The Heb. root חנף means, to act wickedly, to profane, or pollute. If such redemption-money were permitted, human life would be cheapened, and the land would become wholly corrupt.

for blood, it polluteth the land. See Lev. XVIII, 25; Psalm CVI, 38.

34. for I the LORD dwell in . . . Israel. Because God dwells in the midst of Israel, therefore Israel and Israel's Land must be undefiled by violence and unholiness. The idea of God's dwelling in the midst of Israel has been epitomised by the Rabbis in the one word Shechinah; i.e. God's Indwelling Presence.

Chapter XXXVI

Law of Heiresses

In xxvii, 1-11, the law was laid down that permitted daughters to inherit property in the absence of male issue. But there was a danger that if such heiresses married men belonging to other tribes, their inheritance might pass out of their particular tribe. To guard against this contingency, the ruling in the present chapter is given. The question was raised by the chiefs of the clan of Machir of the half-tribe of Manasseh, whose allotted territory was in Gilead.

1. fathers' houses. See on I, 2.

3. be taken away. Because their male issue who will be their heirs will be reckoned to the tribe of their father, and thus the property will pass into the possession of another tribe.

4. the jubile. The provisions of the law of Jubilee are given in Lev. xxv. But it was only purchased land that had to be returned to its original owner or his descendant in the houses of the children of Israel : 2. and they said, and my lord was commanded by the Lord to any of the sons of the other tribes of the children of Israel, then shall their inheritance be taken away from the inheritance of our fathers, and whereunto they shall belong : so shall it be taken

Before reading the Lesson from the Prophets, the following is said by the Maftir :—

Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the universe, who hast chosen good prophets, and hast found pleasure in their words which were spoken in truth.

Blessed art thou, O Lord, who hast chosen the Law, and Moses thy servant, and Israel thy people, and prophets of truth and righteousness.

[Sephardim conclude each Haftorah with the words :—

Our Redeemer! The Lord of Hosts is his name, the Holy One of Israel.]

After the Lesson from the Prophets, the Maftir says the following :—

Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the universe, Rock of all worlds, righteous through all generations, O faithful God, who sayest and doest, who speakest and fulfillest, all whose words are truth and righteousness. Faithful art thou, O Lord our God, and faithful are thy words, and not one of thy words shall return void, for thou art a faithful and merciful God and King. Blessed art thou, O Lord, God, who art faithful in all thy words.

Have mercy upon Zion, for it is the home of our life, and save her that is grieved in spirit speedily, even in our days. Blessed art thou, O Lord, who makest Zion joyful through her children.

Gladden us, O Lord our God, with Elijah the prophet, thy servant, and with the kingdom of the house of David, thine anointed. Soon may he come and rejoice our hearts. Suffer not a stranger to sit upon his throne, nor let others any longer inherit his glory ; for by thy holy name thou didst swear unto him, that his light should not be quenched for ever. Blessed art thou, O Lord, the Shield of David.

For the Law, for the divine service, for the prophets, and for this Sabbath day, which thou, O Lord our God, hast given us for holiness and for rest, for honour and for glory,—for all these we thank and bless thee, O Lord our God, blessed be thy name by the mouth of every living being continually and for ever. Blessed art thou, O Lord, who sanctifiest the Sabbath.

The Haftorah (the Heb. term is haphtarah, " conclusion "), is the Lesson from the Prophets recited immediately after the Reading of the Law. Long before the destruction of the Second Temple, the custom had grown up of concluding the Reading of the Torah on Sabbaths, Fasts and Festivals with a selection from the " Earlier Prophets " (Joshua, Judges, Samuel and Kings), or from the " Later Prophets " (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel and the Book of the Twelve Prophets). We possess no historical data concerning the institution of these Lessons. A medieval author on the Liturgy states that a little more than two thousand years ago (168 B.C.E.), Antiochus Epiphanes, king of Syria and Palestine, forbade the reading of the Torah under penalty of death. The Scribes, thereupon, substituted a chapter of the Prophets cognate to the portion of the Law that ought to have been read. But, whatever be the exact origin of the Haftorah, there is always some similarity between the Sedrah and the Prophetic selection. Even when the latter does not contain an explicit reference to the events of the Sedrah, it reinforces the teaching of the weekly Reading upon the mind of the worshipper by a Prophetic message of consolation and hope.

BEMIDBAR

HOSEA II, 1–22

The opening words of the Haftorah compare the future numbers of the nation to the sand of the sea, and thus connect with the Sedrah which gives the numbers of the Israelites in the wilderness. For the times and message of Hosea, see Genesis, p. 478–9 and 486–7.

THE HAFTORAHS

Or the Lessons from the Prophets

THE PARABLE OF A LIFE'S TRAGEDY

This Haftorah speaks in a strange imagery which is most puzzling to the ordinary reader. However, all difficulties disappear if we bear in mind that, in the opinion of the Rabbis, Hosea's domestic tragedy was ordained, and from the first intended, to make the Prophet realise, through personal suffering, Israel's unfaithfulness to God, and God's unending love of His people. Quite independently of this Rabbinic view of Hosea's life, modern commentators (Ewald, W. R. Smith, Cheyne) similarly read our Haftorah in the light of the tragic experience of the Prophet, recorded in the opening chapter of the Book of Hosea which precedes our Haftorah, and in Chapter III which follows it.

Their interpretation is as follows. A heavy domestic sorrow darkened Hosea's life. He had married a woman called Gomer; and she rendered him deeply unhappy. He found that he had wasted his love on a profligate woman. She fled from the Prophet's house, and sank lower and lower until she became the slave-concubine of another. But Hosea's love was proof even against faithlessness and dishonour. He, the deeply aggrieved husband, buys her back from slavery, and brings her into his house—as a ward, pitied and sheltered, but subjected to a period of probation that shall show whether her better self can be awakened.

It seems that while this tragedy was taking place within his own home, Hosea began to feel as if his own individual experience was symbolic of the story of his nation. There too it might be said that a loving husband, as it were, had been deceived and abandoned by a wife—the wife being Israel and the husband God. God had chosen the poor down-trodden Israelites, the slaves of the Egyptians, to be His people; had allied Himself with them in love and faith; had showered His blessings upon them; had given them a national home, and made them a mighty people. And all these mercies Israel requited with blackest ingratitude. Instead of serving Him in purity and righteousness, they adopted the lascivious and cruel worship of the idolatrous Canaanites; and they forsook the true God, the Creator of heaven and earth, for the local godlings, the 'Baalim,' of the heathens around them. But it is his feelings towards Gomer that led the Prophet to an overwhelming spiritual discovery:—if he could love a faithless wife so tenderly and patiently, what must the love of God be towards His people? And if he did not despair that love and patience would awaken Gomer's better nature, would not God's everlasting mercies redeem His sinning people and save it from the fate that would otherwise await it? Justice demanded that Israel suffer for his sins; and suffering and exile would inevitably overtake him. But God's dealings with His children were not guided by Justice alone. God is not man whose last word is anger and passion. "The LORD loveth the children of Israel, though they turn unto other gods" (III, 1). The suffering and exile, therefore, with which He visits Israel cannot be ends in themselves. The infinite love of God will, by means of this very suffering and exile, purify Israel, lead him to self-knowledge, and bring him back in perfect repentance to God. The strongest bond between man and his Father who is in Heaven is love; man may forget that bond, but God never will. Israel's kingdom might fall, and all its outward structure totter into ruin; but Israel will live—because of the infinite love of God (Cassuto).

When the similarity between his wife's conduct and that of Israel dawned upon Hosea's mind, he felt that his marriage with the wayward Gomer must have been the will of God; nay, that his impulse to take this woman to wife was "the beginning of God's speaking to him" (Hosea I, 2). He saw that it was God's will that he should come to realise Israel's

2 °1. Yet the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured nor numbered; and it shall come to pass that, instead of that which was said unto them, Ye are not my people, it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God.

°In English Bibles, this is Chapter I, v. 10

faithlessness through the faithlessness of his wife; and God's love of Israel, through his own persistent love of Gomer. Hence, when he writes down this parable from his life, he represents it as if God had from the first ordered him to marry a woman who was 'light of love,' and who would be faithless to her bond and her duty, in order by means of this parable to open the eyes of a blind and sinful people to their ingratitude and guilt (Montefiore). There is a perfect parallel to this in the Haftorah for Behar; see Leviticus, p. 410.

Hosea tells us also that of his unhappy marriage there were three children. When these children came, Hosea, it would appear, had already realised his wife's unworthiness, and the parable had already been borne in upon his soul. Hence, he feels constrained by a Divine command to give to their children symbolical names of terrible significance—names referring to that other wife's history and future, of which his own wife was the symbol and the image. The name of one is Jezreel (see on v. 2); of the second, Lo-Ruhammah ("Unpitied")—the dreadful message to his generation that the sin of Israel was too great to be forgiven; and the name of the third, Lo-Ammi, "Not-my-people." Israel was no longer God's covenant people.

So much for the background that is essential for the understanding of the Haftorah.

up from the land. i.e. of their Exile (Targum and Kimchi).

Jezreel. The name of the Plain stretching from Mt. Carmel across the whole width of Palestine to the Jordan. In the preceding chapter (v. 4), Jezreel was the name given to the first son of Hosea to recall the massacre by Jehu in that Plain. It is an ominous sound, a knell rung in the ears of the house of Jehu to awaken the sense of guilt and the presentiment of retribution for the blood shed by its founder. But in the restoration now promised, Jezreel receives another and better significance based on its literal meaning : " God will sow." He will sow again His scattered people, and great will be that day of Israel's regeneration.

3. say unto your brethren, Ammi. The baleful names of the children are now reversed. Lo-Ammi becomes Ammi, My people ; and Lo-Ruhammah becomes Ruhamah, i.e. she who obtains compassion.

4–15. Israel's Dark Present

4–6. By one of those swift transitions that reflect the conflicting emotions by which his sensitive soul is torn—profound love for his people and anguish at their moral decay and the destruction it was precipitating—Hosea now arraigns Israel under the image of the faithless wife. Bright as is Israel's future, even so dark and despairing is the present. There must be a radical break with idolatries and disloyalties.

the Baalim. The festivals kept in honour of the deities of the heathen Canaanites, or the adaptation of that cult by Jeroboam in the two golden calves he set up. These festivals were bacchanalian in character.

16–17. God's Love of Israel

The bright promise of the Divine undying love now takes the place of threats. Hosea's consciousness of the greatness of the Divine love was such that he never pronounced a doom on his people, but immediately the mercy of God broke in upon him like a new dawn. Israel, the erring wife, has been sent away from the home of her Husband, but not from His heart. The punishments were but God's wooing of the misguided spouse so that she seek Him again. He will never entirely repudiate her who gave Him the love of her youth. He will bring her into the wilderness, where they have loved each other; He will console her; she will sing cause all her mirth to cease, her feasts, her new moons, and her sabbaths, and all her solemn assemblies. 14. And I will lay waste her vines and her fig trees, whereof she hath said, These are my hire that my lovers have given me:

and I will make them a forest, and the beasts of the field shall eat them. 15. And I will visit upon her the days of the Baalim, wherein she burned incense to them; when she decked herself with her earrings and her jewels, and went after her lovers, and forgat me, saith the LORD. 16.
Therefore, behold, I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderness, and speak comfortably unto her. 17. And I will give her her vineyards from thence, and the valley of Achor for a door of hope: and she shall sing there, as in there as she did in the days when she came out of Egypt, and the Valley of Sadness shall become the Door of Hope.

comfortably. "Tenderly" (AJ); lit. "to her heart." God would woo His people in their distress.

17. valley of Achor. The references is to Josh. VII, 26. Achor means, "troubling." The valley in which Achan was punished for his sin that brought down punishment upon Israel on entering the Holy Land, shall become a Door of Hope and shall bring deliverance. The punishment of exile would carry its hidden blessing: it would purge and purify the nation, and prove the door of hope leading to a better national future.

18–22. The Fruits of Repentance

When Israel returns unto God, heathenish worship will be done away with; there will be security from the ravages of beast and man; and the second betrothal of Israel unto God, being founded on righteousness and loyal love, will last forever.

18. Ishi. "My husband," with the underlying idea of affection and endearment.

no more Baali. Also a term for husband, lit. "my master"; but the word was debased through its use of heathen gods. Also it has the underlying idea of ownership, and corresponding subservience on the part of the wife. The bond between God and Israel is to be one of enduring love.

20. will I make a covenant. A reversal of v. 14. An assurance of the security awaiting both land and people under a striking poetical figure of immunity from hostile elements in Nature (cf. Isa. xi, 6–9), and from hostile man whose weapons of warfare would be broken for ever (cf. Isa. ii, 4).

she came up out of the land of Egypt. 18. And it shall be at that day, saith the LORD, that thou shalt call me Ishi; and shalt call me no

of the Baalim out of her mouth, and they shall no more be mentioned by their name. 20. And in that day will I make a covenant for them with the beasts of the field, and with the fowls of heaven, and with the creeping things of the ground: and I will break the bow and the sword and the battle out of the land, and will make them to lie down safely. 21. And I will betroth thee unto me for ever; yea, I will betroth thee unto me in righteousness, and in judgement, and in lovingkindness, and in mercies. 22. I will even betroth thee unto me in faithfulness:
and thou shalt know the LORD.

21. I will betroth thee unto me in righteousness . . . know the LORD. Betrothal was always accompanied by a gift. God will endow Israel, His bride, with righteousness, lovingkindness and faithfulness—that she had lost. The bride's gift will be "knowledge of God"—recognition that God is a God of righteousness, lovingkindness of faithfulness, and that in these things He delights. Such a betrothal is everlasting.

Judges XIII, 2–25

Samson lived in the days of the Judges, that dark age in Bible history when there was no king in Israel and each one did that which was right in his own eyes. Deborah and Gideon and Jephthah were foremost among those "Judges," i.e. champions who rescued their brethren from the slavery and degradation of the alien oppressor. And now the people had again been in bondage for over forty years to the Philistines, the most powerful and best organised of Israel's foes in the struggle for the possession of Canaan. They occupied the Maritime Plain and the hill-country between the sea and mountains of Judea, from Gaza northwards to Joppa. Unlike the Midianites and Moabites who merely came to plunder, the Philistines conquered in order to rule. They disarmed the Israelites, and reduced them to a condition of abject submission. They remained a mortal menace to Israel until their power was broken by David.

Samson, whose birth is foretold and announced in this Haftorah, brought a temporary deliverance from the Philistine yoke. But he was utterly alone, and he wrought his intermittent feats of private revenge and daring alone, supported neither by enthusiasm for the national cause nor by active help from his people. He was a man, strong physically but weak morally, who suffered shipwreck through following "the desire of the eyes," and permitting himself to

13 2. And there was a certain man of Zorah, of the family of the Danites, whose name was Manoah; and his wife was barren, and bare not.
3. And the angel of the LORD appeared unto the woman, and said unto her, Behold now, thou art barren, and bearest not: but thou shalt be ensnared by a heathen woman. His life came to nothing. Blinded by his enemies, he buried his enemies and himself in the ruins of the idolatrous temple in which the Philistines had gathered to feast over his miseries. "The story of Samson and his vain struggles fitly closes the period of the Judges, while presaging the more ominous times when the tribes will seek and find, in union under a central monarchy, their freedom and their future" (Garstang).

Samson was to be a Nazirite from birth. Hence the selection of this chapter as Haftorah for the Sedrah which brings the regulations governing the life of the Nazirite.

2. Zorah. Identified with the modern Sur'ah, about 17 miles to the west of Jerusalem. Is it without religious significance that Israel's new champion was to arise from Dan, at that time the least powerful of the tribes?

conceive, and bear a son. 4. Now therefore beware, I pray thee, and drink no wine nor strong drink, and eat not any unclean thing: 5. for, lo, thou shalt conceive, and bear a son; and no razor shall come upon his head: for the child shall be a Nazirite unto God from the womb: and he shall begin to save Israel out of the hand of the Philistines. 6. Then the woman came and told her husband, saying, A man of God came unto me, and his countenance was like the countenance of the angel of God, very terrible; and I asked him not whence he was, neither told he me his name: 7. but he said unto me, Behold, thou shalt conceive, and bear a son; and now drink no wine nor strong drink, and eat not any unclean thing: for the child shall be a Nazirite unto God from the womb to the day of his death. 8. Then Manoah intreated the LORD, and said, Oh Lord, I pray thee, let the man of God whom thou didst send come again unto us, and teach us what we shall do unto the child that shall be born. 9. And God hearkened to the voice of Manoah; and the angel of God came again unto the woman as she sat in the field: but Manoah her husband was not with her. 10. And the woman made haste, and ran, and told her husband, and said unto him, Behold, the man hath appeared unto me, that came unto me the other day. 11. And Manoah arose, and went after his wife, and came to the man, and said unto him, Art thou the man that spakest unto the woman? And he said, I

She may not eat of any thing that cometh of the grape-vine, neither let her drink wine or strong drink, nor eat any unclean thing; all that I commanded let her observe. 15. And Manoah said unto the angel of the LORD, I pray thee, let us detain thee, that we may make ready a kid for thee. 16. And the angel of the LORD said unto Manoah, Though thou detain me, I will not eat of thy bread: and if thou wilt make ready a burnt offering, thou must offer it unto the LORD. For Manoah knew not that he was the angel of the LORD. 17. And Manoah said unto the angel of the LORD, What is thy name, that when thy words come to pass we may do thee honour? 18. And the angel of the LORD said unto him, Wherefore askest thou after my name, seeing it is secret? 19. So Manoah took the kid with the meal offering, and offered it upon the rock unto the LORD: and the angel did wondrously, and Manoah and his wife looked on. 20. For it came to pass, when the flame went up toward heaven from off the altar, that the angel of the LORD ascended in the flame of the altar: and Manoah and his wife looked on; and they fell on their faces to the ground. 21. But the angel of the LORD did no more appear to Manoah or to his wife. Then Manoah knew that he was the angel of the LORD. 22. And Manoah said unto his wife, We shall surely die, because we have seen God. 23. But his wife said unto him, If the LORD were pleased to kill us, he would not have received a burnt offering and a meal offering at our hand, neither would he have shewed us all these things, nor would at this time have told us such things as these. 24. And the woman bare a son, and called his name Samson: and the child grew, and the LORD blessed him. 25. And the spirit of the LORD began to move him in Mahaneh-dan, between Zorah and Eshtaol.

25. to move him. i.e. to great and powerful action from time to time (Rashi). "The spirit of the LORD" is represented as an impulse stirring him from within. The Heb. root denotes the sounding of a bell. The story of Samson is full of sadness. It reveals a nation utterly deteriorated and disintegrated, and a man who through self-indulgence weakens and eventually loses his God-given power to deliver his people. The time was, alas, to come when Scripture would record of him, "he wist not that the LORD was departed from him" (XVI, 20).

Milton's Samson Agonistes is a wonderful commentary on his life. So is Watts' Samson. "Watts paints him in serious thoughtful mood, with a far-away look in his eyes that yet seem to see nothing, feeling how far short he has come of his great consecration; how the Spirit's power has been to him a gift endowing him at times with supernatural strength, but not a sanctifying grace always abiding in him and transforming his nature. And perhaps this was a more common mood with him, though he does not give way to it, than the joyousness which overflowed in mirthful tricks and plays upon words which is associated with him. His story, if we rightly consider it, was pathetic and tragic in the highest degree" (Macmillan).

BEHAALOSECHA

ZECHARIAH II, 14–IV, 7

Zechariah was one of the exiles who returned from Babylon when Cyrus promulgated his decree of Restoration in the year 537. He began his prophecies about 17 years afterwards. Disastrous seasons and the hostility of neighbours had discouraged the people, and all operations in connection with rebuilding the Temple had long ceased.

At this juncture the Prophets Haggai and Zechariah appeared, roused the people from their despondency and fired them to resume the work which had been suspended.

In our Haftorah, Zechariah assures the people of the Divine assistance in their work of rebuilding the Temple and of national rehabilitation. "Not by might, nor by

And the LORD shall

power, but by My spirit, saith the LORD of Hosts"—these words of Zechariah may be said to proclaim the lesson of all Jewish history; it is certainly the Prophetic teaching of the Maccabean Festival with which his name is linked in the synagogue service.

The Prophet's vision of the "candlestick all of gold" in chap. IV, with its teaching that God alone is the Source of all light, connects with the Sedrah which opens with the command concerning the Menorah.

14. I will dwell in the midst of thee. Through the visible symbol of the restored Temple.

17. be silent. All hostile efforts directed against the rebuilding of the Temple, and later any human opposition to God's ultimate purpose, shall fail.

Chapter III

Zechariah's messages are chiefly conveyed by means of visions. The object of the vivid visions, so dramatically described in the remainder of the Haftorah, is to banish the disturbing thoughts and fears which were depressing the people.

1. Joshua. The first high priest after the Restoration. He was prominently associated with Zerubbabel, the then Governor of Judah, in the erection of the Second Temple. Zerubbabel was the grandson of Jehoiachin, the last independent king of Judah, who had been carried awaycaptive to Babylon in the year 597.

the Adversary. Heb. "Satan." One who opposes with false accusations. Satan accuses Joshua and the people, of sinfulness, and that they are, therefore, unworthy to rebuild the Temple. Perhaps a similar feeling, arising out of their disappointments, depressed the people. But Satan is rebuked; and the returned exiles are assured that their fears are groundless.

inherit Judah as his portion in the holy land, and shall yet choose Jerusalem. 17. Be silent, all flesh, before the LORD: for he is waked up out of his holy habitation.

3 1. And he shewed me Joshua the high priest standing before the angel of the LORD, and the Adversary standing at his right hand to be his adversary. 2. And the LORD said unto Satan, The LORD rebuke thee, O Adversary; yea, the LORD that hath chosen Jerusalem rebuke thee: is not this a brand plucked out of the fire? 3. Now Joshua was clothed with filthy garments, and stood before the angel. 4. And he answered and spake unto those that stood before him, saying, Take the filthy garments from off him.
And unto him he said, Behold, I have caused thine iniquity to pass from thee, and I will clothe thee with rich apparel. 5. And I said, Let them set a fair mitre upon his head. So they set a fair mitre upon his head, and clothed

6. protested. i.e. solemnly assured.

men which are a sign. Of God's favour. The restored priesthood is a pledge of the coming of the Messianic Kingdom. Humble and modest as were the beginnings of the Temple, they were portents which contained within them the pledge of the fulfilment of the complete Redemption.

the Branch. Or, " the Shoot." According to Rashi, Zechariah here means Zerubbabel, who as the civic leader will complete, with Joshua as the spiritual leader, the rehabilitated state. A comparison with vi, 12 supports this interpretation.

9. for behold the stone. The coping-stone of the Temple (see last verse of the Haftorah, " head stone ") which in this vision is set before Joshua to symbolise the certainty of the rebuilding.

unto Joshua, saying, 7. Thus saith the LORD of hosts: If thou wilt walk in my ways, and if thou wilt keep my charge, then thou also shalt judge my house, and shalt also keep my courts, and I will give thee a place of access among these that stand by. 8. Hear now, O Joshua the high priest, thou and thy fellows that sit for, behold, I will bring forth my servant the Branch. 9. For behold, the stone that I have set before Joshua; upon one stone are seven saith the LORD of hosts, and I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day. 10. In that day, saith the LORD of hosts, shall ye call every man his neighbour under the vine and under the fig tree.

upon one stone are seven eyes. i.e. upon every stone in the Temple there shall be "seven eyes," conveying the idea of the very special watchfulness and care that God will exercise over His house (Kimchi).

The same commentator quotes the interesting opinion of his father that in the number "seven" we may see a reference to the seven great leaders of the period to whom the Jewish rebirth was due: Joshua, Ezra, Nehemiah, Zerubbabel, Haggai, Zechariah and Malachi.

I will engrave the graving thereof. As the engraving completes and beautifies a work, so God assures the people that the Temple will be completed to every detail (Kimchi).

I will remove the iniquity of that land. Sin, the chief cause of sorrow and suffering, will be removed with the coming of the new Temple.

10. shall ye call. i.e. invite. A picture of general felicity and security.

Another vision. The Prophet's thoughts now turn to Zerubbabel, and the need to encourage him in his work. He would further enforce the lesson that God alone is the source of all Light, as well as power, to rulers and people alike.

6. this is the word. i.e. the message of the Lord to Zerubbabel. As the lights are controlled by an unseen agency, so behind Zerubbabel and his allotted work is the invisible spirit and help of God. All the difficulties in the way will disappear ; and, in spite of the hostility and mockings of the people who have hitherto opposed, he will complete the building of the Temple, " not by might, nor by power, but by My spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."

answered and spake to the angel that talked with me, saying, What are these, my lord? 5. Then unto me, Knowest thou not what these be?

And I said, No, my lord. 6. Then he answered and spake unto me, saying, This is the word of the LORD unto Zerubbabel, saying, Not by might,

of hosts. 7. Who art thou, O great mountain?
before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain: and he shall bring forth the head stone with shoutings of Grace, grace, unto it.

SHELACH LECHA

Joshua II, 1–24

The Sedrah recounts the story of the twelve Spies sent by Moses to report on Canaan, Joshua himself being one of their number : the Haftorah tells us of the two men sent by Joshua on a similar errand to Jericho. But whereas the report of the former, with its fears and exaggerations, was followed by the tragic consequences of unbelief; the latter, with their inspiring declaration, " The Lord hath delivered into our hands all the land," thrilled the people with the assurance of victory that awaited them.

The Book of Joshua records the conquest of Canaan by Israel, the settlement of the Israelite tribes in the land, and the beginning of their consolidation into a nation. Joshua himself is one of the outstanding characters in Scripture; the faithful servant, the victorious soldier, the intrepid general, the wise ruler; and the man of deep faith and humility—his last addresses reviewing the past do not contain a word of his own achievements. The final words of his farewell exhortation to his people to stand firm in their allegiance to God are among the great utterances of history : " Choose you this day whom you will serve—but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord " (Joshua xxiv, 15).

secretly. i.e. unbeknown to the children of Israel, as Joshua fears a possible repetition of what took place in the Wilderness. It cannot refer to the inhabitants of Jericho; otherwise there was no need for Scripture to state it (Ehrlich). The Heb. root חרש also denotes earthenware; hence the Midrash paraphrases, "disguised as potters, or sellers of earthenware."

and Jericho. i.e. and particularly Jericho.

Jericho. Jericho was at least 1,000 years old when the Israelites prepared to attack this city that barred their route to the whole Western plateau. It was the gateway to the Promised Land, and its capture was of the greatest importance to the Israelites. Garstang's excavations in 1931 on the site of ancient Jericho make an epoch in Biblical studies. Among other results, he has now definitely fixed the date of the capture of Jericho by Joshua as 1407, and therefore that of the Exodus as 1447 B.C.E.

an harlot. Better, an innkeeper, or purveyor of food, from זון "to provide" (Targum, Rashi, Kimchi). Women were frequently innkeepers in ancient Egypt and Greece.

Rahab. According to Rabbinical tradition, she became a sincere convert to the religion of Israel after the fall of Jericho.

came men in hither to-night of the children of Israel to search out the land. 3. And the king of Jericho sent unto Rahab, saying, Bring forth the men that are come to thee, which are entered into thine house : for they be come to search out all the land. 4. And the woman took the two men, and hid them ; and she said, Yea, the men came unto me, but I wist not whence they were : 5. and it came to pass about the time of the shutting of the gate, when it was dark, that the men went out : whither the men went I wot not : pursue after them quickly ; for ye shall overtake them.
6. But she had brought them up to the roof, and hid them with the stalks of the flax, which she had laid in order upon the roof. 7. And the men pursued after them the way to Jordan unto the fords : and as soon as they which pursued after them were gone out, they shut the gate.

This was partly due to the fact that it had only one gate.

9. your terror is fallen upon us. "The presence of the host of the Israelites on the opposite bank, and the known tendency of nomads to push into the country when opportunity afforded, must have filled the king and people of Jericho with misgiving and perplexity" (Garstang).

KORACH

I Samuel XI, 14—XII, 22

In the Sedrah, Korah and his associates complained unjustly of the rule of Moses : in the Haftorah, the people displayed ingratitude towards their devoted leader, Samuel, and clamoured for a king to take his place. Both Moses and Samuel protest their utter disinterestedness in the service of the people.

Samuel was the last and greatest of the Judges. The task he was called upon to accomplish was one of extraordinary difficulty. Moses created the nation : it had disintegrated in the wild, anarchic times of the Judges. Samuel had to recreate it, and rebuild it out of ruins. He found a loosely-knit body of tribes and left them a united people. Although himself opposed to monarchy, he made a national monarchy possible. But at the foundation of it, he laid firmly the Biblical conception of the responsibility of the ruler to God. This is one of the main differences between Israel and the other Eastern nations of antiquity. Whereas in Babylon, e.g., a limited monarchy would have been deemed a contradiction in terms, in Israel it is the people that is in possession of sovereign rights, and the king is under the law. The Jewish king was bound to respect the liberty, honour, and the property of his subjects, and his powers were strictly limited by the fundamental laws of the Torah (Deut. xvii, 10–20). Prophets, psalmists and sages all conceived of the king as a shepherd of his people, whose sceptre should be a sceptre of peace, pity and righteousness.

14–15. Recognising Saul as King

14. Gilgal. Near Jericho. It already had sacred associations. It was the place of Israel's first encampment on crossing into the Holy Land under Joshua. "Its remoteness from the Philistines made it suitable for an act which was obviously a step towards throwing off their yoke" (Kirkpatrick).

to renew the kingdom there. This sacred place Samuel chose for the solemn consecration of Saul. Saul had proved his worthiness for the kingship, and the people were unanimous in accepting him as their ruler. They solemnly ratified the election by offering public sacrifices to God.

15. peace offerings. Because it was also a national rejoicing over the successful campaign waged by the chosen king; see the first portion of this same chapter, v. 1–13.

Chapter XII. Samuel's Farewell Address

Samuel, though he was still to retain his authority as Prophet, now resigned his office as Judge, and in doing so delivers a Farewell Address. The aged Prophet, challenges the assembled people to impeach his official integrity; upbraids them with unbelief and ingratitude in demanding a king; and ends by consoling the people that God will not abandon Israel for His great Name's sake.

2. I am old and grayheaded. Having aged prematurely in the service of Israel. He was then only about 50 years old.

from my youth. Samuel's public life commenced from the time when as a child he had ministered to Eli in the Tabernacle; I Sam. I-III.

12 1. And Samuel said unto all Israel, Behold, I have hearkened unto your voice in all that ye said unto me, and have made a king over you.
2. And now, behold, the king walketh before you:
and I am old and grayheaded; and, behold, my sons are with you: and I have walked before you from my youth unto this day. 3. Here I am: witness against me before the LORD, and before his anointed: whose ox have I taken?
or whose ass have I taken? or whom have I defrauded? whom have I oppressed? or of whose hand have I taken a bribe to blind mine eyes therewith? and I will restore it you. 4.
And they said, Thou hast not defrauded us,
nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken aught
of any man's hand. 5. And he said unto them,
The LORD is witness against you, and his anointed is witness this day, that ye have not found aught
in my hand. And they said, He is witness.
6. And Samuel said unto the people, It is the LORD that appointed Moses and Aaron, and that brought your fathers up out of the land to blind mine eyes. To Justice.

5. and they said. The Heb. is in the singular, emphasising the unanimity of the people's endorsement. Hence, the tradition that a Heavenly Voice, Bath Kol, uttered these words, "He, the LORD, is witness to Samuel's purity in regard to all matters hidden from man, even as you are testifying to his purity in regard to known things."

Furthermore, his term of office being ended, Samuel is standing as it were outside the era of the Judges and reviews it as a whole.

unto me, Nay, but a king shall reign over us: when the LORD your God was your king. 13. Now therefore behold the king whom ye have chosen, and whom ye have asked for: and, behold, the LORD hath set a king over you. 14. If ye will fear the LORD, and serve him, and hearken unto his voice, and not rebel against the commandment of the LORD, and both ye and also the king that reigneth over you be followers of the LORD your God, well: 15. but if ye will not hearken unto the voice of the LORD, but rebel against the commandment of the LORD, then shall the hand of the LORD be against you, as it was against your fathers. 16. Now therefore stand still and see this great thing, which the LORD will do before your eyes. 17. Is it not wheat harvest to-day? I will call unto the LORD, that he may send thunder and rain; and ye shall know and see that your wickedness is great, which ye have done in the sight of the LORD, in asking you a king. 18. So Samuel called unto the LORD; and the LORD sent thunder and rain that day: and all the people greatly feared the LORD and Samuel. 19. And all the people said unto Samuel, Pray for thy servants unto the LORD thy God, that we die not: for we have added unto all our sins this evil, to ask us a king. 20. And Samuel said unto the people, Fear not: ye have indeed done all this evil: yet turn not aside from follow-visible king, whereas their trust should be complete in God. The danger was that now they would put their trust still less in God.

CHUKKAS

Judges XI, 1–33

The Haftorah is again from the Book of Judges, which describes the days of lawlessness in Israel; the frequent lapses into the heathenism and immorality of the neighbouring nations; the dire calamities that followed; and the new Judge and Deliverer who would arise and save Israel from bondage and the enemy. For eighteen years Israel had now groaned under the cruel yoke of the Ammonites (1128–1110 B.C.E.). Who and where is the man capable of leading his brethren against the Ammonites? Here the Haftorah opens. It tells the story of Jephthah, the rugged and ruthless warrior but noble patriot and tender-hearted father, whose

For the LORD will not forsake his people for his great name's sake: because it hath pleased the LORD to make you a people unto himself.

JUDGES XI, 1–33

11 1. Now Jephthah the Gileadite was a mighty man of valour, and he was the son of an harlot:

victory over the enemy was shadowed by a terrible sorrow.

The Sedrah gives the account of Israel's clash with the Amorites. The Northern part of the Amorite kingdom had formerly, it is assumed, belonged to Ammon. This forms the connection between the Sedrah and Haftorah.

1–3. JEPHTHAH'S ANTECEDENTS

1. an harlot. Or, "innkeeper" (Targum Jonathan); or, "concubine" (Kimchi). In all probability the Heb. word is here used in its usual meaning. The Bible speaks the naked truth; it conceals nothing, whether concerning the individual or the nation. Here it teaches that a man of low, nay infamous, origin, whom his brothers despised, may yet be the destined instrument of deliverance for his people. Jephthah was the first Israelite leader to arise in Transjordania. Two centuries later, another leader, immeasurably the spiritual superior to Jephthah, namely, Elijah the Prophet, also came from the same region.

and Gilead begat Jephthah. 2. And Gilead's wife bare him sons; and when his wife's sons grew up, they drave out Jephthah, and said unto him, Thou shalt not inherit in our father's house; for thou art the son of another woman. 3. Then Jephthah fled from his brethren, and dwelt in the land of Tob: and there were gathered vain fellows to Jephthah, and they went out with him.

4. And it came to pass after a while, that the children of Ammon made war against Israel. 5. And it was so, that when the children of Ammon made war against Israel, the elders of Gilead went to fetch Jephthah out of the land of Tob: 6. and they said unto Jephthah, Come and be our chief, that we may fight with the children of Ammon. 7. And Jephthah said unto the elders of Gilead, Did not ye hate me, and drive me out of my father's house? and why are ye come unto me now when ye are in distress? 8. And the elders of Gilead said unto Jephthah, Therefore are we turned again to thee now, that thou mayest go with us, and fight with the children of Ammon, and thou shalt be our head over all the inhabitants of Gilead.

6. be our chief. The national emergency needed an intrepid hero, and the thoughts of men turned instinctively to Jephthah whose reputation as a military leader was already established.

12–27. JEPHTHAH'S NEGOTIATIONS

Before taking the field, Jephthah seeks by diplomatic means, to arrive at a peaceable settlement. The Ammonite king contends that the Israelites took away his land when they came out of Egypt.

13. Arnon . . . Jabbok. "The district between the two rivers naturally lay exposed to the incursions of the Ammonites, who lived to the east of it (Num. XXI, 24); but there is no support for the Ammonites' claim to regard it

9. And Jephthah said unto the elders of Gilead, If ye bring me home again to fight with the children of Ammon, and the LORD deliver them before me, shall I be your head? 10. And the elders of Gilead said unto Jephthah, The LORD shall be witness between us; surely according to thy word so will we do. 11. Then Jephthah went with the elders of Gilead, and the people made him head and chief over them: and Jephthah spake all his words before the LORD in Mizpah.

12. And Jephthah sent messengers unto the king of the children of Ammon, saying, What hast thou to do with me, that thou art come unto me to fight against my land? 13. And the king of the children of Ammon answered unto the messengers of Jephthah, Because Israel took away my land, when he came up out of Egypt, from Arnon even unto Jabbok, and unto Jordan: now therefore restore those lands again peaceably. 14. And Jephthah sent messengers again unto the king of the children of Ammon: 15. and he said unto him, Thus saith Jephthah: Israel took not away the land of Moab, nor the land of the 15–22. Jephthah proves that the Israelites in the wilderness made a wide detour to avoid the territory of the kinsmen of the Ammonites, the Moabites, who were then in occupation of the land in dispute. When the Israelites took the land, it belonged neither to Moab or Ammon but to their Amorite conquerors; see Num. XX–XXI.

And Israel sent messengers unto Sihon king of the Amorites, the king of Heshbon; and Israel said unto him, Let us pass, we pray thee, through thy land unto my place. 20. But Sihon trusted not Israel to pass through his border: but Sihon gathered all his people together, and pitched in Jahaz, and fought against Israel. 21. And the LORD, the God of Israel, delivered Sihon and all his people into the hand of Israel, and they smote them: so Israel possessed all the land of the Amorites, the inhabitants of that country. 22. And they possessed all the border of the Amorites, from Arnon even unto Jabbok, and from the wilderness even unto Jordan. 23. So now the LORD, the God of Israel, hath dispossessed the Amorites from before his people Israel, and shouldest thou possess them? 24. 30–31. Jephthah's Vow

31. and I will offer it up . . burnt offering. Kimchi, Ralbag and Abarbanel maintain that the " and " before I will offer it should be rendered " or," and the phrase read : " It shall be the Lord's, or I will offer it up as a burnt offering " ; i.e. if it be an object permitted for sacrifice I will offer it ; otherwise, it shall be dedicated, in some other way, to the Lord. (Support for this rendering is given in the verse, " Whoso smiteth his father and mother," Exod. xxi, 15, where the obvious meaning is, " Whoso smiteth his father or his mother). There was thus an implicit reservation in the vow to offer the first living object that met him, namely, " if it be proper for such purpose." Jephthah therefore did not offer her up as a burnt-offering, but " he made a house for her and brought her into it, and she was there separated from mankind and from the ways of the world " (Kimchi).

Whatever interpretation we place upon the tragedy of Jephthah's daughter, his strange unhallowed vow would have been impossible under settled religious conditions, such as preceded and followed the period of the Judges. Legend represents the daughter seeking to prove to her father that the Torah speaks only of animal sacrifice, never of human sacrifices. In vain she cited the example of Jacob, who had vowed to give God a tenth of all his possessions, and yet did not attempt to sacrifice any of his sons. The Rabbis severely blame Jephthah for not having his entirely invalid vow " annulled " (see Additional Note on Num. xxx). Phinehas the High Priest—whom the Rabbis assume was still living at the time—could have absolved him from his criminal vow; and but for the rivalry between them would have done so. Phinehas said: "I, the High Priest, should go to that ignoramus! Let him come to me." And Jephthah said: "I, the Prince of the land, should humiliate myself before one of my subjects!" Both were overtaken by punishment. Jephthah died a horrible death. And as for Phinehas, the Holy Spirit departed from him. The condemnation of Jephthah's vow by the Rabbis has been re-echoed in many tongues and many lands. A thousand years later, Dante wrote:

> As Jephthah once, blindly to execute a rash resolve.
> Better a man should say, I have done wrong,
> Than keeping an ill vow, he should do worse."

Micah V, 7—VI, 8

The Book of Micha from which this Haftorah is taken is one of the so-called Minor Prophets or, more appropriately, the Twelve Prophets ((תרי עשר)), which at an early date were counted as one book among the twenty-four of Holy Writ. Micah (750-690 B.C.E.) was a contemporary of Isaiah. He was village-born, and spoke as one of the oppressed peasantry, who were ground down by numerous exactions and oppressive treatment on the part of the grandees. He denounced the luxury and degeneracy of city-life, the land-grabbing of the social leaders and the venality of the religious teachers. The chief cities of Judah and Israel that should have been centres of true religion and righteousness, were in his eyes fountains of irreligion and iniquity. Therefore, this Prophet of the poor proclaimed that, even as the Northern Kingdom fell to the Assyrian, Jerusalem would share the same fate. Nevertheless Micah does not doubt Israel's mission to humanity ; and, like Isaiah, he foresees the time when the nations shall beat their swords into ploughshares and learn war no more. He has also given the world the noblest definition of true religion : " What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God."

The reference in the Haftorah to Balaam who is the outstanding figure of the Sedrah, provides the connection between the two.

Chapter VI

The section following is regarded as dating from the reign of king Manasseh—a period of appalling apostasy, when gruesome heathen rites were followed by prince and people alike. The Prophet enters into an argument with his countrymen, and seeks to wean them from their dreadful delusions as to what constitutes religion and goodness. v. 8 "He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God." has been called the most important utterance in the Prophetic literature. It is in fact an epitome of the whole of Scripture. "In opposition to the

the LORD, that I will cut off thy horses out of the midst of thee, and will destroy thy chariots:

will throw down all thy strong holds: 11. and I will cut off witchcrafts out of thine hand;
and thou shalt have no more soothsayers: 12.
and I will cut off thy graven images and thy pillars out of the midst of thee; and thou shalt no more worship the work of thine hands. 13.
And I will pluck up thine Asherim out of the midst of thee: and I will destroy thy enemies.
14. And I will execute vengeance in anger and fury upon the nations which hearkened not.

most awful mockery of religion is set the purest expression of it, and out of the corruption of the age there shines like a star the purest light of prophecy" (Montefiore).

Continuing the retrospect of great Divine mercies, Shittim was the last halting-place in the wilderness, Gilgal their first station in the Promised Land. At Shittim the people sinned grievously; nevertheless, God's mercy did not weaken, but helped them to cross Jordan and enter Canaan.

6. wherewith shall I come before the LORD. Impressed by these righteous and merciful acts of God, the people anxiously turn to the Prophet with the question "What does God really require of us? We are willing to give everything—bullocks without number, oil in vast quantities, yea, our children." But even in their search for God, the penitent people show their utter lack of understanding as to what is pleasing in God's sight.

7 הֲיִרְצֶה יְהוָה בְּאַלְפֵי אֵילִים בְּרִבְבוֹת נַחֲלֵי־שָׁמֶן הַאֶתֵּן

the fruit of my body. i.e. my children. "Can I please God by even sacrificing my children?" Almost a rhetorical question; for human sacrifice was a horrible custom of the Canaanites. Israel's teachers did not rest till the whole people shared their horror of this hideous savage abomination.

8. The Whole Duty of Man

Over against their fantastic and gruesome ways of propitiating God, the Prophet solemnly states the Divine and tender simplicities of God's demands.

8. he hath shewed thee. Better, it hath been told thee (AJ). It is no new revelation which he—the Prophet—is announcing; he is merely echoing and restating the message of Abraham, Moses, Samuel and Elijah.

O man. Heb. adam. The teachings of true religion are of universal appeal, and extend to all the children of men.

Ehrlich points that adam means "man," and not "O man," as the vocative would have to be ha-adam. Consequently, he translates the Prophet's answer to the agonising cry of the benighted worshipper who asks: "Shall I offer my child as a sacrifice?" as follows: "Man hath told thee that this is good: but what does the LORD require of thee? Nothing but to do justly, to love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God."

to do justly. lit. "to execute justice." Justice implies reverence for the personality of every human being as the possessor, by virtue of his humanity, of inalienable rights to life, honour and the fruit of his toil. The whole machinery of the state must be set in motion to protect these inalienable human rights against outrage and injustice. It is heinous sin for any individual by his action to injure the life, honour and possessions of his fellow-man.

calves of a year old? 7. Will the LORD be pleased with thousands of rams, or with ten thousands of rivers of oil? shall I give my first-born for my transgression, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul? 8. He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the LORD require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?

to love mercy. Heb. chesed, means kindness to the lowly, needy and miserable, as shown in all charitable acts, especially such as go with personal service. And man is "to love mercy." "In regard to justice, it is sufficient to carry out its behests; but in regard to mercy, the deed alone is insufficient, even when it is the outcome of a clear sense of duty. Love is an essential accompaniment of every deed of mercy" (Hermann Cohen). The Rabbis translate "to love mercy" by גמילות חסדים—"the bestowal of lovingkindnesses"; i.e. clothing the naked, nursing the sick, comforting those that mourn, burying the dead. When the Temple fell, Johanan ben Zakkai declared:—"We have another means of expiation, equally efficacious, left us; namely, גמילות חסדים, the bestowal of disinterested deeds of lovingkindness upon our fellow-men." The Rabbis imbued the generations in Israel with a veritable passion for pity; and they denied that anyone who was devoid of pity could be a true descendant of Abraham.

to walk humbly with thy God. In fellowship and communion with God; not ostentatiously, but with inward devotion and noiseless acts of love (Margolis). Rabbi Phinehas ben Yair, said, "Holiness leads to humility; humility leads to the fear of sin; fear of sin leads to saintliness; saintliness leads to the Holy Spirit." The insistence on humility distinguishes Jewish from Greek ethics. "Everything heroic in man is insignificant and perishable, and all his wisdom and virtue unable to stand the crucial test, unless they are the fruits of humility. In this there is no exception—neither for any man, any people, or any age" (Hermann Cohen).

In the light of the above interpretation of v. 8, the cardinal virtues of human life are Justice, Mercy and Humility. It is questionable, however, whether to walk humbly is the correct translation of the Heb. הצנע לכת. A better and higher sense is obtained if we connect it with the later Hebrew צניעות, which denotes modesty, decency, chastity, personal holiness, purity ; and translate the third portion of the Prophet's answer to walk in purity with thy God. The pillars of Religion are accordingly Justice, Mercy and Purity.

"Micah's ideal is not a minimum of religion,it is a maximum. He provides the great standards by which we may test our acting, our thinking, our religious practice. And this is why Micah's pronouncement has about it an air of finality. The Prophet seems to feel that what he is saying is an eternal truth ; we seem to feel it as we read it or we hear it read. Men may come and go, but Micah's ideal must live for ever " (Singer).

people had been led astray to the worship of Baal. Ahab was a generous ruler, but weak-willed and dominated by his Phoenician wife who had pursued the prophets of God with murderous cruelty. It was high treason to proclaim the God of Israel. Against this dark setting, the figure of Elijah stands out in all its greatness. He meets and confronts the king and queen, and fearlessly pronounces the doom that will follow on their apostasy and outrage of justice. On Mount Carmel, though he is alone and defenceless, his Titanic personality overawes the multitude. He brings the people back to God in an overwhelming act of surrender. Their confession, Adonay, hu haelohim, "The Lord, He is God," has become, alongside the declaration of the Unity, Israel's watchword. The events of the Haftorah follow immediately after that historic scene on Mount Carmel.

Elijah no doubt believed that the battle for truth had been fought and won, and that his task was virtually accomplished. But his triumph was brief. Jezebel lost no time in informing him that she was neither converted not dismayed, and that she would take her revenge on Elijah.

take away my life. Reaction following the great scene on Mount Carmel, and disappointment at its apparent failure, induced a mood of crushing despondency. A sense of the dreariness of a wasted life overspread his soul. "Like a warrior who has waged all day an unequal strife and at the last received a mortal stroke, he retires from the field to die alone; and when the languor is falling on him, he says, "Now, O Lord, take away my life" (Davidson).

8. Horeb. i.e. Sinai, where the Law was given. Here, in solitary communion with God at the most sacred place in history, he would wait for some message from the God of Israel.

9. unto a cave. lit. "into the cave"; i.e. the cleft of rock in which Moses was placed when God passed by (Kimchi). The parallel between Moses and Elijah is very real. These two names stand out pre-eminently in Israel's story; both of them endowed above all other men with the power of the Spirit and Titanic force of character.

what doest thou here, Elijah? Thy place is not here in the silent empty wilderness, but among men to fight evil and encourage the faithful.

10. jealous. Zealous.

I only, am left. As is more clear below in v. 18, Elijah's mood of despondency and despair has led him to exaggerate the darkness of the picture, and to be unjust to the 7,000 men in Israel who had not bent the knee to Baal.

11–14. THE MANIFESTATION OF THE DIVINE PRESENCE

eat and drink, and went in the strength of that meat forty days and forty nights unto Horeb the mount of God. 9. And he came thither unto a cave, and lodged there; and, behold, the word of the LORD came to him, and he said unto him, What doest thou here, Elijah? 10. And he said, I have been very jealous for the LORD, the God of hosts; for the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword: and I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life, to take it away. 11. And he said, Go forth, and stand upon the mount before the LORD. And, behold, the LORD passed by, and a great and strong wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks before the LORD; but the LORD was not in the wind: and after the wind an earthquake; but the LORD was not in the earthquake: 12. and after the earthquake a fire; but the LORD was not in the fire: and after the fire a still small voice.

12. a still small voice. Or, "a sound of gentle stillness." The wind, fire and earthquake are often spoken of as heralds of God (Exod. XIX, 18, Psalms XVIII, 7–13); and while they are His agents and subservient to His will, they do not disclose Him so perfectly as the calm which follows the storm. The vision is in the nature of rebuke to the impetuosity of Elijah, and the passion of despair that brought him to this place. He must not imagine that good is vanquished, because evil is mighty, loud, and triumphant. And evil cannot most successfully be overcome by storm and fire. Rather is the Spirit of God manifested, and the purpose of God furthered, in that which is represented by the still small voice; i.e. the gentle operation of spiritual forces, the calmness and patience of quiet and indomitable faith, and the persistent work which is the fruit of that patience and faith.

To later generations, Elijah was not the Prophet of storm and fire, but the healer and helper, the reconciler and peace-bringer. "He shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers," said Malachi. "Elijah will come to bring agreement where there is matter for dispute: to make peace in the world" (Mishna).

13. wrapped his face in his mantle. It is the "still small voice" that brings home to the Prophet the sense of the Presence of God.

what doest thou here? Elijah repeats his former reply to this question, and it would appear that his zealous anger for the sins of Israel has prevented him realising the full import of the vision as above explained (Ralbag).

15–21. Elijah's New Mission

15. go, return on thy way. Elijah had declared that his life was of no further use. He is shewn that there is still work for him to do. He is sent on three important missions: to anoint Hazael king over Syria; to anoint Jehu king

13. And it was so, when Elijah heard it, that he wrapped his face in his mantle, and went out, and stood in the entering in of the cave. And, behold, there came a voice unto him, and said, What doest thou here, Elijah? 14. And he said, I have been very jealous for the LORD, the God of hosts; for the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword; and I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life, to take it away. 15. And the LORD said unto him, Go, return on thy way to the wilderness of Damascus: and when thou comest, thou shalt anoint Hazael to be king over Syria: 16. and Jehu the son of Nimshi shalt thou anoint to be king over Israel: and Elisha the son of Shaphat of Abel-meholah shalt thou anoint to be prophet in thy room. 17. And it shall come to pass, that him that escapeth from the sword of Hazael shall Jehu slay: and him that escapeth from the sword of Jehu shall Elisha slay. 18. Yet will I leave me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth which over Israel through the agency of Elisha; and to appoint Elisha as his successor.

18. seven thousand . . . have not bowed the knee to Baal. Elijah had overlooked the "righteous remnant" in Israel. That there is always a faithful minority—shear yashuv—forms one of the characteristic teachings of Isaiah. It is the heartening of this faithful minority, and, through his life and activity, ensuring its persistence and growth, that constitutes Elijah's most lasting achievement for his times as well as for all future ages.

MATTOS

Jeremiah I–II, 3

This is the first of the three "Haftorahs of Rebuke" that precede the Ninth of Ab, the anniversary of the Destruction of Jerusalem.

Jeremiah was born of a priestly family about the year 650 B.C.E. His Prophetic call came to him in the reign of Josiah, king of Judah, in the year 626. He witnessed the fall of Nineveh and the annihilation of the Assyrian Empire in 606; the death of Josiah, Judah's righteous king, in 605; and lived through the two sieges of Jerusalem in 597 and 586, with the attendant destruction of the Jewish state and the consequent transportation of the greater portion of his people to "the rivers of Babylon." We last hear of him in Egypt, carried thither by fugitive Judeans; and legend relates that he died a martyr's death at the hands of his brethren. Whatever basis there may be for this legend, it is but too true that Jeremiah the Prophet lived a martyr's life. For the greater part of his career, he was one man against the whole nation. By nature timid and shrinking, he proclaimed the Divine message fearlessly to ruler, noble, priest and people alike.

Jeremiah is the spiritual heir of the great Prophets that preceded him. He combines the tenderness of Hosea, the fearlessness of Amos, and the stern majesty of Isaiah. Like them, he is first of all a preacher of repentance; threatening judgement and, at the same time, holding out the promise of restoration. But even in his darkest moments, when he utterly despairs of the future of Jewish state, his faith and trust in God do not forsake him. "Though all be lost," he seems to say to Israel, "turn to God in perfect trust, call Him your Father, and His love will regenerate you." To Jeremiah, Religion is an inward thing, a personal relation between the individual and his Maker, a relation that is untouched by national prosperity and can only be deepened by national ruin. "The history of Israel begins with the migration of Abraham from the Euphrates to the Jordan; its classical period closes with the compulsory migration of the exiles from the Jordan back to the Euphrates. If Israel had been merely a race like others it would never have survived this fearful catastrophe, and would have disappeared in the Babylonian exile" (Cornill). That it did not so disappear was due to the activity of two men—Jeremiah and his disciple Ezekiel. Jeremiah's message to his despairing brethren in Babylon, "Seek the welfare of the city wherein ye dwell, and pray unto the Lord for it: for in its welfare shall be your peace," has been of incalculable influence in the civic life of all Jews throughout the world.

2. Josiah. He reigned from 626–605. He put down the idolatries, abominations and immoralities that had been introduced by Manasseh, and led a great religious revival in Israel. Unfortunately Judah's position between two great empires, Egypt and Babylon, was a most precarious one. Josiah took the side of Babylon, and was slain in the battle of Megiddo by Pharaoh Necho. Jeremiah and the whole people mourned for him "as one mourneth for an only son."

Zedekiah. The youngest son of Josiah, and the last king of Judah. He was well-disposed, but weak and devoid of any true religious zeal. In the eleventh year of his reign, Jerusalem was taken and burned by the Babylonians. He was blinded, taken to Babylon, and died there in prison.

His choice for his great work was no haphazard selection. God had planned his life, even before he was born. The riddle and purpose of existence were thus solved for Jeremiah" (Duhm).

his reign. 3. It came also in the days of Jehoi-

the end of the eleventh year of Zedekiah the away of Jerusalem captive in the fifth month.

4. Now the word of the LORD came unto me,

the womb I sanctified thee; I have appointed thee a prophet unto the nations. 6. Then said
I, Ah, Lord GOD! behold, I cannot speak: for
I am a child. 7. But the LORD said unto me, Say not, I am a child: for on whatsoever errand
I shall send thee thou shalt go, and whatsoever
I shall command thee thou shalt speak. 8. Be not afraid because of them: for I am with thee to deliver thee, saith the LORD. 9. Then the politics and its career was inextricably bound up with Assyria, Babylon and Egypt (Peake).

6. I am a child. Not necessarily in years. The Heb. word has a wider sense, indicating a child in fitness or experience. These words express the shrinking self-distrust of a sensitive nature, and the humility that characterises truly great minds; cf. the reply of Moses in the Sedrah, IV, 10.

7. say not. Whatever his limitations may be, they matter not, for he is to be God's messenger; and, whatever opposition or even persecution may be his lot, he would be Divinely supported.

9. touched my mouth. Symbolic of Divine inspiration. The message he would bring would not be his message, but the message of God.

to plant. Jeremiah's activity would be destructive, but only to prepare the way for the work of restoration.

11, 12. The Symbol of the Almond Tree

11. an almond tree. Heb. shaked, and the Heb. for "watching" is shoked. There is more than a play on words here. The almond tree is so named in Hebrew, because, blossoming early in January, it is the first to awake from winter's sleep. On seeing it, the thought flashes across the Prophet's mind that God is awake and watches over His word to fulfil it, without delay. This assurance at the outset of his career, that God would surely execute His purpose, was to steady him, when in the course of his ministry he found himself doomed again and again to disappointment.

13–16. The Symbol of the Caldron

14. out of the north. From the North had come the

I have this day set thee over the nations and

11. Moreover the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, Jeremiah, what seest thou? And I said, I see a rod of an almond tree. 12. Then said the LORD unto me, Thou hast well seen: for I watch over my word to perform it. 13. And the word of the LORD came unto me the second time, saying, What seest thou? And I said, I see a seething caldron; and the face thereof is from the north. 14. Then the LORD said unto me, Out of the north evil shall break forth upon all the inhabitants of the land. 15. For, lo, I will call all the families of the kingdoms of the north, saith the LORD; and they shall come, and they shall set every one his throne at the entering of the gates of Jerusalem, and against all the walls thereof round about, and against all the cities of Judah. 16. And I will utter my judgements against

15. shall set every one his throne. The neighbourhood of the city gate was the place where trials were ordinarily held. Here the rulers of the invading army will sit in judgement on the conquered people. This was literally fulfilled; see Jer. XXXIX, 3.

17–19. Encouragement to Jeremiah

17. gird up thy loins. Prepare thyself for a strenuous task.

lest I dismay thee before them. If thou fearest them, thou wilt fail before them (Kimchi). If he delivers his stern message in fear and trusting, the confidence of those opposed to him would be strengthened, and there would be no hope of his words finding credence. Jeremiah can only conquer if he does not for one moment lose courage –a warning needed by the Prophet whose life would be full of anguish and martyrdom.

18. the people of the land. Heb. am ha-aretz ; probably the National Assembly—" the ancient Hebrew Parliament " (Sulzberger) ; see Genesis, p. 192.

19. shall not prevail. i.e. shall not finally prevail (Streane). Before the Prophet's death, his warnings would be justified, and his cause vindicated.

Chapter II

1–3. The opening verses of the first prophecy of Jeremiah.

unto other gods, and worshipped the works of their own hands. 17. Thou therefore gird up thy loins, and arise, and speak unto them all that I command thee: be not dismayed at them, lest I dismay thee before them. 18. For, behold, I have made thee this day a defenced city, and an iron pillar, and brasen walls, against the whole land, against the kings of Judah, against the princes thereof, against the priests thereof, and against the people of the land. 19. And they shall fight against thee: but they shall not prevail against thee: for I am with thee, saith the LORD, to deliver thee.

2 1. And the word of the LORD came to me, saying. 2. Go, and cry in the ears of Jerusalem, saying, Thus saith the LORD, I remember for thee the kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals; how thou wentest after me in the wilderness, in a land that was not sown.
3. Israel was holiness unto the LORD, the firstfruits of his increase: all that devour him shall be held guilty; evil shall come upon them, saith the LORD.

God reminds Israel of her loyalty and affection in the Wilderness. Hosea had spoken of the relation between God and His people under the image of a marriage union. Jeremiah pictures Israel's loyalty to God as that of an affectionate bride, who follows the chosen of her heart even into a wilderness.

2. kindness. Heb. chesed. A very rich and beautiful word, here meaning unquestioned and whole-hearted devotion and total forgetfulness of self, a love more than filial, like that of a youthful, loving bride.

the Prophet, that could account for Israel's willingness to forget the grandeur of Egypt, and brave the terrors of the Wilderness—its hardships, perils and treacherous foes. It was only such love that could cause them gladly to follow the call of God into the Unknown, on a novel quest of the Divine, that was to fill man's earthly existence with new hopes; on an unheard-of adventure in Religion, that was to turn the current of history and humanise mankind.

3. holiness unto the LORD. Or, "the LORD's hallowed portion" (AJ). All the nations are the Lord's harvest; but Israel is set apart for Him alone, even as the first-fruits are set apart for the use of the priest. In the Sedrah, IV, 21, Israel is called God's firstborn son.

JEREMIAH II, 4–28; III, 4; IV, 1–2

For Jeremiah and his times, as well as the reason for the selection of this chapter for this Sabbath, see the introductory notes on the preceding Haftorah.

II, 4–13. ISRAEL'S INGRATITUDE IN RETURN FOR GOD'S LOVE

4. hear . . . Jacob . . . Israel. Jeremiah addresses the nation as a whole.

5. what unrighteousness. A rhetorical question. They have found no unrighteousness in Him. Their unfaithfulness to Him has been and is without any reason.

X. MASSEY

JEREMIAH II, 4–28; III, 4; IV, 1, 2

This Haftorah is invariably read on Sabbath Massey, even if it is the New Moon.

2 4. Hear ye the word of the LORD, O house of Jacob, and all the families of the house of Israel: 5. thus saith the LORD, What unrighteousness have your fathers found in me, that they are gone far from me, and have walked after vanity, and are become vain? 6. Neither said they, Where is the LORD that brought us up out of the land of Egypt; that led us through the wilderness, through a land of deserts and of pits, through a land of drought and of the shadow of death, through a land that none passed through, and where no man dwelt?

vanity. Nothingness, folly; denoting the utter futility of idols and idol-worship.

walked after vanity, and are become vain. Or, "walked after things of nought, and are become nought" (AJ), in character and in power. Men's characters become assimilated to the follies which they worship. They walked after things of nought, and are become nought—a fitting epitaph for many races and families, once flourishing and prosperous, that have now disappeared.

6–7. The people's unfaithfulness is rendered more vivid by the reminder in strong colours, of its deliverance from Egyptian bondage, and its preservation from the dangers and terrors of the wilderness.

6. shadow of death. Or, "deep darkness" (RV Margin). "Just as in the deep darkness men cannot see their way and stray blindly hither and thither, so in the trackless desert they may easily lose themselves, and wander in bewilderment" (Peake).

send unto Kedar. An Arabian tribe, but used for Arabia generally. The meaning of the verse is, Send and inquire West and East.

11. changed their gods. Israel's action is unique in history. No other people, is the complaint of the Prophet, has with such thoughtlessness and lack of character changed its ancestral worship. Heathen nations were loyal to their gods, although these were helpless and unreal. It was the glory and pre-eminence of Israel among the nations to know and possess the true God; and Him has Israel forsaken for that which is false, useless, and a source of degeneration!

12. O ye heavens. When God arraigns His people, the whole of Nature is the appropriate audience; and even inanimate Nature must be shocked and appalled at such crass folly.

But they with great toil and expense hew out cisterns in the rock and store their water in them. This water—flat, stagnant, putrid—they prefer to the running water from the fountain. Moreover, these rock-cisterns were very liable to crack, and in the hour of greatest need their water may utterly fail. No comparison could more keenly rebuke the madness of a people who changed their glory for that which doth not profit " (Peake-Thomson).

MACHAR CHODESH (EVE OF NEW MOON)

I SAMUEL XX, 18–42

There is hardly a more beautiful figure in history than Jonathan. Truly he was "a very perfect knight," the very essence of chivalry. To the Rabbis, he stands for all time as the type of disinterested, self-denying friendship (Ethics of the Fathers, v, 17). His greatness was manifested in the very clash of duty between his loyalty to his father and his love of David. Jonathan's was a task of rare difficulty, to combine duty to his father with devotion to his friend. Yet he fails in neither. To Saul he was an affectionate son and faithful officer; and "no cloud of envy intercepted his admiration of the great warrior, the sweet singer of Israel, who hereafter was to supersede him" (Jowett). It is fortunate that the opening incident of the chapter, occurring on a Machar Chodesh—the eve of the New Moon, enables the story of Jonathan's friendship and self-abnegation to be included among the Lessons from the Prophets.

Saul, half-crazed by jealousy of David's popularity and growing hold on the people, seeks to destroy him. David places himself in the power of Jonathan, who at first

the new moon: and thou shalt be missed, because
thy seat will be empty. 19. And when thou
has stayed three days, thou shalt go down quickly,
and come to the place where thou didst hide
thyself when the business was in hand, and shalt
remain by the stone Ezel. 20. And I will shoot
three arrows on the side thereof, as though I shot at a mark. 21. And, behold, I will send
the lad, saying, Go, find the arrows. If I say unto the lad, Behold, the arrows are on this side
of thee: take them, and come; for there is peace
to thee and no hurt, as the LORD liveth. 22. But if I say thus unto the boy, Behold, the arrows are beyond thee: go thy way; for the LORD hath sent thee away. 23. And as touching the matter
which thou and I have spoken of, behold, the LORD is between thee and me for ever.

And the king sat upon his seat, as at other times, even upon the seat by the wall; and Jonathan stood up, and Abner sat by Saul's side: but David's place was empty. 26. Nevertheless Saul spake not any thing that day: for he thought, Something hath befallen him, he is not clean; surely he is not clean. 27. Jonathan had shot, Jonathan cried after the lad, and said, Is not the arrow beyond thee? 38. And Jonathan cried after the lad, Make speed, haste, stay not. And Jonathan's lad gathered up the arrows, and came to his master. 39. But the lad knew not any thing: only Jonathan and David knew the matter. 40. And Jonathan gave his weapons unto his lad, and said unto him, Go, carry them to the city. 41. And as soon as the lad was gone, David arose out of a place toward
the South, and fell on his face to the ground,
and bowed himself three times: and they kissed one another, and wept one with another, until David exceeded. 42. And Jonathan said to David,
Go in peace, forasmuch as we have sworn both of us in the name of the LORD, saying, the LORD shall be between me and thee, and between my seed and thy seed, for ever.

tragic end came, and both Saul and Jonathan died for their people, David lamented them in the most beautiful elegy in literature:

> Thy glory, O Israel, is slain upon thy high places!
> How are the mighty fallen! . . . .
> Saul and Jonathan were lovely and pleasant in their lives,
> And in their death they were not divided;
> They were swifter than eagles,
> They were stronger than lions.
> Ye daughters of Israel, weep over Saul,
> Who clothed you in scarlet delicately,
> Who put ornaments of gold upon your apparel.
> How are the mighty fallen in the midst of the battle!
> O, Jonathan, slain upon thy high places,
> I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan:
> Very pleasant hast thou been unto me:
> Thy love to me was wonderful,
> Passing the love of women.
> How are the mighty fallen,
> And the weapons of war perished!

When, to the example of David and Jonathan, we add the deep friendship of two women, Ruth and Naomi: ("Whither thou goest I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God; where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried: the Lord do so to me and more also, if aught but death part thee and me,") we realise that the Bible is also the supreme Book of Friendship.

SABBATH AND NEW MOON

ISAIAH LXVI

The Second Temple is nearing completion, and the Prophet corrects false ideas concerning the Temple building and the worship therein. He contrasts the faithful Israelites with the apostates, given to idolatrous practices, and doomed to extinction. The chapter concludes with the renewed assurance of the triumph of the Faithful Remnant, and the universal worship of the one God. Verse 23 that enshrines this hope in the phrase, "From one New Moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another," makes the section an appropriate Haftorah for this Sabbath.

1. what manner of house. God's presence cannot be limited to one spot. ("Behold heaven and the heaven of heavens cannot contain Thee; how much less this house that I have builded!" I Kings VIII, 27). The purpose of the Temple was to lead men to reverence and uprightness, and the sacrifices were to help the worshipper expel evil thoughts and desires from his heart, and burn them as burnt offerings on the altar (Kimchi). If these conditions did not exist, the Temple was not a house fit for God's glory.

2. all these things. i.e. heaven and earth came into existence at the word of God (Abarbanel).

the existence of a humble and sincere piety among the worshippers who make their will subservient to God (" that trembleth at My word ").

3. The lit. translation of the first part of this verse is : "The slaughterer of an ox, a slayer of a man ; the sacrificer of the sheep, a breaker of a dog's neck ; the offerer of an oblation—swines' blood, &c." This is often explained to mean that he who offers the statutory sacrifices but is not animated by a sincere spirit is no better than he who takes a leading part in some horrible and unholy cult involving human sacrifices. No Prophet, however, would be guilty of such an exaggeration. More probably, the Prophet has in mind those who combined outward observance of Jewish ceremonial with the destestable rites of some debased fetish-worship which existed among those left in Israel after the Assyrian conquest (II Kings, xvii, 33f). There is no reason, however, to assume that these heathen worshippers indulged, or were permitted by the Persian authorities to indulge, in human sacrifices. The words מכה איש only mean " striketh a man " (Ibn Ezra), and not " slayeth a man." The Heb. root of מכה is used for " inflicting stripes," and may therefore here refer to sacred flagellations or scourgings which, as is well known, formed part of many pagan secret cults. He that sacrificeth an ox at God's Temple, complains our Prophet, is at the same time acting as flagellator or sacred scourger at heathen mystery worship !

word. 3. He that killeth an ox is as he that slayeth a man; he that sacrificeth a lamb, as
he that breaketh a dog's neck; he that offereth
a meal offering, as he that offereth swine's blood;
he that burneth frankincense, as he that blesseth
an idol: yea, they have chosen their own ways,
and their soul delighteth in their abominations;
4. I also will choose their mockings, and will bring their fears upon them; because when I called,
none did answer; when I spake, they did not
hear: but they did that which was evil in mine
eyes, and chose that wherein I delighted not.
5. Hear the word of the LORD, ye that tremble
at his word: Your brethren that hate you, that cast you out for my name's sake, have said, Let
the LORD be glorified, that we may see your joy; but they shall be ashamed. 6. A voice of tumult from the city, a voice from the temple,

4. their mockings. Because they—the apostate and obstinate transgressors—have chosen to do that which mocks Me (v. 3), I will choose for them suffering that will mock their hopes.

their fears. i.e. the very things they fear, I will bring upon them.

5–6. Addressed to the faithful ("ye that tremble at My word") whose hopes are ridiculed by their adversaries.

5. your brethren. i.e. the semi-idolatrous schismatics who mocked and opposed the true worshippers of God.

cast you out. That refuse to associate with you (Cheyne). The Heb. root means, in later use, to excommunicate.

let the LORD be glorified ..joy. These are the taunting words of the irreligious and insolent opponents.

6. a voice of tumult. The Prophet already seems to hear the sounds of the coming judgment against the mockers.

כצ״ל v. 8.

7–14. The Prophet again breaks off with words of comfort and hope to the faithful community. Though ridiculed by their adversaries, great increase of population (v. 7), peace and prosperity, (v. 12) shall come, and the enemy be destroyed.

7. Zion is the mother, and the verse describes the swift increase in her population through the re-inforcement of faithful children from all parts.

8. shall a land be born in one day. Emphasises the rapidity of this remarkable increase. It will seem as if Zion were regenerated in one day.

9. The work of Restoration and salvation shall be complete. God will not leave it unfinished.

10. A call to the children restored, and those still in Exile, to rejoice with Jerusalem.

all ye that mourn over her. All those in Exile, and those who since the Return have been depressed at the slow realisation of their hopes in Zion.

11. The figure of Zion as Mother is retained.

12. Peace and prosperity shall stream into Zion, like a river that overflows its banks.

glory. Wealth.

a voice of the LORD that rendereth recompense to his enemies. 7. Before she travailed, she brought forth; before her pain came, she was delivered of a man child. 8. Who hath heard such a thing? who hath seen such things? Shall a land be born in one day? shall a nation be brought forth at once? for as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children. 9. Shall I bring to the birth, and not cause to bring forth? saith the LORD: shall I that cause to bring forth shut the womb? saith thy God.

10. Rejoice ye with Jerusalem, and be glad for her, all ye that love her: rejoice for joy with her, all ye that mourn over her: 11. that ye may suck and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolations; that ye may milk out, and be delighted with the abundance of her glory. 12. For thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will extend peace to her like a river, and the glory of the nations like an overflowing stream, and ye shall suck thereof; ye shall be borne upon the side, and shall be dandled upon the knees. 13. As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you; and ye shall be comforted in Jerusalem. 14. And ye shall see it, and your heart shall

shall be borne upon the side. Continues the figure of the nursling in the preceding verse. The nations become their foster-mothers.

13. as one whom his mother comforteth. God's is not only a Father's love. "As the grown man, coming back with wounds and weariness upon him to be comforted of his mother" (G. A. Smith), finds there the comfort he seeks, so will God comfort the men of Zion. God is our Mother.

The reference therefore is to an asherah, a grove of sacred trees or poles set up near an altar for idol-worship in the garden. If the word is read as written, אחת, the reference would be to a priest who led the company of worshippers.

סבירה יבואו v. 23.

21. and of them also will I take for priests and Levites. Of the converted Gentiles and the Jews who are brought back by them, I will take to assist the priests and Levites in their service (Kimchi). This thought is quite in accordance with the universalist spirit in Isaiah.

22 and 23. In this new (and better) order of things, the race and influence of Israel will continue for ever, leading to the fulfilment of Israel's mission, i.e. the universal worship of the One God, with Jerusalem as the devotional capital of mankind.

23. from one new moon to another. lit. " as often as there is a new moon on its new moon, etc," i.e. on every New Moon and Sabbath; New Moon by New Moon and Sabbath by Sabbath.

24. A survey again of the conflict against evil, and its final defeat, through which the above great goal is reached. Delitzsch points out that, in effect, the thought is the same as in the concluding sentence of other sections of the second half of Isaiah—" there is no peace unto the wicked " (XLVIII, 22, and LVII, 21). Under the figure of the worm that dieth not, and the fire that is not quenched, we have here a symbolical representation of the lasting remorse that, on the all the nations for an offering unto the LORD, upon horses, and in chariots, and in litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts, to my holy mountain Jerusalem, saith the LORD, as the children of Israel bring their offering in a clean vessel into the house of the LORD.

21. And of them also will I take for priests and for Levites, saith the LORD.
22. For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the LORD, so shall your seed and your name remain.
23. And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the LORD.
24. And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcases of the men that have transgressed against me: for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh.

And it shall come to pass that from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the LORD.

realisation of their wickedness, troubles the souls of evil-doers. The knowledge of this, which will be clear to all ("And they shall go forth and look"), will become a restraining moral influence. It will be a factor in the attainment of the great consummation (the universal worship of the one true God) described in the previous verse.

they shall go forth. The worshippers.

According to ancient Jewish custom, v. 23 is read a second time after v. 24, so as to conclude the book (of which this is the last chapter) with words of comfort and encouragement. There is a similar direction in regard to concluding Malachi, Lamentations and Ecclesiastes. In each case, the last verse but one is reprinted in the Heb. text, and repeated during the reading in the Synagogue.

PREFATORY NOTE

This volume completes the edition of the Pentateuch and Haftorahs begun by me nearly ten years ago. The cordial reception accorded to it has been most gratifying, and proves what a great need has been met by a popular commentary which makes plain the Jewish religious values of the Scriptural Text.

I am indebted to the courtesy of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge for granting me permission to print the Revised Version; and of the British and Foreign Bible Society for the use of the Letteris Hebrew Text.

In the preparation of this first Jewish commentary in English on Deuteronomy, I am much indebted to Drs. A. Cohen and J. Abelson for various glosses taken over from their notes on chapters I–XVI and XVII–XXXIV respectively, and to the Rev. S. Frampton for similar glosses on the Haftorahs. Prof. I. Epstein and the Rev. M. Rosenbaum have as before given me the benefit of their helpful criticism; and the Revs. Dr. J. Rabbinowitz and Michael Adler have been kind enough to read the book in proof. The General Index is largely the work of Dr. J. P. Naish, of the University Press, Oxford. To all these collaborators—as well as to my secretary, Miss S. Benjamin—I would here express my sincerest thanks.

I have pleasure in adding the name of GEORGE ROSE, Esq., to the wise-hearted patrons of the former volumes of this series. His generosity places this Book of Deuteronomy within the reach of the general public. I must also record the encouragement given to this work by the Gentlemen of the Mahamad of the Spanish and Portuguese Synagogue, London. Great is the service of those who help in spreading the Torah in Israel.

In concluding this labour of love, I recall the sacred memory of one, cut off in the midst of her years, whose wise counsel and religious enthusiasm induced me to undertake, amid the distractions and duties of my office, the vital task of a People's Commentary on the Pentateuch. And I offer praise to Almighty God for having given me life, strength, and opportunity to see the completion of that task. May it be His will that this new exposition of the spiritual wonders of Israel's Torah be crowned by blessed results throughout English-speaking Jewry and beyond.

Targum Ancient translations or paraphrases of the Bible into the Aramaic vernacular then spoken by the Jews. The most important of these is the translation of the Pentateuch that is ascribed to Onkelos, the Proselyte, a Mishna teacher of the first century. The Jonathan Targum is a freer paraphrase of the Bible, ascribed to Jonathan ben Uzziel, a pupil of Hillel. An earlier and fragmentary version of this paraphrase is known as the Jerusalem Targum. The Samaritans also have an Aramaic Targum, embodying their traditional interpretation of the Torah.

Talmud Body of Jewish law and legend comprising the Mishna and the Gemara, and containing the authoritative explanation of the Torah by the Rabbis of Palestine and Babylon, from the years 100 B.C.E. to 500 A.C.E.

ספר דברים

THE BOOK OF DEUTERONOMY

דברים
DEUTERONOMY

NAME. The name of the Fifth Book of Moses is אלה הדברים, lit. "these are the words," from the opening phrase in the Hebrew Text. This title has been shortened in current use to Devarim, "Words." The oldest name of the Book. however, was משנה תורה, "the Repetition of the Torah," a phrase based on XVII, 18. The Greek-speaking Jews translated this name by Deuteronomion, i.e. "Second Law"; and this title was taken over by the Latin Bible as Deuteronomium, and thence by the English Versions as Deuteronomy.

CONTENTS. A full title might be, Moses' Farewell Discourses and Song to Israel. The Lawgiver had brought his People to the borders of the Holy Land. He then recounts in three Discourses the events of the forty years' wanderings; and warns against the temptations awaiting them in Canaan, with promise of Divine judgment for disobedience, and Divine blessing for faithful observance, of God's commandments. Included in the second Discourse, is a rehearsal of the principal laws (XII–XXVI), as these were to be observed in the new Land. These laws are given in free reproduction, with hortatory amplification, abbreviation, or even modification to meet new conditions. In his Farewell Song, the dying Leader celebrates God as the Rock of Israel. This is followed by the Farewell Blessing. Standing on the brink of the grave, he gives his parting benediction to the tribes whose religious and political welfare had been the devoted labour of his life. He then ascends the height to the sepulchre which no man knoweth. "And there hath not arisen a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses."

NATURE AND INFLUENCE. Deuteronomy is a unique book—distinct from the narrative and historical, the legal, prophetic and devotional writings of Holy Writ, though it has affinities with each of them. In its literary aspect, it is oratory; and as such it is unsurpassed in its rush of rhythmic sentences, its ebb and flow of exalted passion, its accents of appeal and denunciation: Moses' speech shines as well as his face. And this noble language gives utterance to truths which are always and everywhere sovereign—that God is One, and that man must be wholly His; that God is Righteousness and Faithfulness, Mercy and Love. The central declaration of all this oratory, enshrined by Judaism in its daily devotions, is the Shema—which, as we shall see, teaches the unity of the Creator, the unity of creation, and the unity of mankind.

The God proclaimed by Deuteronomy stands in a relation to Israel and humanity not merely of Judge or Ruler, but of Friend and Father. "And thou shalt love the LORD thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, and with all thy might." This whole-souled love and devotion to God is to be accompanied by a large-hearted benevolence towards man, and indeed towards all sentient beings; by the recognition of the retributive righteousness of God; and by the insistence on the vital importance of family life, and of religious instruction within the home. The influence of this Book of the Farewell Discourses of Moses on both domestic and personal religion in Israel throughout the millenia has never been exceeded by that of any other Book in Scripture.

I. DEVARIM

(Chapters I–III, 22)

Chapter I, 1–5. INTRODUCTORY

These verses are usually taken to be the general superscription to Deuteronomy. They specify the place and time of the Farewell Discourses of the Lawgiver recorded in this Book.

1. words. i.e. discourses, of exhortation and reproof, which form the main contents of Deuteronomy.

unto all Israel. "These words redound to the praise of Israel. Knowing that they were called together for the purpose of hearing a discourse which would contain strong words of reproof, they nevertheless attended in full number" (Sifri).

beyond Jordan. Heb. בעבר הירדן; "at the crossing of the Jordan;" or, "at the banks of the Jordan," eastern or western. Which one of these is meant in any particular passage can be determined only by the context (Gesenius, Luzzatto, Friedlander); Num. xxxii, 19; Deut. xi, 30. Some commentators see in the words עבר הירדן (lit. Transjordania) a fixed geographical name of the Moabite side of the Jordan, even for the inhabitants of that land. Along with this went a local usage, determined by the position of the speaker.

in the Arabah. "The deep valley running North and South of the Dead Sea" (RV Margin). Here the southern portion of this valley is meant, extending to the Gulf of Akabah, which is the north-eastern arm of the Red Sea.

Suph. A shorter form of yam suph, i.e. the Red Sea.

I. DEVARIM

CHAPTER I

1. These be the words which Moses spake unto all Israel beyond Jordan in the wilderness, in the Arabah over against Suph, between Paran, and Tophel, and Laban, and Hazeroth, and Paran. The wilderness of Paran is now called the wilderness of el-Tih, north of the Sinai Peninsula, and west of the Arabah.

Tophel. Some identify this unknown place with el-Tafile, a village about 15 miles south-east of the Dead Sea.

Laban and Hazeroth. Possibly the Libnah and Hazeroth in Num. XXXIII, 17–20.

Di-zahab. The spot has not been identified. The Hebrew implies "a place productive of gold."

The five names mentioned above seem to delimit the place where Moses gave one of the discourses to Israel. Their identification is uncertain and full of difficulties. Some of the ancient and medieval teachers have been inclined to treat those names homiletically. By playing on their meaning, they associated these places with the murmurings and transgressions of the children of Israel. Thus, Onkelos translates this v. as follows: "These are the words which Moses spake to all Israel beyond Jordan. He reproved them because they had sinned in the Wilderness, and had provoked God to anger in the Plain (Arabah) of Moab; over against the Red Sea (Suph) they murmured against God; in Paran, they had spoken contemptuously (tophel) concerning the manna (laban); and in Hazeroth, they angered Him on account of flesh and because they made the Golden Calf (di-zahab)."

2. it is eleven days' journey. From Horeb, i.e. Sinai, the scene of the Giving of the Law, to Kadesh-barnea. The distance is between 160 and 170 miles. In 1838, the traveller Robinson followed the route here specified, and the journey lasted exactly eleven days of ordinary camel-riding.

by the way of mount Seir. Or, " by the Mount Seir road " —the easternmost track from the Sinai Peninsula to Kadesh.

3. in the fortieth year. The date of the discourses. Moses reserved his exhortation for the closing days of his life, in the same way as Jacob (Gen. XLIX), Joshua (Josh. XXIV), Samuel (I Sam. XII), and David (I Kings, II). Words spoken at the solemn time of departure from earth have a deep influence upon the hearers.

eleventh. Heb. עשתי עשר. In the preceding v. the form used for " eleven " is אחד עשר. Koenig rightly points to this fact, among many others, as proof that, unlike the Samaritan and Septuagint Texts, the Heb. Text has from the first been handed down to us with absolute accuracy, and that no attempt was made to " harmonise " different forms of the same word or phrase.

4. Sihon . . . Og. These signal victories, still fresh in the memory of all, are repeatedly mentioned in Deuteronomy ; because the success of Moses' leadership on these occasions heightened his authority and enabled him to address his people on their faults in the past and their duties in the future.

at Edrei. The place where Og was slain (Num. XXI, 35) ; the modern Dera, 30 miles east of the Lake of Tiberias.

5. began. Better, undertook ; or, set himself.

to declare. In the original English sense of " make clear " ; to expound.

Di-zahab. 2. It is eleven days' journey from Horeb by the way of mount Seir unto Kadesh-barnea. 3. And it came to pass in the fortieth year, in the eleventh month, on the first day of the month, that Moses spake unto the children of Israel, according unto all that the LORD had given him in commandment unto them;
4. After he had smitten Sihon the king of the Amorites, which dwelt in Heshbon, and Og
the king of Bashan, which dwelt in Ashtaroth, at Edrei: 5. beyond Jordan, in the land of Moab, began Moses to declare this law, saying, 6. The

this law. "The Heb. word Torah does not and never did mean 'Law.' It means, and always has meant, 'Teaching'" (Herford). The word torah may refer to moral guidance, or to a single specific teaching, as in Prov. I, 8, "forsake not the teaching (torath) of thy mother." It is also applied to a body of religious precepts or teachings—such as form the central portion of this Book (chaps. XII–XXVI). Often it denotes the entire sum of Israel's religious doctrine and life—the Torah of Moses.

1–5. Apart from the geographical uncertainties there are many other difficulties in these verses, so long as we regard them as forming the title-page to the whole of Deuteronomy. Thus, v. 5 states that "Moses began to declare this law, saying (לאמר)." In the light of the current view of these verses, this can only mean that the exposition in question follows immediately upon that verse. And yet the succeeding chapters contain no exposition of the Torah; nor, strictly speaking, can the laws in chaps. XII–XXVI be called an "exposition" of the Torah, seeing that, of the one hundred laws contained in those chapters, seventy are not mentioned in the previous Books of the Pentateuch.

For these and other reasons, many commentators regard v. 1–5 as introductory not to the whole Book, but merely to the First Discourse of Moses (I, 6–IV, 40); and, in consequence, their interpretation differs considerably from that given above. One of these commentators is Sforno who paraphrases v. 1 and 2 as follows: "These are the words which Moses repeatedly spoke unto all Israel, beyond Jordan, in the Arabah, over against Suph, between Paran and Tophel and Laban and Hazeroth and Di-zahab; viz., 'it is eleven days' journey from Horeb by way of Mount Seir unto Kadesh-barnea.' And yet it had taken them forty years to accomplish that journey! Such was the veiled admonition that Moses intended to convey to them by these words in each of the places mentioned." Targum Jonathan, Sifri, and Rashi seem to have understood these verses in the same sense. "Had Israel been worthy, they could have entered the Land within eleven days; but they were sadly found wanting, and they drew upon themselves the punishment of forty years' wandering" (Sifri). Luzzatto sees this thought continued in v. 3–5, which he paraphrases as follows, "In the fortieth year, after the victories over Sihon and Og, Moses undertook to make clear and expound the veiled meaning embodied in this 'teaching.' Such declaration and exposition are contained in the First Discourse (I, 6–IV, 40) which he addressed to the People about to undertake the conquest of Canaan." And in fact, that First Discourse is a historic retrospect of the main incidents from Horeb to Jordan, bringing home to the new generation why it was that the Israelites were doomed to wander forty years in the Wilderness before they could enter the Promised Land, though the direct route was only an eleven days' journey.

A. MOSES' FIRST DISCOURSE

Review of Journey from Sinai to Kadesh with Exhortation to Obedience

(Chapters I, 6–IV, 40)

Moses reviews the experiences of the Israelites in the terrible wilderness through which they passed till they reached

LORD our God spake unto us in Horeb, saying, Ye have dwelt long enough in this mountain:

Kadesh-barnea. Thence the spies were sent on to Canaan. These brought back word of a good land, but also of cities great and fenced up to heaven, and a population counting giants among them. They so filled the heart of the people with fear, that Israel forgot God and was prepared to return to Egypt. The unfaithful spies and the whole of that generation were therefore to perish in the Wilderness; their children alone were to enter the Promised Land. Moses continues to tell of their presumptuous attempt to defeat that sentence, and the ignominious failure and rout with which it had been visited. Moses himself had been entangled in the rebellious outbreak of the people; and his doom is made known to him, to leave the passage into the Land of Promise to another leadership. But even the eight and thirty years' wandering in the Wilderness lacked not the LORD's watchfulness. Towards the end of the wandering, they passed by Edom, but were forbidden to attack Moab and Ammon. With the crossing of the brook Zered, however, the new era began: the dread of Israel fell upon the heathen peoples. In vain Sihon, king of the Amorites, and Og, king of Bashan, resisted: their cities were taken, their people extirpated, their land divided among the tribes of Reuben, Gad and half-Manasseh.

The remainder of Moses' First Discourse will be dealt with in connection with the next Sidrah, p. 42 and 44.

6–8. COMMAND TO START FROM HOREB

6. the LORD our God. Placed emphatically at the beginning of the sentence as the motive of the whole Discourse. "The phrase the LORD our God has the intimate accent of a common affection. No phrase has been more helpful to piety in all generations" (G. A. Smith).

7. hill country. The central mountain-range of Palestine.

Amorites. The general term for the inhabitants of Canaan prior to the entry of the Israelites; Amos, II, 9; see Genesis, p. 500.

Arabah. Here refers to its northern part, the Jordan Valley, ending in the Dead Sea.

lowland. Heb. Shephelah. The foothills between the Central Range and the Maritime Plain; see Map. It is one of the most fertile tracts in the land.

the South. The Negeb; the dry steppe-district south of Judah; see on Num. XIII, 17.

the sea shore. The Plain extending inwards from the coast of the Mediterranean to a distance of from four to fifteen miles.

Lebanon. The range of mountains to the north of the Holy Land.

the river Euphrates. The ideal limit assigned to the territory of Israel; cf. Gen. XV, 18; see Map facing p. 459.

8. the land which the LORD sware unto your fathers. This phrase occurs more than twenty times in Deuteronomy. The Divine love towards the Patriarchs and the Promise to give their children possession of Canaan (see Gen. XII, 7; XXVI, 3f; and XXVIII, 13f) led to the selection, and are guarantees for the preservation, of Israel.

7. turn you, and take your journey, and go to the hill country of the Amorites, and unto all the places nigh thereunto, in the Arabah, in the hill country, and in the lowland, and in the South, and by the sea shore, the land of the Canaanites, and Lebanon, as far as the great river, the river Euphrates. 8. Behold, I have set the land before you: go in and possess the land which the LORD sware unto your fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give unto them and to their seed after them. 9. And I spake unto you at that time, saying, I am not able to bear you myself alone: 10. the LORD your God hath multiplied you, and, behold, ye are this day as the stars of heaven for multitude.
11. The LORD, the God of your fathers, make you a thousand times so many more as ye are, and

9–18. APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANTS

The first movement forward towards the conquest of the Holy Land revealed the growing numbers of the Israelites. Moses could no longer, unaided, support the burden of so vast a nation. Others had to share responsibility with him. He has in mind not only the appointment of judges on the advice of Jethro (Exod. XVIII), but also the election of seventy elders to help in the administration of the community.

9. not able to bear. A reminiscence of Num. XI, 14.

10. as the stars of heaven. A simile of wonderful beauty. God had fulfilled His promise to increase the children of the Patriarchs; cf. Gen. XV, 5.

11. the LORD . . . bless you. A pious interjection, as in II Sam. XXIV, 3. Moses hastens to bestow his blessing upon Israel in order that his words be not misunderstood as if he lamented the increase of his people (Hoffmann). The phrase, "The LORD, the God of your fathers," has in substance been taken over into the Prayer Book. It implies the unbroken continuity of the generations in Israel; and, likewise, the unchanging relationship between God and His "kingdom of priests."

12. myself alone bear. Moses now proceeds to recall how the task of government had grown beyond his powers.

your cumbrance. Your troublesomeness; the people made the leader's task heavier by placing obstacles in his way (Sifri). He did not have their co-operation and assistance.

burden. "The responsibility of providing the people with food and water, the lack of which caused hostile demonstrations to be made against Moses" (Ibn Ezra).

strife. They were quarrelsome, and at this stage it was essential for him to be relieved of petty judicial functions.

13. take you. It is clear from v. 15 that Moses, and not the people, made the selection. As the Sifri points out, the Hebrew word denotes taking counsel about a project, not taking action in connection with it.

known. Because of their outstanding merit. The Targum, however, understands it as "full of knowledge."

15. wise men and known. Compare this with what is stated in v. 13, "wise men, and understanding, and known." The Rabbis explain that Moses was unable to find men who possessed all the desired qualifications.

bless you, as he hath promised you !*ii 12. How can I myself alone bear your cumbrance, and your burden, and your strife ? 13. Take you wise men, and understanding, and known, according to your tribes, and I will make them heads over you. 14. And ye answered me, and said, The thing which thou hast spoken is good for us to do. 15. So I took the heads of your tribes, wise men, and known, and made them heads
over you, captains of thousands, and captains of hundreds, and captains of fifties, and captains of tens, and officers, according to your tribes.
16. And I charged your judges at that time, saying, Hear the causes between your brethren, and judge righteously between a man and his brother, and officers. Officials in the administration of justice and maintenance of civil order, whose duty it was to put in force the instructions of their superiors (Talmud). Some render the Heb. shoterim " recorders," from שטר, " document."

16. hear the causes between. lit. " hear between " ; i.e. not to listen to ex parte statements, but to all that is said on both sides (Talmud).

the stranger. In matters involving equity, there must be no difference between an Israelite and the resident alien. " The care taken by Israelite law to protect strangers finds no parallel in Babylonia " (S. A. Cook). To-day, a great modern state outlaws a section of its own population, and oppresses it far more than it would dare to oppress total aliens.

that is with him. The Rabbis sometimes understand it in the sense of " inhabiting his house," and, therefore, more in his power. The very life of such a man may depend on justice being granted him. The wife of a Chassidic rabbi, having quarelled with her maid, was setting out to the magistrate to lodge her complaint. Noticing that her husband was about to accompany her, she asked him whither

he was bound. "To the magistrate," he said. His wife declared that it was beneath his dignity to take any part in a quarrel with a servant. She could deal with the matter herself. The rabbi replied, "That may be, but I intend to represent your maid, who, when accused by you, will find no one willing to take her part." And then, bursting into a passion of tears, he quoted Job XXXI, 13: "If I did despise the cause of my man-servant or of my maid-servant, when they contended with me, what then shall I do when God riseth up"? A similar story is related of R. Jose in the Midrash.

17. ye shall not respect . . . . in judgement. "You must never show partiality to any person in a case" (Moffatt). The judge must avoid everything that can possibly be construed as a bribe. The Babylonian teacher Samuel was passing over a plank laid across a stream, when a stranger drew nigh and offered his hand to conduct him with safety over the frail bridge. Samuel, on enquiring who he was, learned that he was a suitor who desired him to adjudicate upon his cause. "Friend, thou hast disqualified me by thy eager courtesy. I am no longer able to judge the case with impartiality"; see also on XVI, 19.

small . . . great alike. i.e. an insignificant person, and a person of importance. There was not to be one law for the rich, and another for the poor. "Small" and "great" may also refer to the matters under dispute. A dispute involving a small sum requires the same earnest the stranger that is with him. 17. Ye shall not respect persons in judgement; ye shall hear the small and the great alike; ye shall not be afraid of the face of man; for the judgement is God's:

and the cause that is too hard for you ye shall bring unto me, and I will hear it. 18. And I commanded you at that time all the things which ye should do.

19. And we journeyed from Horeb, and went through all that great and terrible wilderness which ye saw, by the way to the hill country of the Amorites, as the LORD our God commanded us; and we came to Kadesh-barnea.
20. And I said unto you, Ye are come unto the hill country of the Amorites, which the LORD our God giveth unto us. 21. Behold, the LORD thy attention as that involving a large sum (Talmud).

the judgement is God's. The judge should feel that he is God's representative, and that every judicial decision is a religious act; cf. II Chron. XIX, 6 (And the king said to the judges, "Consider what ye do; for ye judge not for man, but for the LORD; and He is with you in the matter of judgement"). In Jewish teaching all those who administer the law in accordance with right and thereby maintain the moral foundations—Truth and Justice—upon which human society rests, are performing a Divine task. "Every judge who renders righteous judgment, Scripture deems him a co-partner of the Holy One, blessed be He, in the work of Creation" (Talmud).

19–46. FROM HOREB TO KADESH-BARNEA

19. terrible wilderness. "Wherein were fiery serpents and scorpions, and thirsty ground where was no water" (VIII, 15).

22–25. The Mission of the Spies.

27 וַתֵּרָגְנוּ בְאָהֳלֵיכֶם וַתֹּאמְרוּ בְּשִׂנְאַת יְהוָה אֹתָנוּ הוֹצִיאָנוּ

22. ye came near unto me. By combining what is related here with Num. XIII, we get a full understanding of the incident. The plan originated with the people; it approved itself to Moses; and was sanctioned by God. Moses does not here repeat all the details, because a reminder of all those details is not required for his address of admonition; whereas the historical account in Numbers could well dispense with narrating the circumstance that it was the Israelites who had demanded the sending of the Spies. "It is evident that a circumstance may be passed over in silence by the historian, which nevertheless the orator selects as lending emphasis to his oration" (Höffmann). It was important to remind them that the sending of the spies, which led immediately to their rebellion, was their own suggestion (Sifri).

23. the thing pleased me well. But it did not please God. It is to be noted that in Num. XIII, 2 the Hebrew is lit. "send for thyself men," and God, as it were, dissociated Himself from the scheme; whereas in the appointment of men to assist Moses, which had God's approval, Scripture relates, "The LORD said unto Moses, gather for Me seventy men" (Num. XI, 16).

24. into the mountain. Better, into the hill country; as in v. 7.

valley of Eshcol. Near Hebron; Num. XIII, 23.

one of you, and said, Let us send men before us, that they may search the land for us, and bring us word again of the way by which we must go up, and the cities unto which we shall come.
23. And the thing pleased me well: and I took twelve men of you, one man for every tribe:
24. and they turned and went up into the mountain, and came unto the valley of Eshcol, and spied it out. 25. And they took of the fruit of the land in their hands, and brought it down unto us, and brought us word again, and said, It is a good land which the LORD our God giveth unto us. 26. Yet ye would not go up, but rebelled against the commandment of the LORD your God: 27. and ye murmured in your tents, and said, Because the LORD hated us, he hath brought us forth out of the land of Egypt, to deliver us into the hand of the Amorites, to 26–33. The Disaffection of the People.

27. in your tents. Being unwilling to unite for common action. The well-known phrase, To your tents, O Israel, (I Kings XII, 16) is a formula of dispersion, not a call for military action (H. W. Robinson).

the LORD hated us. To this extreme of unbelief and ingratitude were the people driven by the report of a few among themselves, in spite of their long experience of God's leading. "The passage is eloquent of the fickleness with which a people will suffer the lessons of its past—facts of Providence it has proved and lived upon—to be overthrown by the opinion of a few 'experts' as to a still untried situation" (G. A. Smith).

Whither are we going up? our brethren have made our heart to melt, saying, The people is greater and taller than we; the cities are great and fenced up to heaven; and moreover we have seen the sons of the Anakim there. 29. Then I said unto you, Dread not, neither be afraid of them. 30. The LORD your God who goeth before you, he shall fight for you, according to all that he did for you in Egypt before your eyes; 31. and in the wilderness, where thou hast seen how that the LORD thy God bare thee, as a man doth bear his son, in all the way that ye went, until ye came unto this place. 32. v. 38. מלעיל

37. for your sakes. Better, on your account. Moses had certainly disobeyed God's command, and thereby incurred His wrath; but this had happened as a consequence of the people's action. "They angered Him also at the waters of Meribah, so that it went ill with Moses for their sakes" (Psalm cvi, 32). The leader must share responsibility for the failings of his flock; see also on iii, 26. "Moses alone realises all that life in the Promised Land may be; and Moses alone of all the vast assembly is the one who will never see it. The Lord was angry with me for your sakes, this is the phrase under which the speaker veils the breakdown of his life-task" (Moulton). Moses refers to the Divine displeasure here, because it leads up to the mention of his successor.

38. standeth before thee. The Heb. idiom for "attend upon," as a servant.

encourage thou him. In its literal sense; i.e. make him strong.

he shall see it; and to him will I give the land that he hath trodden upon, and to his children: because he hath wholly followed the LORD. 37. Also the LORD was angry with me for your sakes, saying, Thou also shalt not go in thither: 38. Joshua the son of Nun, which standeth before thee, he shall go in thither: encourage thou him; for he shall cause Israel to inherit it.*iv 39. Moreover your little ones, which ye said should be a prey, and your children, which this day have no knowledge of good or evil, they shall go in thither, and unto them will I give it, and they shall possess it. 40. But as for you, turn you, and take your journey into the wilderness by the way to the Red Sea. 41. Then ye answered and said unto me, We have sinned against the LORD, we will go up and fight, according to all that the LORD our God commanded us. And ye girded on every man his weapons of war, and deemed it a light thing to go up into the mountain. 42. And the LORD said unto me, Say unto them, Go not up, neither fight; for I am not among you; lest ye be smitten

40. by the way to the Red Sea. See Num. XIV, 25. The explorer, Trumbull, identified this road with the modern pilgrim-track from Suez to Akabah; cf. on v. 1 above.

41. we will go up. The word "we" is emphasised in the Hebrew: we ourselves, the doomed generation, will go up, and not leave the advance to our children. "The quick revulsion of popular feeling is true to life. The change was too facile to be real. Mere enthusiasm is no atonement for guilt. Men cannot run away from their moral unworthiness on bursts of feeling" (G. A. Smith).

This feeling the old theologians named "attrition"; in contrast with the sincere penitence,—the sorrow over sin itself—which they called contrition. There is all the difference in the world between a man who is contrite and one who is merely "attrite."

Hoffmann and Driver take this as an example of the Semitic idiom often employed by a writer who is either unable, or has no occasion, to speak explicitly. CHAPTER II

In the first portion of his Discourse, Moses dwelt on the abortive attempt to enter Canaan. He now recalls (II–III, 29) the victories that marked the close of their wanderings, victories that presaged Israel's conquest of the Promised Land. He thus points out that unbelief and rebellion brought shame and punishment; while repentant return to God and obedience to His will were crowned by blessing and triumph.

II, 1–8. ROUND MOUNT SEIR

After the repulse at Kadesh, the Israelites turned back towards the Red Sea, skirting Mt. Seir, until God commanded them to turn northward, and pass peacefully through Esau's territory; see Map, facing p. 10.

3. turn you northward. "The Israelites must be imagined by this time to have made their way along the south-western and southern border of Edom, as far as the south-east end of the Arabah, so that a turn northwards would at once lead them along the eastern border of Edom in the direction of Moab" (Driver); cf. Judges XI, 18.

Ezion-geber. Also mentioned in I Kings IX, 26 as being in the vicinity of Elath and "on the shore of the Red Sea, in the land of Edom." A fleet which Jehoshaphat had built was wrecked there (I Kings XXII, 48).

The word Ezion-geber is followed by a Massoretic note, known as "a break in the middle of the verse," which indicates that a new paragraph begins with the second half of the verse.

wilderness. The Heb. מדבר does not always mean "a desert." It often denotes, as the etymology of the word implies, "a place where cattle is driven to pasture," uncultivated land. To the east of Moab there is a stretch of moors. "Israel kept so far east, not only to avoid the fertile and settled districts of Edom and Moab, but so as not to have to cross the lower stretches of the great canyon between Edom and Moab. These lower stretches are deep, the sides steep, and the roads over them difficult for caravans. The route of Hajj, apparently that of Israel, crosses the much shallower head of this wady on the desert border. Once over it, they were in the wilderness east of Moab" (G. A. Smith).

And we turned and passed by the way of the wilderness of Moab. 9. 11. Rephaim. Mentioned in Gen. XIV, 5; XV, 20.

12. Horites. See Gen. XIV, 6 and XXXVI, 20f; the name has been translated, "cave-dwellers." Macalister has discovered at Gezer the remains of a pre-Semitic, cave-dwelling race, using stone implements; and he identifies these with the Horites. A far different view is profounded by J. W. Jack who regards them as being "one of the most important cultural races of Western Asia during the earlier part of the second millennium. Some time before the Semites arrived on the scene, they occupied the whole of northern Mesopotamia. It was to the Horites or Hurrians that the Hittites directly owed their civilisation, including as Israel did. Refers to the conquest of trans-Jordanic territory (Num. XXXII).

13–15. The Crossing of Zered

This was an important step: hence the mention of the time that had elapsed since Israel left Kadesh, and also that now the doom passed on the men of war because of their murmuring had exhausted itself. Since this doom was no longer resting on their efforts, the people could with every expectation of the Divine help go forward to the conquest of the new country (Welch).

20. Zamzummim. Nothing is known of them. Their name is held by some to be formed on the analogy of the Greek "barbaroi," as a people whose speech sounded uncouth; in Arabic zamzamah is a distant, confused sound (G. A. Smith).

But nevertheless men have moral responsibility for their acts, and are fully and justly conscious of ill-desert. It is to be noted that God is never said to harden the heart of a good man. It is always those who are guilty of acts of evil-doing upon whom this works" (Harper).

The ruthlessness of those methods is as hideous to us to-day as war itself will—we hope and pray—be to the men and women of the future. And if it is the wholesale nature of the destruction that especially shocks our moral judgment, it is well for us to consider that in the next World War it is especially the defenceless population that will be exposed to annihilation. For the ban in connection with the Canaanites, see on XX, 18.

forbad us. The Heb. is "commanded us," and the words "not to conquer" are understood; as in IV, 23.

CHAPTER III, 1–7. FURTHER VICTORIES

The Israelite hosts, advancing northwards towards Bashan, encounter and defeat Og and conquer his cities.

1. and went up. This phrase denotes travelling northward, since there is an almost continuous ascent from South to North (Rashi).

Bashan. The fertile district north of Gilead; see on v. 10.

Og. See Num. XXI, 33f.

2. fear him not. Og was a more formidable opponent and devoted every inhabited city, with the women and the little ones; we left none remaining: 35. only the cattle we took for a prey unto ourselves, with the spoil of the cities which we had taken. 36. From Aroer, which is on the edge of the valley of Arnon, and from the city that is in the valley, even unto Gilead, there was not a city too high for us: the LORD our God delivered up all before us: 37. only to the land of the children of Ammon thou camest not near; all the side of the river Jabbok, and the cities of the hill country, and wheresoever the LORD our God forbad us.

CHAPTER III

3 1. Then we turned, and went up the way to Bashan: and Og the king of Bashan came out against us, he and all his people, unto battle at Edrei. 2. And the LORD said unto me, Fear him not: for I have delivered him, and all his people, and his land, into thy hand;
and thou shalt do unto him as thou didst unto Sihon king of the Amorites, which dwelt at Heshbon. 3. So the LORD our God delivered into our hand Og also, the king of Bashan, and all his people: and we smote him until none was left to him remaining. 4. And we took all his cities at that time; there was not a city which we took not from them; threescore cities, all the region of Argob, the kingdom

than Sihon, belonging as he did to the race of giants.

3. none was left to him. See on II, 34.

Rising with its grey snow-capped cone to a height of about 9,500 feet, it is visible from most parts of the Promised Land, and even from the depths of the Jordan Valley and the shores of the Dead Sea. Hence it was Sion, the up-raised; or Hermon, the lofty peak; or Senir, and Sirion, the glittering 'breastplate' of ice; or above all Lebanon the 'Mont Blanc' of Palestine, the 'White Mountain' of ancient times" (Stanley).

of Og in Bashan. 5. All these were cities fenced with high walls, gates, and bars; beside the unwalled towns a great many. 6. And we utterly destroyed them, as we did unto Sihon king of Heshbon, utterly destroying every inhabited city, with the women and the little ones. 7. But all the cattle, and the spoil of the cities, we took for a prey unto ourselves. 8. And we took the land at that time out of the hand of the two kings of the Amorites that were beyond Jordan, from the valley of Arnon unto mount Hermon; 9. (which Hermon the Sidonians call Sirion, and the Amorites call it Senir;) 10. all the cities of the table land, and all Gilead, and all Bashan, unto Salecah and Edrei, cities of the kingdom of Og in Bashan. 11. there are some who suppose that what is here meant is the king's sarcophagus. Some sites in Eastern Palestine are strewn with stone-coffins. However, the Biblical Hebrew for sarcophagus is always ארון. The bedstead is mentioned in order to indicate the huge size of Og; and it is not improbable that his bed would have been preserved as a curiosity.

(CHAPTERS III, 23–VII, 11)

23–29. MOSES' PRAYER AND ITS REJECTION

The signs of God's favour to His people, shown in the victories over the Amorite kings, stirred the personal hope of Moses that he too might see "the good land that is beyond Jordan." But it was not to be. He might view the land, but he would never cross there. He was to commit the future to Joshua, his successor.

23. I besought. He does not base his request on his life of service to Israel, but begs it as an act of grace on the part of God (Rashi).

24. begun to shew. He yearned to see the consummation of the Divine promise.

25. let me go over. Not as Leader, but as one in the ranks, to whom the Divine decree might not apply. Hence, "I besought the LORD at that time" (v. 23); i.e. after he had appointed Joshua as his successor (Malbim).

beyond Jordan. Here, as in v. 20 above referring to Western Palestine.

II. VA-ETHCHANAN

3 23. And I besought the LORD at that time, saying, 24. O Lord GOD, thou hast begun to shew thy servant thy greatness, and thy strong hand:
for what god is there in heaven or in earth,
that can do according to thy works, and according to thy mighty acts? 25. Let me go over, I pray thee, and see the good land that is beyond Jordan, that goodly mountain, and Lebanon.

as one compact mountain mass—a thing of surpassing beauty to his mind; cf. XI, 11. The three great landmarks in his life were all connected with mountains. Horeb, where he was called to be the Leader of his people; Sinai, whence issued forth the Divine Proclamation for all time of the Law of conduct; and Nebo, the peak from which he was to behold the Promised Land from afar.

Throughout the Hebrew Scriptures we find a deep love of mountains and mountain scenery. The Rabbis even introduced a special Blessing to be recited on beholding lofty mountains; Authorised Prayer Book p. 290. All this is something quite exceptional in the Ancient World. No Greek could have written Psalm CXXI, I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills; and no Roman could have exclaimed with the Prophet, Hear, O ye mountains, the LORD's controversy, and ye enduring foundations of the earth (Micah VI). "The Greeks cared nothing for their native ranges; and the Romans were disgustingly practical, and regarded the Alps as an inconvenient barrier to conquest and commerce" (A. Lunn). Ruskin, who is supreme in modern times among the revealers of the glory and mystery of mountain landscape, largely drew his inspiration from the Hebrew Bible, which his mother taught him to read daily.

Lebanon. In the clear air of Palestine, the summit of Lebanon, the most prominent of all the mountains in Syria and Palestine, is visible from the plains of Moab.

For their sakes, therefore, it was impossible to overlook it." (Dummelow).

Beth-peor. This v. ends the historical review in the First Discourse that began in I, 6. Accordingly the valley "over against Beth-peor" must define more closely the location mentioned in I, 5, "beyond Jordan, in the land of Moab."

CHAPTER IV, 1–40

The historical review in the preceding three chapters is now followed by an eloquent appeal not to forget what they had seen and heard at Horeb. The Divine Law, if obeyed, shall be their wisdom and understanding in the sight of the peoples. Let them remember the marvellous events at Horeb, and keep far from all idolatry. Idolatry

26. But the LORD was wroth with me for your sakes, and hearkened not unto me: and the LORD said unto me, Let it suffice thee; speak no more unto me of this matter. 27. Get thee up into the top of Pisgah, and lift up thine eyes westward, and northward, and southward, and eastward, and behold with thine eyes: for thou shalt not go over this Jordan. 28. But charge Joshua, and encourage him, and strengthen him:
for he shall go over before this people, and he shall cause them to inherit the land which thou shalt see. 29. So we abode in the valley over against Beth-peor.

would inevitably be followed by exile. Nevertheless, even in exile, if they sought God in contrition and repentance, they would find Him. Moses concludes with an appeal to their experience of the uniqueness of their God, and pleads for whole-hearted obedience of Him.

1–4. An appeal to their experience that should have taught them the disastrous consequences of disobedience. As to the idea of reward and punishment which pervades this and the succeeding chapters, see on XI, 13.

"engraved decrees"; originally referring to enactments passed by an authoritative body, engraven upon a stone tablet, and exposed in public for the information and guidance of the people. According to the Traditional explanation, chukkim are the precepts the reason for the observance of which is withheld from us; such as the prohibition of swine's flesh. One of their main objects is to inculcate discipline and obedience in the heart of every member of the Holy People. "To obey is better than sacrifice" (I Sam. XV, 22).

judgements. Or, "ordinances"; judicial decisions arrived at in connection with a matter which had not previously been adjudicated upon, such decisions remaining precedents for the future. The phrase חקים ומשפטים is a standing one in Deuteronomy, but always חקים comes before משפטים; in order to indicate the basic importance of unquestioning obedience to the Divine Will.

The same God was imposing His commandments upon them, and would reward their fidelity and punish their disobedience in the years to come.

or make it more palatable to human selfishness and desire" (Dillmann). That, however, does not imply that the enactments of the Mosaic code could never be added to or modified as new conditions warranted the change, provided all such modifications were not proclaimed as new revelations from on High (Joseph Karo). "Israel was not to invent additions to the laws, nor arbitrarily diminish them; e.g. using five species, instead of four, in observing the command of the Lulav, or placing five fringes on a Tallis" (Rashi); see on XIII, 1.

4. ye that did cleave. Or, "ye that cleave." The Heb. דבק is used in connection with whole-souled, disinterested love; e.g. to describe Jonathan's loyal affection for David. This v. has been taken over into the Liturgy, and is recited immediately before the Reading of the Law in the synagogue.

5–8. Israel's greatness and wisdom will be manifest in obedience of the Divine Commandment.

5. I have taught you. The past tense is somewhat strange after the participle used in v. 1. However, this was not the first occasion on which Moses had proclaimed the Divine enactments. He is now merely recapitulating. "When you reach the goal of your wanderings, remember that I have taught you statutes and judgements for you to observe in the midst of the land" (Nachmanides).

as the Lord my God commanded me. The Jewish teacher is commanded to teach the statutes and judgements to young and old in Israel (Hirsch). For many centuries it was held that teaching had to be free, without the taint of pecuniary remuneration. Hence the astounding phenomenon that the greatest Doctors of the Talmudic Academies were artisans and handicraftsmen, who eked out their living from these occupations. It was only under the stress of persecution and economic necessity that at last, in the 15th century, some rabbis were compelled to take salaries in compensation for the time which they otherwise might have devoted to find their sustenance.

6. keep therefore and do them. Better, take ye heed to do them (Koenig).

this. i.e. your faithful observance of the Divine commandments.

in the sight of the peoples. In the estimation of the peoples. So it actually came to pass both in the Ancient and Modern World. After Alexander's conquest of Asia, enlightened Greeks looked upon the Jews as "philosophers of the East," because of their unique monotheism (G. A. Smith).

5. Behold, I have taught you statutes and judgements, even as the LORD my God commanded me, that ye should do so in the midst of the land whither ye go in to possess it. 6. Keep therefore and do them ; for this is your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the peoples,
which shall hear all these statutes, and say, Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people. 7. For what great nation is there, that hath God so nigh unto them, as the LORD our God is whensoever we call upon

But the aggrandisement of Israel was not an end in itself: it was to demonstrate to the children of men the Divine in Human History. The sudden rise to power of a horde of slaves, their well-government, prosperity and security, would attract attention. The peoples would ask, What is the secret of Israel's greatness ? And, discovering that it rested upon fidelity to the Will of God, they might be induced to pay allegiance to the God of Israel. "We have here in substance the idea of the missionary purpose of Israel's existence" (Oettli) ; cf. I Kings x, 1–3 ; Isa. II, 1–3. This idea was developed, and frequently emphasised, in Prophetic and Rabbinic literature.

7. so nigh unto them. Israel's religion is unique because of the nearness of man to his Maker that it teaches. It proclaims, No intermediary of any sort is required for the worshipper to approach his God in prayer. "The LORD is nigh unto all them that call upon Him, to all that call upon Him in truth," is the teaching of the Psalmist. The Rabbis only deepened the teaching of Prophets and Psalmists on this head. The charge often brought against Judaism that it knows only a "distant God" is thus without any foundation.

8. what great nation is there, that hath statutes and judgements so righteous? Israel's religion is likewise unique through the ethical character and righteousness of its laws for the government of human society. Cardinal Faulhaber, after reviewing the poor-laws, the rights of labour, and the administration of justice found in the Pentateuch, placed the following alternative before the Nazi detractors of the Hebrew Scriptures: either such laws are Divinely inspired, or they are the product of a people endowed above all other peoples with positive genius for ethical and social values! "The cradle of humanity," he declared, "is not in Greece; it is in Palestine. Those who do not regard these books as the word of God and as Divine revelation, must admit that Israel is the super-people in the history of the world!" For the tribute to Israel paid a generation before Faulhaber by Leo Tolstoy, see Genesis, p. 113.

9–24. "Lest ye forget" that the basic principle of God's Law is the spirituality of God and His abhorrence of all idolatrous representation of Him.

9. keep thy soul diligently. lit. "guard well thy life." The survival of the nation depends on Israel's memory of and loyalty to the Law of Sinai.

LORD said unto me, Assemble me the people,

they may learn to fear me all the days that they live upon the earth, and that they may teach their children. 11. And ye came near and stood make them known unto thy children. A second command: These things must also be kept alive in the memory of posterity, so that future generations do not lose their spiritual identity and sink back into heathenism. This transcendent duty towards children and children's children is repeated with the utmost emphasis throughout Deuteronomy. Eventually such insistence on the sacred obligation of religious education led to the first efforts in the world's history to provide elementary instruction to all the children of the community: see p. 503. For the content of the religious education that should be accorded to each Jewish child, see p. 153.

10. the day . . . in Horeb. When Israel was consecrated as a "kingdom of priests." The twofold obligation is insisted upon: first, they are to learn God's Will and shape their lives in accordance therewith; secondly, to teach their children the Divine Will, so that they too may shape their lives in the light of that Will.

lift up thine eyes unto heaven. The heavenly luminaries exercised a great fascination upon early man. "Astronomy and adoration entered the world together" (Martineau). The "host of heaven" was the dominant influence in Babylonian religion. The Egyptians also reverenced the sun, the moon, and the stars as symbols of deities. Associated with this worship was also the superstition that the heavenly bodies influenced the lives of mortals, a superstition which is not yet altogether extinct.

unto all the peoples. To be worshipped by them (some Talmud teachers, Rashbam, and Mendelssohn).

RELIGIOUS TOLERANCE

God had suffered the heathens to worship the sun, moon and stars as a stepping-stone to a higher stage of religious belief. That worship of the heathen nations thus forms part of God's guidance of humanity. But as for the Israelites, God had given them first-hand knowledge of Him through the medium of Revelation. It is for this reason that idolatry was for them an unpardonable offence; and everything that might seduce them from that Divine Revelation was to be ruthlessly destroyed. Hence the amazing tolerance shown by Judaism of all ages towards the followers of other cults, so long as these were not steeped in immorality and crime. Thus the Prophet Malachi declares even the sacrificial offering of heathens to be a glorification of God (see on Mal. I, 11. Genesis, p. 474). Equally striking is the attitude of the Rabbis toward the heathen world. War had been declared against Canaanites not because of matters of dogma or ritual, but because of the savage cruelty and foul licentiousness of their lives and cult. But the Rabbis never regarded the heathens of their own day as on the same moral level with the Canaanites. Their contemporary heathens in the Roman and Persian Empires obeyed the laws of conduct which the Rabbis deemed vital to the existence of human society, the so-called "seven commandments given to the children of Noah" (see Genesis, p. 81). They wisely held that in their religious life these heathens merely followed the traditional worship which they had inherited from their fathers before them (מנהג אבותיהן בידיהן), and they could not therefore be held responsible for failure to reach a true notion of the Unity of God, בני נח לא נוזהרו על השיתוף. Such followers of other faiths—they taught—were judged by God purely by their moral life. חסידי אומות העולם יש להם חלק לעולם הבא. "The righteous of all nations have a share in the world to come," and are heirs of immortality, alongside the righteous in Israel. A later Midrash proclaimed: "I call heaven and earth to witness that, whether it be Jew or heathen, man or woman, freeman or bondman—only according to their acts does the Divine spirit rest upon them." And in the darkest days of the Middle Ages, Solomon ibn Gabirol, the great philosopher and Synagogue hymn-writer, sang

"Thou art the Lord,
And all beings are Thy servants, Thy domain;
And through those who serve idols vain
Thine honour is not detracted from,
For they all aim to Thee to come."

This is probably the earliest enunciation of religious tolerance in Western Europe.

It cannot be renounced by Israel; "and that which cometh into your mind shall not be at all; in that ye say, We will be as the nations, as the families of the countries, to serve wood and stone. As I live, saith the LORD God, surely with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out, will I be king over you" (Ezekiel xx, 32–33). Lord of the Universe—Moses prayed—the bones of Joseph shall rest in the Holy Land, why then shall I not enter it? A "JEALOUS" GOD a jealous God. The Heb. el kanna means, "a zealous God," full of zeal for holiness and justice, to Whom man's doings and dealings are not a matter of indifference, but Who renders strict retribution for all idolatry and iniquity. It also means, "a jealous God." That may appear a startling description of God. It signifies that God claims the exclusive love of His children, their entire sincerity,—and complete self-surrender. He will not allow the veneration and loyalty due to Him alone to be shared with other objects of worship; see on Exod. xx, 5.

This conception of "a jealous God" saved Israel from going under in the days of ancient heathendom, as well as in the days of Greece and Rome. "None of the founders of the great heathen religions had any inkling of this idea of a jealous God, a God who would have 'none other gods,' a God of terrible Truth who would not tolerate any lurking belief in magic, witchcraft, or old customs, or any sacrificing to the god-king, or any trifling with the stern unity of things" (H. G. Wells).

Our fathers' realisation that truth can make no concession to untruth, nor enter into compromise with it, without self-surrender, is responsible for the religious stand they took up in the days of Greece and Rome. "When Jerusalem fell, Rome was quite prepared to give the God of Israel a place in her Pantheon. Israel absolutely refused such religious annexation: the one, unique and universal God of Israel alone was a living God; Jupiter and his like were things of naught, figments of the imagination. And the same reasons that would not permit the Jews to bend the knee to the gods of pagan Rome, prevented them in later generations from allowing themselves to be absorbed by the two great Religions that issued from Israel's bosom. Here too they found, both in dogma and morality, novelties and concessions that were repugnant to the austere simplicity of their absolute monotheism" (T. Reinach).

And the blessed doctrine of "a jealous God" is of vital importance for the Jew's attitude towards the neo-paganism of to-day and to-morrow. "Judaism's mission is just as much to teach the world that there are false gods and false ideals, as it is to bring it nearer to the true one. Abraham,

25–31. RENEWED WARNING OF IDOLATRY: THREAT OF EXILE, WITH PROMISE OF GRACE ON REPENTANCE

Though they have been long in the land, exile would be their lot and they would be scattered among the peoples, if they fell away from the LORD. But even in those days of tribulation God's mercy would not forsake His people, if they turned to Him in true penitence. If they sought the LORD, they should find Him, and they would once again receive the tokens of His favour.

25. ye shall have been long in the land. And your long continuance results in a loss of vigour, due to unbroken peace and prosperity. "Prosperity sometimes acts like a narcotic, and sends the soul to sleep" (Dummelow). The Hebrew word is not וזקנתם "to grow old and increase in wisdom" (זקן, זה שקנה חכמה), but ונושנתם, lit. "to grow stale." They must not imagine that having dwelt for many centuries in Canaan, their tenure was now fixed, and they could neglect the conditions of the Covenant with impunity. (Benjamin Szold makes the opening words כי תוליד, "when thou shalt beget," to be equivalent to גם כי תוליד, "even when thou shalt beget").

ye shall soon utterly perish. Not that every individual would be destroyed, but that the national life would be brought to an end ; see next v.

But in exile the Israelite would sink to the level of fetish-worshippers and grovel to idols of wood and stone (Hoffmann). This very lowering of moral standards called forth a spiritual reaction among the religiously-minded " remnant " in the Exile.

And that search must be with the sinner's whole heart and soul. Sincere repentance always and everywhere secures the Divine Mercy. It would

32–40. The Uniqueness of the God of Israel

Again there is an appeal to history to justify the Divine claims. From the beginning of time, from one end of heaven to the other, no nation had experienced the unparalleled redemption and revelation that were vouchsafed unto Israel. "He hath not dealt so with any other nation" (Psalm cxlvii, 20).

33. and live. The idea often finds expression in Scripture that man cannot have direct communication with God and survive; Exod. xxxiii, 20.

34. assayed . . . to take him a nation. Or, "adventured" or, "attempted," to select a nation for His special service. A bold anthropomorphism that gives striking expression to the profound thought that Israel is, so to speak, "a Divine experiment in history" (M. Lazarus).

For ask now of the days that are past, which were before thee, since the day that God created man upon the earth, and from the one end of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any such thing as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it? 33. Did ever people hear the voice of God speaking out of the midst of the fire, as thou hast heard, and live? 34. Or hath God assayed to go and take him a nation from the midst of another nation, by trials, by signs, and by wonders, and by war, and by a mighty hand, and by a stretched out arm, and by great terrors, according to all that the LORD your God did for you in Egypt before your eyes? 35. Unto thee it was shewed, that thou mightest know that the LORD he is God; there is none else beside him. 36. Out a mighty hand. The Biblical term to denote any Divine intervention in history (Koenig).

great terrors. e.g. the heaping of the waters at the Red Sea. An old Jewish interpretation, found in the Septuagint and the Passover Haggadah, understands this phrase to refer to God's self-manifestation (גילוי שכינה).

35. it was shewed. The experience of God's unique power was first-hand with them, and not derived from speculation or hearsay. Yehudah Hallevi bases on this circumstance the supreme credibility of the Revelation at Sinai: it took place before an entire people.

there is none else beside him. A clear expression of absolute monotheism; repeated in v. 39; VI, 4; VII, 9; X, 17; and XXXII, 39. A Talmudical note on these words is, "not even magical powers"; i.e. the Israelites were to put no faith in witchcraft.

39. know therefore. This v. and the one following form the peroration of the First Discourse, and summarise the lesson to be learnt from all that has gone before. According to most expositors, this First Discourse gives the historical framework and instruction for the new legislation. The aged Lawgiver exhorts the people to gratitude towards God (I, 6–III, 29), and closes with solemn warnings of the dangers of idolatry that threaten them on entering the Promised Land (IV, 1–40). v. 39 has been introduced into the Oleynoo, the closing prayer of every Synagogue Service.

41–43. Moses Assigns Three Cities of Refuge East of Jordan

The presence of these verses between the First and Second Discourses of Moses offers considerable difficulty, except on the interpretation of Luzzatto; cf I, 5, p. 8. Having finished the exposition of the words, it is eleven days' journey from Horeb by the way of Mount Seir unto Kadesh-barnea (I, 2), Moses records that he thereupon set aside the three Cities of Refuge, thus completing the establishment of a portion of Israel on the east of Jordan.

B. MOSES' SECOND DISCOURSE

1. Foundations of the Covenant

(Chapters IV, 44–XI)

From iv, 44 to the end of xi, the Second Discourse, deals with the religious foundations of the Covenant, the spirit in which it is to be kept, and the motives to that right obedience. It defines the relationship between God and Israel, and emphasises the basic spiritual demands that such relationship imposes upon Israel. Moses solemnly repeats to the new generation that faces him the Ten Commandments given at Sinai; proclaims the Unity of God, together with the Israelite's duty to love Him with all his heart, soul and might; and urges that the same love towards God must be implanted in the hearts of the children.

Jordan toward the sunrising; 42. that the man-slayer might flee thither, which slayeth his neighbour unawares, and hated him not in time past; and that fleeing unto one of these cities he might live: 43. namely, Bezer in the wilderness in the table land country, for the Reubenites; and Ramoth in Gilead, for the Gadites; and Golan in Bashan, for the Manassites.

44. And this is the law which Moses set before

That covenant shall be their distinction among the nations. Moses surveys the forty years of Providential mercies in the Wilderness, and also the succession of murmurings and rebellions. Not for their own righteousness will they conquer, but because of the oath sworn to their Fathers. Let Israel ever keep in mind the lessons of the Wilderness, lest it forget God and perish like the nations whom it is about to dispossess. No truce of any sort is to be made with the peoples of Canaan and their foul and inhuman cults. The "jealousy" of the holy God will brook no departure from His Covenant. But with jealousy is found His mercy that shall be theirs in the future as in the past. If Israel faithfully keeps God's commandments, the Land of Promise will enjoy the rain of heaven and be dowered with prosperity. Israel is, in conclusion, solemnly reminded of the alternatives—the Blessing and the Curse—now offered for its acceptance.

Chapter IV, 44–49. Title, Time and Place of the Discourse

44. this is the law. "Which he is about to set before them in chapters XII–XXVI" (Rashi). This v. is recited by the congregation when the Sefer Torah is held up after the Reading. In most rites, the words "according to the commandment of the Lord by the hand of Moses" are also added.

life, and the very foundation for all human conduct. The Ten Words formed the basis for the new precepts now to be promulgated (Hoffmann). Moses pronounces the Commandments one by one, as delivered by the Divine Voice amid fire and darkness. He also recalls the impression made on the people by what they had heard—their pledge to do whatever the LORD commanded them, and His approval of their words.

1. learn them, and observe to do. Knowledge is an essential pre-requisite to performance; it is not to be an end in itself; see on IV, 1.

3. not . . . with our fathers. "The Covenant was entered into only with the coming generation, as the fathers would die in the wilderness" (Abarbanel). Others understand the words to mean, "not with our fathers alone"; the Covenant survived the men with whom it was made, and possessed binding force upon all future generations.

saying. The Ten Words now following are almost, but not absolutely, a verbatim repetition of the Decalogue as given in Exod. xx. Being part of an exhortation addressed to a new generation, the Lawgiver does not hesitate to expand, or even alter, the wording of the Commandments, for the sake of emphasis. In brief, the version in Deuteronomy is more rhetorical, more homiletical, than that in Exod. xx. For the full exposition of the Decalogue see Exodus, p. 210–237. Only additional comments are here given.

6. THE FIRST COMMANDMENT

The Israelites are to recognise that unlike the deities worshipped by the benighted heathens around them—local nature-gods bound to the soil and its products—the God of Israel is the universal ruler of History, the God who redeemed them from Egyptian slavery.

6. I am the LORD thy God. Or, " I, the LORD, am thy God." The word " LORD " is the current translation of the Divine Name of four letters (YHWH) as the eternal Power that guides the destinies of men and nations ; see Genesis, p. 16.

thy God. The suffix thy refers to " Israel " collectively, and at the same time to each Israelite individually ; as is evident from its use in " Honour thy father and thy mother." The Midrash says : " Even as thousands may look at a great portrait and each one feel that it looks at him, so every Israelite at Horeb felt that the Divine Voice was addressing him."

v. 10. מצותי ק

7–10. SECOND COMMANDMENT

7. before me. Or, "beside me." In addition to Him; see the opening v. of the Shema, VI, 4. The monotheism must be absolute. Others translate, "to my face;" i.e. to provoke Him. The provocation is the greater, because these gods are unreal.

8. the likeness of any form. Extends the term "graven image" to "the likeness of any form." v. 7 prohibits the worship of other gods; v. 8 prohibits the worship of the true God under the form of any image. Hoffmann thinks that the variation in the Heb. text from the form in Exodus was made in view of the sin of the Golden Calf that followed the giving of the Decalogue. The present version makes it clearer that every "manner of likeness" comes within the category of "graven image," and therefore of idolatry.

in heaven above. The heavenly bodies worshipped by many nations.

in the earth beneath. Such as the sacred bulls of the Egyptians.

9. nor serve them. lit. "thou shalt not be induced to serve them," the grammatical form being Hophal (Koenig). Only such sculpture or plastic reproduction as would become objects of idolatrous worship is prohibited here. Hence, the presence of the cherubim in the Tabernacle,

7. Thou shalt have none other gods before me.
8. Thou shalt not make unto thee a graven image, the likeness of any form that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth: 9. thou shalt not bow down thyself unto them, nor serve them: for I the LORD thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the third and upon the fourth generation of them that hate me; 10. and shewing mercy unto thousands, of them that love me and keep my commandments.
11. Thou shalt not take the name of the LORD thy God in vain: for the LORD will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain.

and the twelve bronze bullocks under the basin in the Temple. Against art within its own sphere, monotheism wages no war; see Exodus, p. 412. "It is against the illusions and the lies of pictures of God that monotheism is relentless in its struggle. Every picture is an image of a prototype. But does there exist a prototype of the Divine that can be embodied in a picture? Pictures of God must accordingly be pictures of something other than God—of a something other to which the signification of God is given" (Hermann Cohen).

a jealous God. See on IV, 24.

and upon the third. In Exod. "and" is omitted.

11. THIRD COMMANDMENT

Avoid oaths. For the sacred obligations of sincerity in speech, see VOWS AND VOWING IN JUDAISM, Numbers, p. 310.

11. in vain. Heb. לשוא, which may mean either, "for vanity," or, "for falsehood." The Jerusalem Targum prefaces its translation of this prohibition with the words, "O my People, my People, House of Israel, swear not by the Name of the LORD thy God for vanity; and swear not by

My Name and lie." Every oath, even if a true oath, should be avoided, is the teaching of the Rabbis. It is not generally known that many in Israel have in every age followed the principle of "Swear not at all," except when a Court of Law exacts an oath in order to ensure the ends of justice. To this day, pious men in Eastern Jewries suffer considerable pecuniary loss rather than enforce their plea by an oath. And it is the practice of a Beth Din to discourage oaths, in the rare instances where one of the litigants insists on the oath being administered.

12–15. FOURTH COMMANDMENT

12. observe. Heb. שמור; in Exod. זכור "remember." Tradition explains that the latter refers to the positive precepts in connection with the Sabbath, to its sanctification by wine, prayer and Sabbath joy; whereas "observe" the Sabbath means, refraining from any desecration through labour by self or dependents. Hence, the addition here concerning the resting of servants and the reminder of the bondage in Egypt (Biur). Tradition also says, "that both words observe and remember were communicated by God simultaneously;" i.e. the fourth commandment in Deuteronomy, though different in form, does not imply anything that has not been revealed by God on Mount Sinai. Moses uses the stronger word here, because in his exhortation he has a practical object in view; viz., the observance of God's commands by the people.

as the LORD thy God commanded thee. These words are not in Exodus, being a rhetorical amplification. The reference is to Marah, Exod. xv, 23–27.

12. Observe the sabbath day, to keep it holy,
as the Lord thy God commanded thee. 13. Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work:
14. but the seventh day is a sabbath unto the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thine ox, nor thine ass, nor any of thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates; that thy man-servant and thy maidservant may rest as well as thou. 15. And thou shalt remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and the

14. nor thine ox, nor thine ass, nor any of thy cattle. In place of this detailed enumeration, appropriate to an oration, Exod. has simply, "nor thy cattle." Care and kindness to cattle are of such profound importance for the humanising of man that this duty has its place in the Decalogue. The Rabbis classed cruelty to animals among the most serious of offences; see Kindness to Animals, p. 302.

that thy manservant . . . thou. This is not in Exod; but is an explanatory addition.

as well as thou. Heb. כמוך. The slave is to have the same right to his Sabbath-rest as the master. Sabbath-rest thus proclaims the equality of master and man.

15. thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt. This is the most important divergence between the two versions. According to Exod. the Sabbath was ordained in commemoration of the six days of creation, "wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it." Man was on that day to set aside the material cares that absorb his attention on the six days of toil. Judaism "proclaims a truce once in seven days to all personal anxieties and degrading thoughts about the means of subsistence and success in life, and bids us meet together to indulge in larger thoughts. In countries where life is a hard struggle, what more precious, more priceless public benefit can be imagined than this breathing time, this recurring armistice between man and the hostile powers that beset his life, this solemn Sabbatic festival ?" (J. R. Seeley). There was, however, another lesson for mankind to learn from the Sabbath institution. The Israelites in Egypt slaved day after day without a rest. By ceasing from toil one day in seven, they would distinguish their work from slavery. And in their new life in the Promised Land they were to avoid imposing upon others what had been so bitter to them.

16. FIFTH COMMANDMENT

16. commanded thee. The phrase, "as the LORD thy God commanded thee," is new in Deuteronomy, as is also "and that it may go well with thee." The latter stresses the truth that a sound national life can only result from a sound family life within the State.

17. SIXTH, SEVENTH AND EIGHTH COMMANDMENTS

17. murder . . . neighbour. These Commandments are here connected by the conjunction "and"; to indicate that these crimes are to some extent linked together, and that he who breaks one of them is not unlikely to break one of the others as well (Friedlander).

LORD thy God brought thee out thence by a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm: therefore the LORD thy God commanded thee to keep the sabbath day.

16. Honour thy father and thy mother, as the LORD thy God commanded thee: that thy days may be long, and that it may go well with thee, upon the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

17. Thou shalt do no murder.
Neither shalt thou commit adultery.
Neither shalt thou steal.
Neither shalt thou bear false witness against thy neighbour.

°18. Neither shalt thou covet thy neighbour's wife; neither shalt thou desire thy neighbour's house, his field, or his manservant, or his maid-servant, his ox, or his ass, or any thing that is thy neighbour's.*ivs; va false witness. A different Heb. word is here used for "false" witness—the same as occurs in v. 11 for "vain."

18. TENTH COMMANDMENT

18. covet . . . neighbour's. The prohibition of coveting a man's wife is here made separate from "desiring" (a different word, not ocurring in Exod.) his possessions—a fundamental distinction of far-reaching moral consequence. There is also new mention of "his field," an appropriate addition for a people about to enter upon the inheritance of their Land.

v. 4. ע׳ ד׳ רבתי

THE SHEMA

The Oneness of God and Israel's Undivided Loyalty to Him

4–9. After the repetition of the story of the Giving of the Ten Commandments, Moses proceeds to declare the other great foundation of the Torah; viz., the oneness of God and Israel's undivided loyalty to Him.

The opening v. of this paragraph, called after its first Heb. word Shema, sounds the keynote of all Judaism, and has been its watchword and confession of faith throughout the ages. Here the fundamental Truth of the Unity of God is proclaimed. It is followed in v. 5–9 by the fundamental Duty founded upon that Truth; viz., the devotion to Him of the Israelite's whole being. He is bidden to love God with heart, soul and might; to remember all the commandments and instruct his children therein; to recite the words of God when retiring or rising; to bind those words on the arm and the head, and to inscribe them on his door-posts and the city gates. "The later leaders of Jewry showed their spiritual insight when they gave the place they did to this high and winsome message" (Welch). See Additional Note A, The Shema: its meaning and history, p. 100–111.

In the Liturgy, the Shema is said twice daily, and consists of three sections; Deut. vi, 4–9; xi, 13–21; and Num. xv, 37–41. The second section, Deut. xi, 13–21, contains the promise of reward for the fulfilment of the laws, and of punishment for their transgression. The third section, Num. xv, 37–41, enacts the law concerning the tzitzith, as a warning against following the evil inclinations of the heart, and an exhortation to submit to the laws of God in remembrance of the exodus from Egypt.

4. HEAR, O ISRAEL: THE LORD IS OUR GOD, THE LORD IS ONE:

4. Hear, O Israel: the LORD is our God, the LORD is One. Heb. שמע ישראל ד׳ אלהינו ד׳ אחד. This translation is given by Sifri, the Septuagint, and nearly every Jewish translator and commentator. It sums up the teaching of the First and Second Commandments; The LORD is our God, and He is One. The other current Jewish translation, "Hear, O Israel, the LORD our God, the LORD is One" is less acceptable; for if the declaration only enunciated the Divine Unity, it would be sufficient to have said, "Hear, O Israel, the LORD our God is One." Some moderns follow Rashbam's translation: "Hear, O Israel, the LORD is our God, the LORD alone."

In the Heb. the ע of שמע and the ד of אחד are written large. The reason for the ד is evident; it is to distinguish אחד "one" from אחר "another god," just as the ר in אחר (Exod. xxxiv, 14) is written large, in order that by error one should not utter the blasphemy לא תשתחוה לאל אחד "thou shalt not bow down to the one God." The reason that induced the Scribes to write the ע in שמע large may possibly be due to the fear of an interchange in their day with שמא, "perhaps," and avoid the resulting infidel statement of "Perhaps, O Israel, the LORD is our God" (Hirsch). These two large letters from the word עד "witness." Every Israelite by pronouncing the Shema becomes one of God's witnesses, testifying to His Unity before the world.

the LORD is our God. The Heb. is the Divine Name of Four Letters, the Father and Sustainer of the lives and ה וְאָהַבְתָּ אֵת יְהוָה אֱלֹהֶיךָ בְּכָל־לְבָבְךָ וּבְכָל־נַפְשְׁךָ וּבְכָל־מְאֹדֶךָ׃

spirits of all flesh, the everlasting Power Who guides the destinies of men and nations.

the Lord is One. "In the opening v. of the Shema we have a third revelation of God's being. In Gen. xvii, He is made known to us as Almighty; in Exod. vi, as Eternal; and now as the One" (Philippson). He is One, because there is no other God than He; but He is also One, because He is wholly unlike anything else in existence. He is therefore not only One, but the Sole and Unique God.

One. Heb. echad. Therefore to Him alone it is right to pray, and not to any being besides Him. The belief that God is made up of several personalities, such as the Christian belief in the Trinity, is a departure from the pure conception of the Unity of God. Israel has throughout the ages rejected everything that marred or obscured the conception of pure monotheism it had given the world, and rather than abandon that pure monotheism, rather than admit any weakening of it, Jews were prepared to wander, to suffer, to die; see p. 105–109.

5. and thou shalt love. This is the first instance in human history that the love of God was demanded in any religion. The love of God is the distinctive mark of His true worshippers. The worshipper, as he declares the Unity of God, thereby lovingly and unconditionally surrenders his mind and heart to God's holy will. Such spiritual surrender is called, "taking upon oneself the yoke of the kingdom of heaven," קבלת עול מלכות שמים. If the Unity of God is the basis of the Jewish creed, the love of God is to be the basis of the Jewish life. And the noblest spiritual surrender and love of God, the Rabbis held, was so to live and act toward our fellowmen as to make God and His Torah beloved in their eyes.

"The meaning of the love of God is that a man should be longing and yearning after the nearness of God, blessed be He, and striving to reach His holiness, in the same manner as he would pursue any object for which he feels a strong passion. He should feel that bliss and delight in mentioning His name, in uttering His praises and in occupying himself with the words of the Torah, which a lover feels towards the wife of his youth, or the father towards his only son.

5. and thou shalt love the LORD thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might.

The earlier saints attained to such disinterested love of God; as King David said in Psalm XLII, 2, 'As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after Thee, O God'" (Moses Chayim Luzzatto).

"When the soul sinks in the depths of awe, the spark of the love of God breaks out in flames, and the inward joy increases. Such lovers of God desire only to accomplish His holy will, and lead others unto righteousness" (Eleazar of Worms).

with all thine heart. Because there is one God, we must give Him undivided allegiance. "The One God demands the whole of man" (Smend). The Rabbis explain with all thine heart, to mean "with all thy desires, including the evil inclination"; i.e. make thy earthly passions and ambitions instruments in the service of God.

with all thy soul. We should be prepared to give up our dearest wishes and inclinations for the love of God. The Rabbis take the words with all thy soul to mean "with thy whole life;" i.e. love Him with thy heart's last drop of blood, and give up thy life for God, if He requires it. The classical example is that of Rabbi Akiba. He longed for the sublime moment when his daily profession of the love of God might be put to the proof and confirmed by act. That moment came when, after his noble part in the last Jewish War of Independence against Imperial Rome, the Roman executioner was tearing his flesh with combs of iron. "All my days," Akiba told his weeping disciples, "I have longed for this moment when it is given me to love God with my whole life. I loved Him with all my heart, and I loved Him with all my might; now that I have the opportunity of loving Him with all my soul, shall I not rejoice?" It was such understanding of the words of the Shema that gave the Jewish martyrs throughout the ages the comfort and courage to lay down their lives for their Faith. Bachya tells of a medieval Jewish saint who used to pray, "My God, thou hast given me over to starvation and penury. Into the depth of darkness hast Thou plunged me, and Thy might and strength Thou hast taught me. But even if they burn me with fire, only the more will I love

6 וְהָיוּ הַדְּבָרִים הָאֵלֶּה אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מְצַוְּךָ הַיּוֹם עַל־לְבָבֶךָ׃

Thee and rejoice in Thee." Such spiritual surrender, is of course, without any thought of reward or punishment in the Hereafter. As another of the saints boldly expressed it, "I have no wish for Thy Paradise, nor any desire for the bliss in the world to come. I want Thee and Thee alone."

On the duty of martyrdom, see Leviticus, p. 175. The supreme sacrifice, however, is demanded only to avoid idolatry, incest and murder.

with all thy might. With the full concentration of feeling and power. One Rabbinic explanation is, "with whatever lot Providence has assigned to thee"; i.e. love Him in times of bliss and happiness, and in times of distress and misfortune. Another explanation of with all thy might is "with all thy possessions;" i.e. despite whatever material sacrifice thy loyalty to Israel's God and Torah might entail. An eighteenth century moralist understood "with all thy possessions" to mean, "even when great wealth is thine" (Panim Yafoth).

6. these words. In v. 4 and 5; viz., the Unity of God and the duty of undivided allegiance to Him, as the epitome of the teaching of the Book.

upon thine heart. The heart is conceived as a tablet on which these Divine words shall be inscribed; cf. Jer. XXXI, 32, 33.

7. teach them diligently. lit. "prick them in"; so that the words remain indelibly upon their hearts. "Let them have a clear, and not a confused or stammering, knowledge of the duties and teachings of their Faith" (Sifri); see p. 151.

6. And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be upon thine heart: 7. and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. 8. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be for frontlets between thine eyes.

example to his household; and he should also be gentle with them, and not overawe them" (Zohar).

when thou liest down. The Rabbis based on this the institution of Evening Prayer. It consists of the Shema, preceded by two Benedictions (the one, referring to the Divine ordering of day and night, המעריב ערבים; and the second, eulogising the love of God shown in the revelation of the Torah, אהבת עולם). The Shema is also followed by two Benedictions (the proclamation of faith, אמת ואמונה; and the prayer for peaceful repose, השכיבנו). The Service continues with the Amidah (the Eighteen Benedictions—three Blessings of Praise; twelve (now thirteen) Petitions; and three Blessings of Thanks) and Oleynoo. The Shema is also recited before retiring to rest. To fill one's mind with high and noble thoughts is a wise preparation for the hours of darkness. "The Shema is a double-edged sword against all the terrors and temptations of the night" (Talmud).

when thou risest up. Hence the institution of the Morning Shema. It is preceded by two Benedictions, and followed by one. These Benedictions are 1) a eulogy of God as the Creator of the light of day, יוצר אור; 2) a eulogy of God as Giver of the Torah, אהבה רבה; and 3) a eulogy of God as the Redeemer of Israel, גואל ישראל. Immediately thereafter come the Eighteen Benedictions. On some days, Tachanun and the Reading of the Torah follow. The Service concludes with Oleynoo, Kaddish and some psalms.

8. bind them. See Exodus, p. 144, for the precept of Tephillin. The wording of v. 8 and 9 are not to be taken as a figure of speech. "It seems on the whole to be more probable that the injunction is intended to be carried out literally; and that some material, visible expression of the Israelite's creed is referred to" (Driver).

9. write them upon the door posts. By means of the mezuzah affixed to the door-post in Jewish homes. The mezuzah is placed in a metal or glass case, and fixed to the right-hand door-post of the outer entrance of every dwelling room in the house. It contains this section of the Shema and XI, 13–20. The word שדי, "Almighty," written on the back of the parchment, is rendered visible by means of a small opening in the case. The mezuzah is a symbol of God's watchful care over the house and its dwellers. It is a solemn reminder to all who go out and in, that the house is devoted to the ideals of the Shema.

I. Abrahams thus sums up the basic importance of Deut. VI, 4–9:—"It enshrines the fundamental dogma (monotheism), the fundamental duty (love), the fundamental discipline (study of the Law), and the fundamental method (union of 'letter' and 'spirit'), of the Jewish Religion."

The pleasantness of their inheritance in the New Land might breed forgetfulness of their dependence upon the goodness of God, and a disposition to follow the gods of the surrounding nations.

13. thou shalt fear the LORD thy God. This command is complementary to VI, 5 "thou shalt love the LORD thy God." Love and fear of God combined constitute the highest reverence. "The fear of God acts as a powerful deterrent from evil; the love of God, as the highest incentive to living in accordance with the Divine will" (Talmud). "Indeed יראת ד׳, the fear of the LORD, is the nearest equivalent in Hebrew to what we mean when we speak about religion" (Welch).

shalt swear by his name. This is no command to swear; only a bringing out of the religious significance of an oath (Oettli). Primitive man constantly appeals to his gods for the truth and honesty of his transactions; and such appeal to his gods really constituted a profession of his loyalty to those gods. An Israelite is to swear by the Name of God alone, always remembering that it was an unpardonable sin to take God's Name in vain—and that the truly pious refrain from all oaths.

Note the words and good in addition to that which is right. It is not enough to do that which is right ; i.e. to act according to the strict letter of the law ; as such action often involves hardship and harshness, and the truly pious avoid taking advantage of the letter of strict legality. There is a higher justice, which is equity, and this bids man to be true to something more than the mere letter of his bond. "Man must act beyond the rule of law" (לפנים משורת הדין), say the Teachers of the Talmud. Jerusalem, they said, was destroyed because its Courts adhered too closely to strict Din (justice), and disregarded the principles of Yosher (equity). Two examples will make clear what they understood by "equity." A Rabbi on being consulted by a poor woman whether a certain coin was good answered her that it was. The next day, she came and told him it had been declared bad. He took it from her, and gave her a good one in exchange. He was not compelled to act so.

He was going beyond the letter of the law, and doing "that which is right and good in the sight of the LORD."

Rabba, the son of Bar Chana, hired porters to transport some jugs of wine. They, in negligence, broke their load; whereupon Rabba seized their garments in compensation. The porters appealed to Rab, who ordered the garments to be returned. When the garments were returned they pleaded, "We are poor men, we have laboured a full day, exhausted ourselves, and now we have nothing." Rab decided that their wages be paid. Rabba protested that his action had all along been legal. To which Rab replied, "Indeed it is legal; but Scripture says, 'Thou shalt observe the path of the upright,' i.e. those who act beyond the mere letter of the law." (If Shakespeare had been aware of this fine Jewish duty, "to go beyond the letter of the law"—he could not have drawn his Shylock as a Jew). Rashi understands our v. to teach the duty "of going beyond the rule," and also the concomitant duty of פשרה, "agreement." Agreement is reached when each of the litigants forgoes something to which he believes himself entitled by strict law and they become friends. The judgment of the court would have been for the one and against the

20–25. THE EXODUS—AN OBJECT-LESSON

The future generation is to be trained to gratitude and reverence towards God by means of the story of the Deliverance from Egypt. The Seder Service is a domestic feast based on the actual usage in the Temple of Jerusalem, and accompanied by a running commentary of prayer and legend and exhortation known as the Haggadah shel Pesach. This opens with the questions asked by the youngest child present, who is answered in a recitation of the events of the Exodus, with the Midrashic interpretations of Biblical passages (Josh. XXIV, 2–4; Deut. XXVI, 5–8) relating to the Deliverance. Hallel early formed part of the Seder; Nishmath, various hymns, folk-songs, and children's rhymes were added in the course of the centuries.

The Seder in history would require a monograph. In the Middle Ages, the Seder nights were a time of terror to the Jewries of Christian Europe. From the twelfth century onwards, the Satanic charge of using human blood on Passover was responsible for a long series of hideous massacres. Also, it was on the eve of Passover 1190, that the Jews of York resolved to anticipate massacre at the hands of the murderous mob by suicide, and perished almost to a man. "But the eternal message of hope, revived in fathers, 19. to thrust out all thine enemies from before thee, as the LORD hath spoken.

20. When thy son asketh thee in time to come, saying, What mean the testimonies, and the statutes, and the judgements, which the LORD our God hath commanded you? 21. then thou shalt say unto thy son, We were Pharaoh's bondmen in Egypt; and the LORD brought us out of Egypt with a mighty hand: 22. and the LORD shewed signs and wonders, great and sore, upon Egypt, upon Pharaoh, and upon what mean the testimonies . . . judgements. This whole section is analagous to Exod. XIII, 11f, where the child asks מה זאת "What is this"? Evidently the son here is of riper age than in Exod. XIII. The Rabbis describe the latter as תם, "simple;" and the son in this v. as חכם, "wise."

21. we were Pharaoh's bondmen. These words form the first sentence of the answer to the "four questions" in the Haggadah. The Seder Service is typical of Jewish education: the ceremonies become object-lessons in religion, national history, and morality. The garnered religious thought and emotion of past generations is made the horizon for the opening mind of the Jewish child. At one point of the Seder, which is largely history raised into religion, it is remarked: "Every Jew should regard himself as if he had personally come out of Egypt." That spirit dominates the whole of Jewish ceremonial. It all tends to the self-identification of the child with his fathers in the days of old, and to foster in the soul of the Jewish child the resolve to take his part in the Jewish life—whether in the sphere of worship, humanitarian endeavour, or Messianic achievement in and out of the Holy Land.

22. signs. See on IV, 34. "The father's reply points to an Almighty Power that can change the course of Nature for the accomplishment of His Divine purposes" (Koenig).

Observance of the Fundamental Laws—the Ten Commandments and the Shema—demands avoidance of intermarriage, and the destruction of all idolatrous worship in the Promised Land.

shew mercy. Better, shew grace; or, "give gifts to" (Talmud). The Rabbis restrict this prohibition, as all others in this connection, to actual idolaters like the ancient Canaanites. It does not apply to ordinary heathens who observe the fundamental laws of human society; see on IV, 19.

3. marriages. The evil results of such marriages were perceived by the Patriarchs; Gen. XXIV and XXVIII. Moses had previously warned the people against allying themselves by marriage with their neighbours (Exod. XXXIV, 16), and the warning was repeated by his successor (Josh. XXIII, 12). In our own days, in conditions that are worlds asunder from those in Canaan of old, intermarriage is no less fatal to the continued existence of Israel. "Every Jew should feel himself bound, even though the duty involves the sacrifice of precious affections, to avoid acts calculated, however remotely, to weaken the stability of the ancestral religion. Every Jew who contemplates marriage outside the pale must regard himself as paving the way to a disruption which would be the final, as it would be the culminating, disaster in the history of his people" (M. Joseph).

4. he will turn away. i.e. the heathen who marries thy daughter.

thy son. The Talmud explains this to mean, thy grandson. Since the Torah, on this interpretation, calls the child of an Israelite mother and gentile father the "son" of an Israelite grandfather, it was deduced therefrom that the child is to be regarded as being of the same race and faith as the mother. Consequently, the child of a Jewish father and non-Jewish mother follows in Jewish Law the religious status of the mother.

5. But thus shall ye deal with them; ye shall break down their altars, and dash in pieces their pillars, and hew down their Asherim, and burn their graven images with fire.

6. thou art an holy people. See Exod. XIX, 5f—the classical passage announcing the covenant between God and Israel. Being a holy people, Israel was not to be contaminated by foul and cruel worship. It was to be a People apart from the other nations, and untainted by their heathenish practices.

a peculiar people. See on Exod. XIX, 5. "The character of Israel as the Chosen People does not involve the inferiority of other nations. The universality of Israel's idea of God is sufficient proof against such an assumption. Every nation requires a certain self-consciousness for the carrying out of its mission. Israel's self-consciousness was tempered by the memory of its slavery in Egypt, and the recognition of its being the servant of the LORD. It was the noblesse oblige of the God-appointed worker for the entire human race" (Guedemann).

NOTE A

THE SHEMA

ITS MEANING AND HISTORY

THE MEANING OF THE SHEMA

"Hear, O Israel, the LORD is our God, the LORD is One." These words enshrine Judaism's greatest contribution to the religious thought of mankind. They constitute the primal confession of Faith in the religion of the Synagogue, declaring that the Holy God worshipped and proclaimed by Israel is One; and that He alone is God, Who was, is, and ever will be. That opening sentence of the Shema rightly occupies the central place in Jewish religious thought; for every other Jewish belief turns upon it: all goes back to it; all flows from it. The following are some of its far-reaching implications, negative and positive, that have been of vital importance in the spiritual history of man.

ITS NEGATIONS

Polytheism. This sublime pronouncement of absolute monotheism was a declaration of war against all polytheism, the worship of many deities, and paganism, the deification of any finite thing or being or natural force. It scornfully rejected the star-cults and demon worship of Babylonia, the animal worship of Egypt, the nature worship of Greece, the Emperor worship of Rome, as well as the stone, tree, and serpent idolatries of other heathen religions, with their human sacrifices, lustful rites, their barbarism and inhumanity. Polytheism breaks the moral unity of man, and involves a variety of moral standards; that is to say, no standard at all. The study of Comparative Religion clearly shows that, in polytheism, "side by side with a High God of Justice and Truth, the cults of a goddess of sensual love, a god of intoxicating drink, or of thieves and liars, might be maintained" (Farnell). It certainly is not the soil on which a high and consistent ethical system grows. This is true of even its highest forms, such as the heathenism of the Greeks. "The Olympian divinities merely copied and even exaggerated the pleasures and pains, the perfections and imperfections, the loftiness and baseness of life on earth. Man could not receive any moral guidance from them. The Greeks possessed nothing even remotely resembling a Decalogue to restrain and bind them" (Kastein). Despite the love of beauty that characterised the Greeks, and despite their iridescent minds, they remained barbarians religiously and morally; and their race was held up by their pupils, the Romans of Imperial days, as the prototype of everything that was mendacious, cruel, grasping and unjust. The fruit of Greek heathen teaching is, in fact, best seen in the horrors of the arena, the wholesale crucifixions, and the unspeakable bestialities of these same pupils, the Romans of Imperial days.

Quite other were the works of Hebrew Monotheism. Its preaching of the One, Omnipotent God liberated man from slavery to nature; from fear of demons and goblins and ghosts; from all creatures of man's infantile or diseased imagination. And that One God is One who "is sanctified by righteousness," who is of purer eyes than to endure the sight of evil, or to tolerate wrong. This has been named ethical monotheism. There may have been independent recognition of the unity of the Divine nature among some peoples; e.g. the unitary sun-cult of Ikhnaton in Egypt, or some faint glimpses of it in ancient Babylon. But in neither of these systems of worship was it essentially ethical, completely transfused with the Moral Law, and holding moral conduct to be the beginning and end of the religious life. Likewise, moral thinking and moral practices had indeed existed from immemorial times everywhere; but the sublime idea that morality is something Divine, spiritual in its inmost essence—this is the distinctive teaching of the Hebrew Scriptures. In Hebrew monotheism, ethical values are not only the highest of human values, but exclusively the only values of eternal worth. "There is none upon earth that I desire beside Thee," exclaims the Hebrew Psalmist. These words are but a poetic translation of the Shema in terms of religious experience.

Dualism. The Shema excludes dualism, any assumption of two rival powers of Light and Darkness, of the universe being regarded as the arena of a perpetual conflict between the principles of Good and Evil. This was the religion of Zoroaster, the seer of ancient Persia. His teaching was far in advance of all other heathen religions. Yet it was in utter contradiction to the belief in One, Supreme Ruler of the World, shaping the light, and at the same time controlling the darkness (Isa. XLV, 7). In the Jewish view, the universe with all its conflicting forces, is marvellously harmonised in its totality ; and, in the sum, evil is overruled and made a new source of strength for the victory of the good. "He maketh peace in His high places." Zoroastrianism is alleged by some to be responsible for many folklore elements in Jewish theology, especially for its angelology. But though later generations in Judaism did speak of Satan and a whole hierarchy of angels, these were invariably thought of as absolutely the creatures of God. To attribute Divine powers to any of these beings, and deem them independent of God, or in any way on a par with the Supreme Being, would at all times have been deemed in Jewry to be wild blasphemy. It is noteworthy that the Jewish Mystics placed man—because he is endowed with free will—higher in the scale of spiritual existence than any mere "messenger," which is the literal translation of the word angel, as well as of its Hebrew original, מלאך.

Pantheism. And the Shema excludes pantheism, which considers the totality of things to be the Divine. The inevitable result of believing that all things are divine, and all equally divine, is that the distinction between right and wrong, between holy and unholy, loses its meaning. Pantheism, in addition, robs the Divine Being of conscious personality. In Judaism, on the contrary, though God pervades the universe, He transcends it. "The heavens are the work of Thy hands. They shall perish but Thou shalt endure ; yea, all of them shall wax old like a garment ; as a vesture Thou shalt change them, and they shall be changed. But Thou art the same, and Thy years shall have no end" (Psalm CII, 26–28). The Rabbis expressed the same thought when they said : "The Holy One, blessed be He, encompasses the universe, but the universe does not encompass Him." And so far from submerging the Creator in His created universe, they would have fully endorsed the lines,

"Though earth and man were gone,
And suns and universes ceased to be,
And Thou wert left alone,
Every existence would exist in Thee" (Emily Brontë).

Belief in the Trinity. In the same way, the Shema excludes the trinity of the Christian creed as a violation of the Unity of God. Trinitarianism has at times been indistinguishable from tritheism; i.e. the belief in three separate gods. To this were added later the cults of the Virgin and the saints, all of them quite incompatible with pure monotheism. Judaism recognises no intermediary between God and man; and declares that prayer is to be directed to God alone, and to no other being in the heavens above or on earth beneath.

Its Positive Implications

Brotherhood of Man. The belief in the unity of the Human Race is the natural corollary of the Unity of God, since the One God must be the God of the whole of humanity. It was impossible for polytheism to reach the conception of One Humanity. It could no more have written the tenth chapter of Genesis, which traces the descent of all the races of man to a common ancestry, than it could have written the first chapter of Genesis, which proclaims the One God as the Creator of the universe and all that is therein. Through Hebrew monotheism alone was it possible to teach the Brotherhood of Man; and it was Hebrew monotheism which first declared, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. And the stranger that sojourneth with you shall be unto you as the homeborn among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself" (Lev. XIX, 18, 34).

Unity of the Universe. The conception of monotheism has been the basis of modern science, and of the modern world-view. Belief in the Unity of God opened the eyes of man to the unity of nature; "that there is a unity and harmony in the structure of things, because of the unity of their Source" (L. Roth). A noted scientist wrote:—"The One, Sole God—conceived as the Supreme and Absolute Being who is the Source of all the moral aspirations of man—that conception of the Deity accustomed the human spirit to the idea of Reason underlying all things, and kindled in man the desire to learn that Reason" (Dubois-Reymond). Likewise, A. N. Whitehead declares that the conception of absolute cosmic regularity is monotheistic in origin. And "every fresh discovery confirms the fact that in all Nature's infinite variety there is one single Principle at work; that there is one controlling Power which—in the words of our Adon Olam hymn—is of no beginning and no end, existing before all things were formed, and remaining when all are gone" (Haffkine).

Unity of History. And this One God—Judaism teaches—is the righteous and omnipotent Ruler of the universe. In polytheism, it was practically impossible to arrive at "the conception of a single Providence ruling the world by fixed laws; the multitude of divinities suggests the possibility of discord in the divine cosmos; and instils a sense of the capricious and incalculable in the unseen world" (Farnell). Not so Judaism, with its passionate belief in a Judge of all the earth, who can and will do right. As early as the days of the Second Temple, the idea of the Sovereignty of God was linked with the Shema. The Rabbis ordained that the words, "Hear, O Israel, the LORD is our God, the LORD is One," should be immediately followed by ברוך שם כבוד מלכותו לעולם ועד, "Blessed be His name, Whose glorious kingdom is for ever and ever"—the proclamation of the ultimate triumph of justice on earth. Jewish monotheism thus stresses the supremacy of the will of God for righteousness over the course of history: "One will rules all to one end—the world as it ought to be" (Moore).

The Messianic Kingdom. The cardinal Jewish teaching of a living God who rules history, has changed the heart and the whole outlook of humanity. Not only the hallowing of human life, but the hallowing of history flows from this doctrine of a Holy God, who is hallowed by righteousness. It is only the Jew, and those who have adopted Israel's Scriptures as their own, who see all events in nature and history as parts of one all-embracing plan; who behold God's world as a magnificent unity, and who look forward to that sure triumph of justice in humanity on earth which men call the Kingdom of God. And it is only the Jew, and those who have gone to school to the Jew, who can pray, וימליך מלכותיה, "May His kingdom come."

Highest among the implications of the Shema is the passionate conviction of the Jew that the day must dawn when all mankind will call upon the One God, when all the peoples will recognise that they are the children of One Father. Nine hundred years ago, Rashi commented as follows on the six words of the Shema: "He Who now is our God and is not yet recognised by the nations as their God, will yet be the one God of the whole world. As it is written in Zephaniah III, 9, I will restore to the peoples a pure language, that they may call upon the name of the LORD to serve Him with one consent; and it is said in Zechariah XIV, 9, And the LORD shall be king over all the earth; in that day shall the LORD be One, and His Name One."

A word must be added in regard to the two proof-texts cited by Rashi. The first, "I will restore to the peoples a pure language, that they may call upon the name of the LORD," must be reckoned among the most remarkable utterances of the Prophets. It foretells a wonderful transformation of spirit that will come over the peoples of the earth. They are now only groping dimly after the true God, and stammering His praise. But the time will come when they shall adore Him with a full knowledge of Him; and with one consent (lit. "shoulder to shoulder," i.e. without any superiority of one over the other), they will form a universal chorus to chant His praise. "The amazing thing about this prophecy is that it foresees the time when the curse of Babel will be removed from the children of men, and the confusion of tongues will end: one world-language, based on man's moral and religious needs, will be the speech in the Kingdom of the Spirit on earth" (Sellin).

As to the words, "And the LORD shall be king over all the earth; in that day shall the LORD be One, and His Name One," they are combined with the Shema Yisroel in the Musaph Prayer of the New Year—one of the most solemn portions of the Jewish Liturgy. They also form the last sentence of the Oleynoo prayer, and thus end every statutory Jewish service—morning, afternoon, and evening. There could be no more fitting conclusion for the Jew's daily devotions than this universalist hope of God's Kingdom.

THE HISTORY OF THE SHEMA

The work of the Rabbis. Who unveiled to the masses of the Jewish people the spiritual wonders enshrined in the Shema? It is the immortal merit of the Rabbis in the centuries immediately before and after the common era, that these religious treasures did not remain the possession of the few, but became the heritage of the whole House of Israel. Thanks to the Rabbis, the fulness of that sacred truth gradually saturated the souls of the lowliest, as of the highest, in Israel. The recitation of the Shema was part of the regular daily worship in the Temple. They took it over to the Synagogue, and gave it central place in the morning and evening prayers of every Jew. We may judge the important part it played in the rabbinic consciousness from the fact that the whole Mishnah opens with the question, "From what hour is the evening Shema to be read?" It is the Rabbis who raised the six words שמע ישראל ד׳אלהינו ד׳אחד to a confession of Faith; who ordained that they be repeated by the entire body of worshippers when the Torah is taken out on Sabbaths and Festivals; in the Sanctification (Kedusha) on these sacred occasions; after the Neilah service, as the culmination of the great Day of Atonement; and in man's last hour, when he is setting out to meet his Heavenly Father face to face. In this way, the Shema became the soul-stirring, collective self-expression of Israel's spiritual being. But even in the private prayer of the individual Jew, the Rabbis spared no effort to enhance the solemnity of its utterance. It is to be said audibly, they ordained, the ear hearing what the lips utter; and its last word echod ("One") was to be pronounced with special emphasis. All thoughts other than God's Unity must be shut out. It must be spoken with entire collection and concentration of heart and mind (כוונה); the reading of the Shema may not be interrupted even to respond to the salutation of a king. If the words of the Shema are uttered devoutly and reverently—the Rabbis taught—they thrill the very soul of the worshipper, and bring him a realisation of communion with the Most High. "When men in prayer declare the Unity of the Holy Name in love and reverence, the walls of earth's darkness are cleft in twain, and the face of the Heavenly King is revealed, lighting up the universe" (Zohar).

The Shema and martyrdom. The unwearied national pedagogy of the Rabbis bore blessed fruit. The Shema became the first prayer of innocent childhood, and the last utterance of the dying. It was the rallying-cry by which a hundred generations in Israel were welded together into one Brotherhood to do the will of their Father in heaven; it was the watchword for the myriads of martyrs who agonised and died for the Unity, "as the ultima ratio of their religion" (Herford). During every persecution and massacre, from the time of the Crusades to the wholesale slaughter of the Jewish population in the Ukraine in the years 1919 to 1921, Shema Yisroel has been the last sound on the lips of the victims. All the Jewish martyrologies are written round the Shema. The Jewish Teachers in medieval Germany introduced a regular Benediction for the recital of the Shema at the hour of "sanctification of the Name"; i.e. when a man is facing martyrdom. It is as follows: "Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe, who hast sanctified us by Thy commandments and bade us love Thee with all our heart and all our soul, and to sanctify Thy glorious and awful Name in public. Blessed art Thou, O Lord, Who sanctifiest Thy Name amongst the many." Numberless were the dire occasions when this Benediction was spoken. One instance will suffice. When the hordes of the Crusaders reached Xanten, near the Rhine (June 27, 1096), the Jews of that place were partaking of their Sabbath-eve meal together. The arrival of the Crusaders meant, of course, certain death to them, and the meal was discontinued. But they did not leave the hall until the saintly R. Moses ha-Cohen first said Grace, enlarging the regular text with prayers appropriate to the awful moment. The Grace was concluded with the Shema. Thereupon they went to the synagogue, where they all met with martyrdom. It is such happenings, which decimated the Jewish communities in the Rhine region by massacre, and self-immolation to escape baptism, that caused the contemporary Synagogue poet, Kalonymos ben Yehudah, to sing :

"Yea, they slay us and they smite,
Vex our souls with sore affright ;
All the closer cleave we, Lord,
To Thine everlasting word.
Not a line of all their Mass
Shall our lips in homage pass ;
Though they curse, and bind, and kill,
The living God is with us still.
We still are Thine, though limbs are torn ;
Better death than life forsworn.
From dying lips the accents swell,
'Thy God is One, O Israel' ;
And bridegroom answers unto bride,
'The Lord is God, and none beside,'
And, knit with bonds of holiest faith,
They pass to endless life through death."

The reading of the Shema indeed fulfilled the promise of the Rabbis that it clothes man with invincible lion-strength. It endowed the Jew with the double-edged sword of the spirit against the unutterable terrors of his long night of suffering and exile.

Defence of the Unity. The Rabbis not only trained Israel to the understanding of the vital significance of the Divine Unity ; they also defended the Jewish God-idea whenever its purity was threatened by enemies from without or within. They permitted no toying with polytheism, be its disguises ever so ethereal ; they brooked no departure, even by a hair's breadth, from the most rigorous monotheism; and rejected absolutely everything that might weaken or obscure it. The fight against idolatry and paganism begun by the Prophets was continued by the Pharisees. Abraham, the father of the Hebrew people, they taught, started on his career as an idol-wrecker. In legends, parables, and discourses, they showed forth the folly and futility of idol-worship, and pointed to the infamy and moral degradation evidenced by the Roman deification of the reigning Emperor. Josephus records that, when Caligula ordered the symbols of his divinity to be erected in the Temple at Jerusalem, tens of thousands of Jews declared their readiness to be trampled to death under the heels of the Roman cavalry, rather than suffer the Jewish belief in the Unity of God to be outraged. "In the world-wide Roman Empire, it was the Jews alone who refused the erection of statues and the paying of divine homage to Caligula. They thereby saved the honour of the human race, when all the other peoples slavishly obeyed the decree of the Imperial madman" (Fuerst). The Rabbis defended the Unity of God against the Jewish Gnostics, those ancient heretics who blasphemed the God of Israel, ridiculed the Scriptures, and asserted a duality of Divine Powers. And they defended it against the Jewish Christians, who darkened the sky of Israel's monotheism by teaching a novel doctrine of God's "sonship"; by identifying a man, born of woman, with God; and by advocating the doctrine of a Trinity. Said a Palestinian Rabbi of the 4th century; "Strange are those men who believe that God has a son and suffered him to die. The God who could not bear to see Abraham about to sacrifice his son, but exclaimed, 'Lay not thine hand upon the lad,' would He have looked on calmly while His son was being slain, and not have reduced the whole world to chaos!"

In the Middle Ages. Throughout the Middle Ages, the Jewish Teachers continued the religious education of the people begun in earlier centuries. They upheld the cause of pure Monotheism at the Religious Disputations in which they were compelled to participate by the triumphant and all-powerful Church. That portion of their defence of Judaism which found expression in literary form, like the "Book of Victory" (Sefer Nizzachon), is of lasting value. Such likewise is the book of Isaac Troki, a Polish Karaite of the sixteenth century, "the Defence of the Faith," which evoked the warm praise of Voltaire. Of especial importance is the work of the Jewish philosophers, whose effort represents a distinct enrichment of the world's religious thinking. Saadyah, Gabirol, Bachya, Hallevi, Maimonides purge the concept of God of all anthropomorphism, and vindicate the unity and uniqueness of Israel's God-conception. Solomon Ibn Gabirol, renowned alike as philosopher and Synagogue poet, begins his Royal Crown, with the words, "Thou art One, the first great Cause of all: Thou art One, and none can penetrate—not even the wisest in heart—the unfathomable mystery of Thy Unity. Thou art One; Thy Unity can neither be lessened nor increased, for neither plurality nor change nor any attribute can be applied to Thee. Thou art One, but the imagination fails in any attempt to define or limit Thee. Therefore I said, 'I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue.'"

In the present day. The long and arduous warfare begun by the Prophets and continued by the Rabbis is not yet ended. The Unity of God has its antagonists in the present day, as in former ages. Even advanced non-Jewish writers on religion are, as a rule, but hesitating witnesses to the Unity of God; and liberal Christian theologians wax quite eloquent in depicting the amenities of life under polytheism. They plead that it helped to interfuse the whole life with "religion"; to intensify the "joy of life" and delight in the world of nature; and that it made for religious tolerance.

On closer examination, these partisan claims collapse entirely. As for tolerance, even enlightened Greek polytheism permitted three of the greatest thinkers of the Periclean age—Socrates, Protagoras, and Anaxagoras—to be put to death on religious grounds. The Jews came into contact with Greek polytheism in its later stages. But neither Antiochus Epiphanes who attempted to drown Judaism in the blood of its faithful children, nor Apion, the frenzied spokesman of the anti-Semites in Alexandria, displayed particular tolerance.

Again, the alleged interfusion of the whole of life with "religion" under polytheism did not save the votaries of Greek polytheism from moral laxity, licentiousness and inhuman behaviour both in war and in peace. As to intensifying the "joy of life"—that "joy of life," even among the Greeks, seems to have been the prerogative of the few. Thus, Greek society was broad-based on unrighteousness, i.e. on human slavery; and in Greece, "the animated tool," as Aristotle defined the slave, was denied all human rights. It is, furthermore, difficult to see wherein the "joy of life"

consisted for the human sacrifices regularly offered by the heathen Semites and Slavs, Germans and Greeks. In regard to the last-named, it is not generally remembered that we find traces of human sacrifice thoughout the Hellenic world, in the cult of almost every god, and in all periods of the independent Greek states. In the Roman Empire, this hideous accompaniment of polytheism continued till the fourth century of our present era; while in India the burning of widows was abolished only in the year 1840!

The other claims on behalf of polytheism are seen to be equally untenable. Delight in the world of nature was not confined to the polytheists. It could not have been alien to the people that produced the Song of Songs, and is therefore not the possession of heathenism alone. No less a scientist and thinker than Alexander von Humboldt has shown that the aesthetic contemplation of nature only began when the landscape was freed from its gods, and men could rejoice in nature's own greatness and beauty.

Various secular writers on religion go far beyond modernist theologians in their depreciation of monotheism. Unlike those theologians, they do not halt between two opinions, and they know no hesitancies. Ernest Renan ascribed the rise of belief in One God to the desert surroundings of the early Hebrews. "The desert is monotheistic," he announced. He omitted, however, to explain why, if so, the other Semitic desert-dwellers had remained polytheists; or why the primeval inhabitants of the Sahara, Gobi and Kalahari deserts were not monotheists. Anti-Semites go further still. In order to belittle Israel's infinite glory as the Prophet of Monotheism, they decry the Unity of God as "a bare, barren, arithmetical idea"; as merely "the minimum of religion." (It is strange that the alleged "minimum of religion" should have given the Decalogue to the world; should have produced the Psalms, the book of devotion of civilised humanity; should have succeeded in shattering all idols, turning the course of history, and freeing the children of men from the stone heart of heathen antiquity). Some of these anti-Semites contrast the bountiful abundance displayed by Greece in its hundreds of gods and goddesses, by India in its thousands of fantastic deities, with the one God of Israel. "Only one God—how mean, how meagre!"—they exclaim. It would serve no purpose to repeat further strictures on monotheism on the part of men who deem that, in attacking Jews, one need be neither logical nor fair; and that one may say anything of Jews and Judaism so long as it covers them with ridicule. But Truth is on the march; and the number of those thinkers is growing who recognise that "the Shema is the basis of all higher, ethical, spiritual religion; an imperishable pronouncement, reverberating to this day in every idealistic conception of the universe" (Gunkel).

Conclusion. "It was undeniably a stroke of true religious genius—a veritable prompting by the Holy Spirit, רוח הקודש, —to select, as Prof. Steinthal reminds us, out of the 4,875 verses of the Pentateuch this one verse (Deut. VI, 4) as the inscription for Israel's banner of victory. Throughout the entire realm of literature, secular or sacred, there is probably no utterance to be found that can be compared in its intrinsic intellectual and spiritual force, or in the influence it exerted upon the whole thinking and feeling of civilised mankind, with the six words which have become the battle-cry of the Jewish people for more than twenty-five centuries" (Kohler).

Some of the species of hornets found in Palestine have their nests in rock-caves. There is a novel and illuminating explanation of the meaning of the "hornet." It was the badge of Thothmes III and his successors, and would thus be a veiled reference to the systematic series of invasions and conquests in Palestine undertaken by that Pharaoh. These invasions had reduced the fighting power and resistance of the Canaanites (Garstang).

VIII. Fatherly Discipline of God—the Lessons of the Wilderness

The long wandering in the Wilderness had been designed to teach Israel humility and a self-distrusting reliance on Him. Now they were about to take possession of a fertile land; let them take heed not to forget the Divine goodness and guidance.

it is a devoted thing.

to prove thee. i.e. to test thee. It is in adversity that the true nature of a man is seen. When hardships came upon the Israelites, they might have finally disowned God and rejected His service. In that event, their existence as a people would have come to an end in the Wilderness. But they had stood the test. Although they had murmured and complained, under the restraining influence of Moses they had adhered to God.

3. and he humbled thee. Better, so he humbled thee.

manna. See Exod. XVI.

man doth not live by bread only. Physical food is not the only thing that ensures man's existence. Apart from the normal sustenance, there are Divine forces which sustain man in his progress through life. The words in the Text are of wider application than their reference to the manna. They teach that man has a soul as well as a body, and the needs of the spiritual life should not be neglected. This truth is of especial importance in an age when, in so many countries, men are passionately declaring that man can live by bread alone, and that he will.

4. thy raiment waxed not old. "There are some who explain this in the manner of a symbol ; i.e. the expressions are rhetorical, and not to be understood in their literal sense. They are a vivid metaphor to denote the sustaining Providence of God during the wanderings in the inhospitable desert" (Ibn Ezra).

which the LORD thy God hath led thee these forty years in the wilderness, that he might humble thee, to prove thee, to know what was in thine heart, whether thou wouldest keep his commandments, or no.
3. And he humbled thee, and suffered thee to hunger, and fed thee with manna, which thou knewest not, neither did thy fathers know; that he might make thee know that man doth not live by bread only, but by every thing that proceedeth out of the mouth of the LORD doth man live.
4. Thy raiment waxed not old upon thee, neither did thy foot swell, these forty years.
5. And thou shalt consider in thine heart, that, as a man chasteneth his son, so the LORD thy God chasteneth thee.
6. And thou

5. and thou shalt consider in thine heart. Better, and thou shalt know with thine heart; i.e. with the conviction which comes from knowledge—the "heart" being the seat of intelligence (IV 29).

chasteneth his son. Better, disciplineth his son. Even the hunger and hardship during the wanderings in the desert were part of God's fatherly discipline of His people. Suffering is thus transfigured into what the Rabbis called "chastisements of love" (יסורין של אהבה). "Happy is the man whom God chasteneth. He delivereth the afflicted by his affliction" (Job v, 17; XXXVI, 15). Especially to the Rabbis is the pathway of suffering the necessary road to the beatitudes of the higher life. "Beloved is suffering; for only through suffering were the good gifts of the Torah, the Holy Land, and Eternal Life given unto Israel. Those who are oppressed and oppress not, who are reviled and revile not, who serve God in love and rejoice in their sufferings, they are the lovers of God" (Talmud).

brass. Better, copper. Traces of copper works are to be found in the Lebanon and Edom. For an account of ancient mining, see Job. XXVIII, 1–11.

10. and thou shalt eat. The command to enjoy the produce of their land is noteworthy. The good things of the world are provided for man's enjoyment; and, far from doing wrong by finding happiness in them, Judaism desires man to do so.

thou shalt bless. i.e. thank; thou shalt be moved to praise Him with a grateful heart. The Rabbis understood these words as a command, and based upon them the precept that every meal must be followed by Grace.

shalt keep the commandments of the LORD thy God, to walk in his ways, and to fear him. 7. For the LORD thy God bringeth thee into a good land, a land of brooks of water, of fountains and depths, springing forth in valleys and hills;
8. a land of wheat and barley, and vines and fig
trees and pomegranates; a land of oil olives and honey; 9. a land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness, thou shalt not lack any thing in it; a land whose stones are iron,
and out of whose hills thou mayest dig brass.
10. And thou shalt eat and be full, and thou shalt bless the LORD thy God for the good land which he hath given thee.*ii 11. Beware lest thou forget

As "the earth is the LORD's and the fulness thereof," the Talmud declares, "Whoever enjoys any worldly pleasure without uttering a benediction of its Divine Giver, commits a theft against God."

The Grace consists of four parts: thanksgiving for food, for the land of Israel, for the Temple, and general praise and petition. In the light of Judaism, the table is an altar; and every meal is hallowed by prayer, before and after. The ancient Jewish Mystics added a touch of ecstasy to the statutory Grace by singing gleeful table-hymns, Zemiroth. Their unique combination of adoration of God with genial appreciation of good cheer is a product of the Jewish genius, which interweaves the secular with the sacred, and spreads over the ordinary facts of life the rainbow of the Divine. This saintly custom of table-hymns was soon adopted by the whole House of Israel, albeit only for the Sabbath, which is and must remain the central sun in the existence of the faithful Jew. In this way, a Sabbath meal became, literally, a service of joy and with joy. To those who sing, and teach their little ones to sing, these beautiful hymns and melodies, the Sabbath day is, as it was to their fathers of old, a foretaste of "that Day which is wholly a Sabbath, and rest in life everlasting."

"Of a man dominated by pride, the Holy One, blessed be He, says, 'I and he cannot dwell in the same universe'" (Talmud). "Prosperity always tempts man to fretfulness against every idea of restraint. Whenever men forgot God, their whole way of life dropped to a lower level and served baser issues. A reverent and humble recognition of Him and gratitude to Him would prevent their obedience becoming a weariness" (Welch).

whereas for the wickedness. Better, and for the wickedness. The meaning of this and v. 5 is as follows: Do not imagine that there are two reasons for thy possession of the Land; viz., thy righteousness, and the wickedness of the inhabitants. True the wickedness of the inhabitants lost them their land; but the reason why the Israelites were taking their place was not their righteousness, but the fulfilment of the Divine promise made to the Fathers (Rashi, Rashbam).

5. the wickedness of these nations. Recent excavations bear gruesome testimony to the savagery and foul uncleanness of their rites; see on XII, 31.

IX, 8–X, 11. PROOF FROM HISTORY OF ISRAEL'S REBELLION

But for the intercession of Moses, and the gracious brought me in to possess this land: whereas for the wickedness of these nations the LORD doth drive them out from before thee. 5. Not for thy righteousness, or for the uprightness of thine heart, dost thou go in to possess their land: but for the wickedness of these nations

the LORD thy God doth drive them out from before thee, and that he may establish the word which the LORD sware unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob. 6. Know therefore, that the LORD thy God giveth thee not this good land to possess it for thy righteousness; for thou art a stiffnecked people. 7. Remember, forget thou not, how thou provokedst
the LORD thy God to wrath in the wilderness:
from the day that thou wentest forth out of the land of Egypt, until ye came unto this place, ye have been rebellious against the LORD. 8. Also in Horeb ye provoked the LORD to wrath, and the LORD was angry with you to have destroyed
you. 9. When I was gone up into the mount to receive the tables of stone, even the tables of the covenant which the LORD made with you, then I abode in the mount forty days and forty nights; I did neither eat bread nor drink water.

9. I did neither eat. While the Revelation imposed upon Moses a long abstinence, they treated it so lightly that they indulged in a heathenish orgy.

14. blot out their name. See Exod. XXXII, 10, 32.

15. In this historical retrospect, Moses does not follow the strict chronological order as recorded in Exod. XXXII, and the narrative here is much condensed.

10. And the LORD delivered unto me the two tables of stone written with the finger of God;
and on them was written according to all the words, which the LORD spake with you in the mount out of the midst of the fire in the day of the assembly. 11. And it came to pass at the end of the forty days and forty nights, that the LORD gave me the two tables of stone, even the tables of the covenant. 12. And the LORD said unto me, Arise, get thee down quickly from hence;
for thy people which thou hast brought forth out of Egypt have corrupted themselves; they are quickly turned aside out of the way which I commanded them; they have made them a molten image. 13. Furthermore the LORD spake unto me, saying, I have seen this people, and,
behold, it is a stiffnecked people: 14. let me alone, that I may destroy them, and blot out their name from under heaven: and I will make of thee a nation mightier and greater than they.
15. So I turned and came down from the mount, and the mount burned with fire: and the two tables of the covenant were in my two hands.
16. And I looked, and, behold, ye had sinned against the LORD your God; ye had made you a molten calf: ye had turned aside quickly out of the way which the LORD had commanded you. 17. And I took hold of the two tables, and cast them out of my two hands, and brake them before your eyes. 18. And I fell down before the LORD, as at the first, forty days and forty nights; I did neither eat bread nor drink water; because of all your sin which ye sinned, in doing that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger. 19. For I was afraid of the anger and hot displeasure, wherewith the LORD was wroth against you to destroy you. But the LORD hearkened unto me that time also. 20. And the Lord was very angry with Aaron to have destroyed him: and I prayed for Aaron also the same time. 21. And I took your sin, the calf which ye had made, and burnt it with fire, and stamped it, grinding it very small, until it was as fine as dust: and I cast the dust thereof into the brook that descended out of the mount. 22. And at Taberah, and at Massah, and at Kibroth-hattaavah, ye provoked the LORD to wrath. 23. And when the LORD sent you from Kadesh-barnea, saying, Go up and possess the land which I have given you; then ye rebelled against the commandment of the LORD your God, and ye believed him not, nor hearkened to his voice. 24. Ye have been rebellious against

I cast the dust thereof. The fact is here omitted that Moses made the people drink of the mingled water and dust, because the point on which he is dwelling is his intercession on their behalf. He is not recapitulating the history of the Golden Calf in detail.

3. so I made an ark. " So I had an ark made," by Bezalel; cf. Exod. xxv, 10f, " thou shalt overlay it with pure gold," i.e. have it overlaid.

Some of the Midrashim, followed by Rashi, are of opinion that there were two Arks—a temporary Ark made by Moses on receipt of the Tables, and the permanent one prepared later by Bezalel.

5. put the tables in the ark. Cf. I Kings viii, 9. According to a Rabbinic tradition, Moses also deposited in the Ark the fragments of the First Tables that had been broken. לוחות ושברי לוחות מונחין בארון. " One should learn from this, to show respect to a scholar who has forgotten his learning through age, sorrow or illness " (Talmud). We must respect the aged, though they be broken by years and trouble.

6–9. The mention of the Ark leads Moses to refer to the appointment of the Levites who were to have it in their charge.

6. children of Israel journeyed. This and the succeeding v. interrupt the narrative, and may be regarded as a gloss added by Moses when he wrote down the Discourse. The itinerary detailed here is: Beeroth-bene-Jaakan (" The wells of the children of Jaakan ") to Moserah, to Gudgodah, to Jotbathah. In Num. xxxiii, 31f, we find the stations in the ark. 3. So I made an ark of acacia wood, and hewed two tables of stone like unto the first, and went up into the mount, having the two tables in mine hand. 4. And he wrote on the tables, according to the first writing, the ten commandments, which the LORD spake unto you in the mount out of the midst of the fire in the day of the assembly: and the LORD gave them unto me. 5. And I turned and came down from the mount, and put the tables in the ark which I had made; and there they be, as the LORD commanded me. 6. (And the children of Israel journeyed from the wells of the children of Jaakan to Moserah: there Aaron died, and there he was buried; and Eleazar his son ministered in the priest's office in his stead.

7. From thence they journeyed unto Gudgodah;
and from Gudgodah to Jotbathah, a land of named in a different order, with the variation in nomenclature that is not infrequent in Scripture. A probable explanation is that the Israelites, after journeying in a southern direction to the land of Edom, had to turn sharply to the north (see on II, 3). They may have had to retrace their steps for a short distance, and revisit some of the places they had passed through, this time in the reverse order.

there Aaron died. By there must be understood the last-mentioned place; viz., Moserah. As it is unthinkable that, in regard to an important event like the death of Aaron, there should be a divergence in the accounts, Moserah must be thought of as at the foot of Mount Hor mentioned in Num. XX, 22f, and would indicate the exact spot from which Aaron ascended the mountain.

to stand before the LORD. To minister unto Him in offering sacrifice. This duty was reserved for the priests alone; Num. III, 10.

to bless in his name. To pronounce the Priestly Benediction, Num. VI, 23f.

9. wherefore. "Without any question, the whole tribe of Levi is here set apart for holy, i.e. priestly, duties. But it does not at all follow from this, that each single member of the tribe could at will perform each and everyone of these functions, without any gradation or distribution of functions among these servants of God" (Dillmann).

hath no portion. See Num. XVIII, 20. When the Land was divided among the tribes, no part was allotted to the tribe of Levi, both priests and Levites. Their whole time being required for the work of the Sanctuary, they would not be able to attend to the care of the soil.

the LORD is his inheritance. This phrase is like that of the Psalmist (xvi, 5), "O LORD, the portion of mine inheritance" (Ibn Ezra). The Targum understands it to mean: "what God will give them; viz., the portions of the sacrifices that shall be the inheritance of the tribe of Levi." See xviii, 1–8.

spake unto him. See Num. xviii, 20. Although the words are there addressed to Aaron and his sons, i.e. to the priests, they clearly apply to the tribe of Levi generally.

10. I stayed in the mount. This and the succeeding v. are a continuation of ix, 18, 19. Moses stayed two periods of forty days on the Mount after the sin of the Golden Calf—the first time, to intercede for the people (alluded to in ix, 18, 25); the second time, for the purpose of receiving the Tables; cf. Exod. xxxiv, 28.

11. arise. As Leader of Israel, to bring Israel to Canaan. The forgiveness of Israel's sin is complete.

Chapters X, 12–XI, 32

The Second Discourse of Moses:

Concluding Portion

Final review of all the reasons for, and results of, obedience to God.

12. and now. i.e. in conclusion. Pride having been shown to be out of place in those who had so often provoked God, and who owed their all to God's forgiveness and the entreaties of Moses, let Israel, in return for God's undeserved mercies, love and fear Him.

what doth the Lord thy God require of thee. Nothing impossible or extraordinary, but what is simple, and within the people's duty—fear, love, service and fulfilment of commandments. The question recalls the great utterance of the prophet Micah (vi, 8), with which it should be compared; see Numbers, p. 432.

to fear the Lord. " The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom " (Prov. i, 7) ; reverence of God is the foundation of religion. The Rabbis, likewise, speak of " the fear of Heaven " (i.e. the religious sense, the feeling for religion) as the key to all Wisdom. " Whatever man has Learning but no fear of Heaven, to what is he like ? " they ask. "To 12. And now, Israel, what doth the LORD thy God require of thee, but to fear the LORD thy God, to walk in all his ways, and to love him, and to serve the LORD thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul, 13. to keep the commandments of the LORD, and his statutes, which I command thee this day for thy good?

14. Behold, unto the LORD thy God belongeth the heaven, and the heaven of heavens, the earth, with all that therein is. 15. Only the LORD had a delight in thy fathers to love them, and he chose their seed after them, even you out of all peoples, as at this day. 16. Circumcise there-a keeper of a house, who has the key to the inner chambers, but lacks the key of the outer doors of the house. Of what avail are those others to him?"

and to love him. See on VI, 5.

13. for thy good. Cf. VI, 24. When God asks man to obey His commands, it is not for His benefit, but for man's welfare.

14–15. The fear of God should flow from the thought of His infinity and righteousness; the love of God from the thought of His love towards the Patriarchs and their posterity.

heaven of heavens. The highest heaven.

15. had a delight. Though He is the great God, He yet loved Israel's Fathers, and chose their children, even those whom Moses is addressing.

16. circumcise. i.e. remove. They are not to allow, as it were, a hard covering to surround their heart, making it impervious to Divine influence. "Your heart shall be open for recognising the truth" (Nachmanides).

the great God. This description of God has been included in the first of the Eighteen Benedictions.

regardeth not persons. "Is never partial" (Moffatt). Israel must not deliberately sin in the hope of finding mercy through the "merits of the fathers." The fact that they were the Chosen People only meant that more was expected of them than of heathens; and, furthermore, that their actions would be judged by higher standards. Cf. Amos III, 2 ("You only have I known of all the families of the earth; therefore I will visit upon you all your iniquities"); see Genesis, p. 502.

nor taketh reward. "Never to be bribed" (Moffatt). He is no human judge, of whom such might be thought, especially in barbaric society; see on XVI, 19. He is inflexible in His punishment of the iniquitous, and in His protection of the helpless and oppressed.

18. judgement of. Better, justice for (AJ), the fatherless, the widow, and the stranger, who are too weak to defend themselves against injustice.

loveth the stranger. He is the Father of all mankind, and His love is therefore not confined to Israel. "The LORD is good to all, and His tender mercies are over all His works" (Ps. CXLV, 9).

"stranger" (ger) denotes a proselyte, the man or woman who voluntarily joins the ranks of Judaism, and the words of this v. are applied to him. "How great is the duty which the Torah imposes on us with regard to proselytes. Our parents we are commanded to honour and fear; to the prophets we are ordered to hearken. A man may honour and fear and obey without loving. But in the case of 'strangers,' we are bidden to love them with the whole force of our heart's affection" (Maimonides); see on XXIV, 17–18.

for ye were strangers. From their bitter experience in Egypt, the Israelites were to learn sympathy with the alien in their own land.

20–22. A God of such majesty and justice should command the reverence, devotion and praise of Israel.

20. thou shalt fear . . . cleave. The fear of God is not a feeling of terror, which repels and causes men to shrink from it. It is that grateful reverence which leads men to cleave and cling to God. The Jewish philosophers coined a special phrase for this feeling: יראה של אהבה, "loving fear" (Hermann Cohen).

6. Dathan and Abiram. See Num. XVI. Korah, who was the ringleader of the revolt, is not named here. In the last chapter, x, 8, Moses had spoken of the selection of the Levites, among whom must have been sons of Korah who had not perished (Num. XXVI, 11). It was consequently from consideration of their feelings, that he omitted the name of their father. On similar grounds he is not mentioned in Psalm CVI, 17, since the Psalm was sung by the " Sons of Korah."

8. be strong. i.e. morally, as a consequence of faithfulness to the Torah ; and physically, by reason of the Divine aid.

10–17. Canaan and Egypt contrasted

Unlike Egypt, where it never rained and the fields must be watered by human drudgery, Canaan is dependent for its fertility upon the rain of heaven. This would be withheld or granted according to Israel's faithfulness.

12. careth for. The difference between the fixed climatic conditions of Egypt and those of Canaan can be compared to that between a son in receipt of a fixed annual allowance, and a son in his father's house receiving his portion day by day. Both should be equally filled with gratitude; but, as a fact, the latter would be held more guilty if he were not so (Harper).

The Shema: Second Paragraph

REWARD AND PUNISHMENT IN JUDAISM

13–21. These verses, which form the middle portion of the Shema, proclaim the doctrine of the Retributive Righteousness of God. Both rewards and punishments are here agricultural, and in particular refer to the rainfall, which is a matter of life and death in a land like Palestine.

Judaism teaches that obedience to the will of God is rewarded, and disobedience punished. This doctrine is bound up with the fundamental belief of Judaism in a God of Justice. Because God is just, He will not treat the righteous and the wicked in the same manner. In some way, it must be better with the former than with the latter, through the justice of God. But such reward—whether conceived as material blessing or, as in later ages, when it became more and more spiritualised—is not made the motive for virtue. That must be love of God and His commandments, a free enthusiasm for doing His will.

Throughout his Farewell Discourses, Moses demands obedience to the Divine will out of pure and disinterested love of God. His words in Deuteronomy breathe an ardent love and spiritual awe of the invisible God, a heart-religion such as we meet in the greatest of the Psalms and the highest portions of Prophecy. Throughout these same Discourses, ye go over to possess it, is a land of hills and valleys, and drinketh water of the rain of heaven :

12. a land which the LORD thy God careth for ; the eyes of the LORD thy God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year.

however, we find, as in no other Biblical book, the appeal to material reward for obedience, and material punishment for disobedience, repeatedly and urgently pressed. "This is due," it has been explained, "to the personal position of Moses. In himself he is a lofty, spiritual nature, yearning with a parent's love to a people incapable of rising to his spiritual plane ; a people yet in the childhood of what we call real life, to be enticed with promises and frightened with threats. And alternately he pours his spiritual fervour into their dull ears, and then falls back helplessly on to the material considerations which alone will move them" (Moulton). He boldly makes use of every motive that actually influences men—gratitude to God, feeling of dependence on Him, and fear of God—in order to win them to the higher life. "He does not ask men to serve God because it will be profitable to them, but because they love God ; and he endeavours to make them love God by reciting all His love and friendliness and patience to His people, and by pointing out the evil which His love is seeking to ward off. Having before his mind the results of evil conduct, he does urge men to escape from the wrath that may rest upon them. But the only means so to escape is to yield to the love of God" (Harper).

How far there is correspondence in actual life between righteousness and happiness, and between misery and sin, is a recurrent problem both in Biblical and post-Biblical Judaism. Deuteronomy and Ezekiel declare that men get in this world exactly what they deserve. Job, Jeremiah, Habakkuk, the Psalms, and Ecclesiastes courageously face the bitter facts of life, and point out how often it goes well with the wicked and ill with the righteous. This world-riddle becomes less distracting under the influence of the belief in the immortality of the soul.

Since the time of the Maccabees, the belief in immortality

מִצְוֺתַי אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מְצַוֶּה אֶתְכֶם הַיּוֹם לְאַהֲבָה אֶת־יְהוָה
14 אֱלֹהֵיכֶם וּלְעָבְדוֹ בְּכָל־לְבַבְכֶם וּבְכָל־נַפְשְׁכֶם׃ וְנָתַתִּי
מְטַר־אַרְצְכֶם בְּעִתּוֹ יוֹרֶה וּמַלְקוֹשׁ וְאָסַפְתָּ דְגָנֶךָ וְתִירֹשְׁךָ had become well-nigh universal among the masses of the Jewish people. R. Jannai could thus remain quite unperturbed by his recognition, that "it is not in our power to explain either the prosperity of the wicked, or the affliction of the righteous." "Faithful is thy Employer," says R. Tarphon, "to pay thee the reward of thy labour, and know that the grant of the reward of the righteous will be in the future life." New spiritual conceptions became prominent; such as the great saying of the illustrious Babylonian teacher Rab, "In the world to come there is neither eating nor drinking . . . but the righteous enjoy the radiance of the Shechinah."

In connection with this world-riddle, the Rabbis never lost sight of two things. One, that suffering is not an absolute evil: it educates, it purifies, it can be an instrument of Divine love; see on VIII, 5. Through it, Israel came into possession of the best gifts—the Torah, the Holy Land, and Eternal Life. Rab declared, "He who suffers no affliction and persecution, does not belong to Israel"; i.e. has not known the highest spiritual experience of God's chosen ones. And the second thing is, that in the deepest sense, righteousness is its own reward. Ben Azzai taught that even as one sin begets another, so the reward of a good deed is that it leads to another good deed! שכר מצוה מצוה. The Rabbis would have rejected the thought that in this world righteousness should permanently produce misery, and wickedness invariably lead to happiness, as both irrational and blasphemous. Nevertheless, they taught men to disregard the thought of reward altogether; and to do their duty לשמה, lishmoh, for its own sake. Rabbi Eleazar explained the opening verse of Psalm CXII, "Blessed is the man that delighteth greatly in His commandments," to mean, "he delights greatly in His commandments, but not in the reward connected with them." This is in line with the teaching of one of the earliest Sages, Antigonos of Socoh,

13. And it shall come to pass, if ye shall hearken diligently unto my commandments which I command you this day, to love the LORD your God, and to serve him with all your heart and with all your soul, 14. that I will give the rain of your land in its season, the former rain and the latter rain, that thou mayest gather in thy corn, and

"Be not like servants that minister to their master for the sake of receiving a reward; but be like servants who minister to their master without the condition of receiving a reward; and let the fear of Heaven be upon you" (Ethics of the Fathers).

"It is true that the ordinary man may be incapable of such pure devotion; and, in his case, promises of reward and punishment are necessary. But such promises are merely a means to an end, the end being the attainment of such spiritual exaltation in which the love of good will be the sole stimulus to good. Let men serve God at first for reward; they will end by serving Him without any such motive. He who desires to serve God from love must not serve to win the future world, but he does the right and eschews the wrong, because he is a man, and owes it to his manhood to perfect himself" (Maimonides).

13. to serve him with all your heart. "What is heart-service? Service of the heart is Prayer" (Sifri). The institution of Prayer three times daily goes back to an early period; cf. Daniel VI, 11, 14.

14. I will give. Moses speaks in the name of God.

in its season. The agricultural year in Palestine consists of two seasons, the one rainy, and the other dry. The whole of the winter is the rainy season. The heavy rains towards the end of October are the yoreh, "the former rain." They open the agricultural year. The rainfall increases throughout December, January and February; it begins to abate in March, and is practically over by the end of April. The latter rain, malkosh, are the heavy showers of March and April. Coming as they do when the grain is ripening, and being the last before the long summer drought, they are of great importance.

From the fact that Scripture here speaks first of pasture for the cattle and then continues, thou shalt eat, the Talmud deduced the regulation that a man must feed his animals before himself partaking of his own meal; see on xxv, 4.

18. lay up these my words. This and the two following v. are a repetition, with slight verbal differences, of vi, 6–9. The Sifri joins this on to the words which immediately precede, and interprets: In the event of your perishing from the land—i.e. of being driven into captivity—even there in the land

Therefore shall ye lay up these my words in your heart and in your soul; and ye shall bind them for a sign upon your hand, and they shall be for frontlets between your eyes. 19. And ye shall teach them your children, talking of them, when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. 20. And thou shalt write them upon the door posts

19. teach them your children. This was taken to mean help them to become learned in the Torah, and was therefore understood in the sense of, "teach them your sons."

JEWISH EDUCATION: ITS SCOPE

Though it was never intended that women become learned in the Torah, a clear understanding of the fundamentals of Jewish faith and duty was required of the Jewish woman. In ancient times, the Mishnah (Ned. IV) speaks of the Scripture instruction of sons and daughters as the normal practice.

In the Middle Ages, Judah the Pious writes: "Girls too should receive instruction in the Holy Law. It is true that the Rabbis taught that girls need not be instructed in the Talmud. This only means that it is not necessary for them to pursue Talmudic learning, but girls must share in religious and moral instruction. Everyone should know the Divine laws and commandments; youths should learn them in the Hebrew language, women and girls may learn them in their mother tongue. The instruction of girls must be given in a gentle and pleasant manner."

It is but too true that in past centuries the standard of education for Jewish girls was immeasurably lower than it was in the case of boys. This did not then much matter, as in the sheltered life of the olden ghetto the morale of Jewish women remained unharmed by this narrow educational ideal. "The Jewish woman vied with her husband in an admiration for a religious culture which she was not permitted to share; her greatest pride was to have sons learned in the Torah. She was, above everything, modest and chaste, and she could immolate herself as a martyr when the need arose" (M. Joseph). Yet even in those ages, a whole devotional literature arose, e.g. the Techinnoth, in the Judeo-German vernacular, which was exclusively intended for the use of girls and women, to acquaint them with Scripture, and enable them to understand the teachings of Jewish ritual and ethics.

Earlier than among any other people, Jewish law and custom ordained the provision of elementary instruction to all the children of the community, rich and poor alike. "Be ye heedful of the children of the poor, for from them does the Torah go forth," was the warning of the Rabbis. And the Jewish knowledge which is to endow every Jewish boy or girl with the Jewish outlook and Jewish loyalty cannot be acquired in the few hundred hours of instruction they receive in the current Religion Classes. It must extend over years, and not end with adolescence. "Nicht Religionsstunden, sondern Religionsjahre," said the illustrious Leopold Zunz, the founder of the new Jewish Learning. The continuation teaching of the Jewish youth and the Jewish adult need not necessarily be carried on in formal classes. But a deep yearning, and constant striving, for acquaintance with Jewish thought, and the classical sources of Jewish inspiration, are indispensable for real, conscious, and not merely accidental, membership in the House of Israel.

JEWISH EDUCATION : ITS CONTENT

As the aim of Jewish education is the consecration of the Jewish child to Judaism and his preparation for a life of beneficence for Israel and humanity, it must consist of the following four elements.

1) Jewish Religion—i.e. the Jewish beliefs concerning God, the Torah and Israel; the teachings and practices, the symbols and institutions which have come down to the House of Israel through the ages. Such knowledge does not come of itself, and cannot be satisfactorily picked up from other Jewish studies. The growing boy and girl will in the future be often called upon to state and defend their religious position. They should be helped to a formulation of Jewish belief by means of systematic instruction.

2) The Hebrew Language. Hebrew is Israel's historic language, and the key to all Israel's treasures; and, being the key and receptacle of Israel's message to mankind, no other language, whether living or dead, has had such a vast and eternal span of influence. It is the most important of human tongues, the language of languages, the Sacred Tongue. Every Jewish child is entitled to the possession of an intimate, even if not extensive, knowledge of the Sacred Tongue, which shall give that child a lot and portion in the synagogue, the heart of Jewish communal life. A Hebrew-less Jewry has no future, because it cannot fairly be said to have a present.

3) The Sacred Scriptures. The beginnings of Israel's history as related in the Pentateuch should early form part of the child's soul-life. But we must go beyond the Pentateuch, and teach the whole Bible story. The main stress must be laid on the living truths underlying the narration of the facts. It is these truths, enshrined not only in Bible history, but in prophecy, psalm, proverb and moral discourse, that are of transcendent worth to the spiritual development of the child. Through these truths, the Bible is a Tree of Life to them that grasp it.

4) Jewish History. Jewish History is a continuous revelation, with a divine lesson for each generation. Nobody can understand the Jew—the Jew cannot understand himself—if he knows nothing of Jewish history beyond the Chumesh, or the Bible or even Josephus. Every Jew should know the outstanding events and personalities of every age in Jewish history, with appropriate selections from our imperishable literary monuments. Only he who

IV. RE'EH

XI, 26–32. THE TWO WAYS

These seven verses form the peroration and summing up of the Second Discourse; and, at the same time, are an introduction to the Code itself, which begins with XII, 1 and ends with XXVI. It is an earnest appeal that a right choice be made between the Two Ways now before Israel. In the words, "blessing" and "curse," Moses sets forth the greatness of the decision now to be taken. The entire future of the nation depends upon the right choice. This theme is further developed in XXVIII–XXX.

IV. RE'EH

11 26. Behold, I set before you this day a blessing and a curse; 27. the blessing, if ye shall hearken unto the commandments of the LORD your God, which I command you this day: 28. and the curse, if ye shall not hearken unto the commandments of the LORD your God, but turn aside out of the way which I command you this day,
to go after other gods, which ye have not known.
29. And it shall come to pass, when the LORD thy God shall bring thee into the land whither thou goest to possess it, that thou shalt set the blessing upon mount Gerizim, and the curse upon mount Ebal. 30. Are they not beyond

26. I set before you. Both as individuals and as a nation they were endowed with free-will, and the choice between the Two Ways rested with themselves. All that Moses could do was clearly to define the alternatives, and point out whither each of them led; cf. XXX, 15.

28. which ye have not known. Cf. XXXII, 17, "new gods that came up of late, whom your fathers dreaded not"; deities that have not shown and, being dead, could not show, the saving power they had experienced at the hand of God.

29. set the blessing. To impress the truth of the Two Ways more deeply upon Israel, Moses was to arrange a symbolic representation of the Blessing and Curse; XXVII.

Gerizim . . . Ebal. The two most prominent hills on either side of what is the natural centre of Palestine.

MOSES' SECOND DISCOURSE—continued

2. THE REHEARSAL OF THE CODE

XII-XXVI

At this point we pass to the Code of Laws. All that has gone before may be regarded as the religious and historical prelude to the rehearsal of the statutes and judgements which now follow. So far Moses had been speaking in general terms of the necessity of obedience to the laws of God, reminding them of the Covenant of Horeb, and the fundamental principles of Israel's Religion. He now proceeds to give detailed laws and precepts that were to govern their lives in the Land of Promise.

Jordan, behind the way of the going down of the sun, in the land of the Canaanites which dwell in the Arabah, over against Gilgal, beside the terebinths of Moreh? 31. For ye are to pass over Jordan to go in to possess the land which the LORD your God giveth you, and ye shall possess it, and dwell therein. 32. And ye shall observe to do all the statutes and the judgements which I set before you this day.

These laws deal with

1) Religious institutions and worship (XII, 1–XVI, 17);
2) Government of the people (XVI, 18–XVIII);
3) Criminal law (XIX–XXI, 1–9); and
4) Domestic life (XXI, 10–XXV).
5) Conclusion of Code: First-fruits, tithes, and accompanying prayers.

Some commentators detect in all these chapters an elaboration of the basic laws contained in the Decalogue. Thus XII–XIV deal with the worship of God, and are an expansion of the first three of the Ten Commandments. In XV–XVI, 17 we have an enumeration of Holy Festivals analogous to the Sacred Day of the week. Chaps. XVI–XVIII deal with civil and religious government, which plays the same part in the national life as the authority of parents plays in the life of the family. The remainder of the section corresponds generally to the second half of the Decalogue, and treats of the relationship of man to his fellow-man.

1) RELIGIOUS INSTITUTIONS AND WORSHIP

XII, 1–XVI, 17

This section includes the laws a) concerning the Central Sanctuary; b) distinctiveness in worship; c) against heathen rites and religious seducers; d) of Holiness (concerning clean and unclean, tithes, year of release, firstlings); and e) the Three Feasts.

a) THE LAW OF THE CENTRAL SANCTUARY

XII, 1–28

When Israel is settled in the Land, sacrifices shall be offered only in the spot to be chosen by God.

1. in the land. "Laws that relate to the Land need be observed only in the Land; all other laws must be observed everywhere, in Palestine or out of Palestine" (Sifri).

2. ye shall surely destroy. Better, ye shall utterly destroy. Their first duty would be the eradication of every trace of heathenism.

Chapter XII

12 1. These are the statutes and the judgements, which ye shall observe to do in the land which the Lord, the God of thy fathers, hath given thee to possess it, all the days that ye live upon the earth. 2. Ye shall surely destroy all the places, wherein the nations which ye shall possess served their gods, upon the high mountains, and upon the hills, and under every green tree: 3. and ye shall break down their altars, and dash in pieces their pillars, and burn their Asherim with fire; and ye shall hew down the graven images of their gods; and ye shall destroy their name out of that place. 4. Ye shall not do so unto the out of that place. "The injunction to destroy idolatrous images applies only to the Holy Land, and not to those places outside it where Jews reside" (Sifri).

4. not do so. The Israelites were not, like the Canaanites, to worship God on the "high mountains, and under every green tree," but were to do so in a Central Sanctuary as stated in the following v. Some Rabbis, however, connected this v. with the one immediately preceding, and deduced therefrom the prohibition to obliterate in any way the Divine Name in a scroll or book. In later ages, it became customary to bury disused Hebrew books, so as not to dispose of them in any way that would involve destroying something containing a Divine Name. Hence the institution of the Genizah in Eastern Jewish Communities, and the periodic burial of disused, tattered, and fragmentary books of Scripture and devotion (שֵׁמוֹת) in Russo-Polish Jewries.

5. but unto the place. This insistence upon the eventual establishment of one Central Sanctuary for all Israel was for the purpose of ensuring unity in national life. The Central Altar was to form a rallying-point to the Israelites wherever they resided, and prove a strong factor in welding the tribes into one compact body. When Jeroboam desired to strengthen the schism in Israel and separate the Ten Tribes from Judah, he set up two new centres of worship.

which the LORD your God. Though Jerusalem was the ultimate place chosen, it is not here in view. God might from time to time designate different places where offerings were to be brought. Thus, in XXVII, 5f, Israel is commanded to build an altar on Mount Ebal and sacrifice burnt-offerings upon it. Thereafter Shiloh was for centuries the home of God's choice; see Jeremiah VII, 12. Israel was to be guided in this matter by the Prophets. The Prophet Gad tells David to erect an altar in the threshing floor of Araunah in Jerusalem (II Sam. XXIV, 18); and other instances are found in Judges VI, 26; XIII, 16–20; I Kings XVIII, 32. There is no contradiction between the law of the Central Sanctuary and Exod. XX, 21 (XX, 24 in the English Bible) which, contrary to the wrong interpretation placed upon it by Bible Critics, does not mean that the Israelite could offer up his sacrifices in any spot he chose. See Additional Note G, p. 452.

8–14. Private Altars to be Prohibited

8. that we do here this day. Until the Central Sanctuary had its ultimate fixed abode in Jerusalem, it was permitted to offer sacrifices on private altars. This, in the opinion of many Talmudic teachers, was certainly so in days of unrest, like the time of the Judges. According to other traditions, sacrificing on private altars became again permissible after the Destruction of the Temple. It must have been such a tradition that prompted the Jews in Egypt to erect, after the Fall of the First Temple, a sacrificial sanctuary of their own—the Temple of Onias (Hoffmann).

9. to the rest . . . inheritance. The former denotes Shiloh where the Ark first found a resting place; and the latter denotes Jerusalem (Sifri).

10. he giveth you rest. This did not occur until the reign of David. Hence the statement in II Sam. vii, 1, "when the king (David) dwelt in his house, and the Lord had given him rest from all his enemies round about," that the desire

God hath blessed thee. 8. Ye shall not do after all the things that we do here this day, every man whatsoever is right in his own eyes: 9. for ye are not as yet come to the rest and to the inheritance, which the LORD your God giveth thee. 10. But when ye go over Jordan, and dwell in the land which the LORD your God causeth you to inherit, and he giveth you rest from all your enemies round about, so that ye dwell in safety; *ii 11. then it shall come to pass that the place which the LORD your God shall choose to cause his name to dwell there, thither shall ye bring all that I command you; your burnt offerings, and your sacrifices, your tithes, and the heave offering of your hand, and all your choice vows which ye vow unto the LORD: 12. and ye shall rejoice before the LORD your God, ye and your sons, and your daughters, and your menservants, and your maidservants, and the Levite that is within your gates, forasmuch as he hath no portion nor inheritance with you.

to build a Temple arose in his heart. Before that final resting-place in Jerusalem was available, a temporary abode was found in Shiloh; Josh. XVIII, 1.

15–19. Extension of Prohibition of Private Sanctuary

Even the mere eating of sacrificial foods is forbidden outside the city of the Central Sanctuary.

15. mayest . . . eat flesh. See on v. 20.

16. not eat the blood. See on v. 23.

17. thou mayest not eat. Mention of burnt-offerings and sacrifices is omitted from the list, because these could only be eaten by the priests within the Temple precincts (Lev. VI, 19, VII, 6); whereas the other sacred foods could be eaten anywhere within the limits of the Holy City.

13. Take heed to thyself that thou offer not thy burnt offerings in every place that thou seest:

in one of thy tribes, there thou shalt offer thy burnt offerings, and there thou shalt do all that I command thee. 15. Notwithstanding thou mayest kill and eat flesh within all thy gates, after all the desire of thy soul, according to the blessing of the LORD thy God which he hath given thee:
the unclean and the clean may eat thereof, as of the gazelle, and as of the hart. 16. Only ye shall not eat the blood; thou shalt pour it out upon the earth as water. 17. Thou mayest not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn, or of thy wine, or of thine oil, or the firstlings of thy herd or of thy flock, nor any of thy vows which thou vowest, nor thy freewill offerings, nor the heave offering of thine hand: 18. but thou shalt eat them before the LORD thy God in the place which the LORD thy God shall choose, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy manservant, and thy maidservant, and the Levite that is within thy gates: and thou shalt rejoice before the LORD thy God in all that thou puttest thine hand unto.
19. Take heed to thyself that thou forsake not the Levite as long as thou livest upon thy land.

upon thy land. The Levite is to be supported even in the Sabbatical year and the Jubilee, as long as he is resident in the Holy Land. Outside its border, he is to be treated as merely a poor man in need of assistance (Sifri).

v. 21. חסר יו״ד

20–22. The Slaughter of Animals for Food

In Lev. xvii it is laid down that every animal, even for ordinary consumption, must be slain at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting. This was a temporary precept for the period of the Israelites' sojourn in the Wilderness, when they dwelt in the vicinity of the Tabernacle. Scripture specifies the reason for that temporary precept; viz., to avoid the suspicion that they were slaughtering the animal as a sacrifice to "the satyrs"; see on Lev. xvii, 7. This precept is replaced by another in this chapter of Deuteronomy. Israel was now about to settle in Canaan, and the individual Israelite could not be expected to go to the Central Sanctuary in Shiloh or Jerusalem whenever he wished to partake of meat food.

20. the desire of thy soul. In Heb. the "soul" is conceived as the seat of emotion and appetite.

21. as I have commanded thee. This cannot refer to v. 15, as in that case the verb would not be in the perfect tense, but the participle would be used (cf. xi, 8, 13, 22, 27, 28; xii, 11, etc.). Tradition connects as I have commanded thee with the words, thou shalt kill. We have thus an indication that Moses had previously taught the people a method of slaughtering animals. Since this is nowhere mentioned in the Pentateuch, it follows that Shechitah, the Jewish method of slaughter, must have been communicated orally to Israel.

20. When the LORD thy God shall enlarge thy border, as he hath promised thee, and thou shalt say, I will eat flesh, because thy soul de-sireth to eat flesh; thou mayest eat flesh, after all the desire of thy soul. 21. If the place which the LORD thy God shall choose to put his name
there be too far from thee, then thou shalt kill of thy herd and of thy flock, which the LORD hath given thee, as I have commanded thee, and thou shalt eat within thy gates, after all the desire of thy soul. 22. Even as the gazelle and as the hart is eaten, so thou shalt eat thereof: the unclean and the clean shall eat thereof alike.
23. Only be sure that thou eat not the blood: for the blood is the life; and thou shalt not eat the life with the flesh.

22. gazelle . . . hart. These were "clean" animals, but were not acceptable as offerings on the Altar, not being domestic animals; Lev. I, 2.

shall eat thereof alike. A person ritually unclean could not partake of the flesh of a sacrificial animal, but they could join in a non-sacrificial meal.

23–28. WARNING AGAINST BLOOD

This law is mentioned as early as Gen. IX, 4 and repeated Lev. XVII, 11, 14; XIX, 26. The Jewish method of slaughter, and the salting of meat, have as one of their main purposes the draining away of the blood.

23. only be sure. lit. "be strong"; resist the temptation with all thy strength.

the blood is the life. See on Lev. XVII, 11, 14.

thou shall not eat the life with the flesh. The Rabbis understood this as meaning that it is forbidden to eat a limb torn from a living animal; see on Gen. IX, 4.

Not only in regard to the place of sacrifice, but in regard to the mode of Divine Worship, shall the Israelites be

Thou shalt not eat it; that it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee, when thou shalt do that which is right n the eyes of the LORD. 26. Only thy holy things which thou hast, and thy vows, thou shalt take, and go unto the place which the LORD shall choose: 27. and thou shalt offer thy burnt offerings, the flesh and the blood, upon the altar of the LORD thy God: and the blood of thy sacrifices shall be poured out upon the altar of the LORD thy God, and thou shalt eat the flesh. 28. distinguished from their heathen neighbours. Israel shall especially beware of the hideous abominations—such as human sacrifice—that accompany their worship. This is one of the many exhortations of this nature that, "like a chorus, break in upon both the narratives and laws throughout Deuteronomy" (G. A. Smith).

מִפָּנֶיךָ וּפֶּן־תִּדְרֹשׁ לֵאלֹהֵיהֶם לֵאמֹר אֵיכָה יַעַבְדוּ הַגּוֹיִם
31 הָאֵלֶּה אֶת־אֱלֹהֵיהֶם וְאֶעֱשֶׂה־כֵּן גַּם־אָנִי׃ לֹא־תַעֲשֶׂה
כֵן לַיהוָה אֱלֹהֶיךָ כִּי כָל־תּוֹעֲבַת יְהוָה אֲשֶׁר שָׂנֵא עָשׂוּ

לֵאלֹהֵיהֶם׃

30. how do these nations serve. Better, how used these nations to worship. The meaning of this warning is strikingly illustrated by the narrative in II Kings XVII, 25f. Just as these foreign settlers in N. Palestine wished to follow the way of the former inhabitants in regard to worship, so the Israelites might be tempted to inquire after, and follow, the minhag of the peoples whose land they would soon inhabit. There would be fatal danger in such a course, even if the imitation confined itself to forms of worship. With the alien form, the alien idea would soon find entrance.

31. every abomination. It was the immorality and inhumanity of Canaanite religion that rendered it abominable in the eyes of God, and imposed upon the Israelites the duty of exterminating it.

even their sons. To say nothing of ordinary human sacrifices, including the killing of aged parents. R. Akiba cites a particularly loathsome instance of such a murder, which he himself had witnessed.

they burn in the fire to their gods. Human sacrifice was the practice among the primeval Greeks and Romans, Celts, Slavs and Scandinavians. It was in use among the Germans down to late Roman times ; and was widespread among the ancient Semites, especially in times of national danger or disaster. Recent excavations in Palestine, at Gezer, Taanach and Megiddo, have revealed regular cemeteries round the heathen altars, in which skeletons of scores of infants have been found, showing traces of slaughter and partial consumption by sacrificial fire.

that thou be not ensnared to follow them, after that they be destroyed from before thee; and that thou inquire not after their gods, saying,
How do these nations serve their gods? even so will I do likewise. 31. Thou shalt not do so unto the LORD thy God: for every abomination to the LORD, which he hateth, have they done unto their gods; for even their sons and their daughters do they burn in the fire to their gods.

Israel's fight against this horrible aberration of the religious sense began with the story of the sacrifice of Isaac (see Genesis, p. 182), and was continued throughout the centuries. It is one of the bitter ironies of history, that the one People which for a thousand years fought this horror, and whose religion forbids its followers the eating of any blood in the most rigorous way, should itself have to suffer from the libellous accusation of ritual murder and the use of human blood for religious purposes. Even in the Twentieth Century, this foul and Satanic lie was officially levelled against Israel in the Beilis trial at Kieff in 1913; and only last year it was broadcast by Nazi leaders in their campaign of ruin against the Jewish population of Germany. In regard to the Nazi resurrection of the fable of ritual murder, it is well to recall that in 1912 no less than 215 non-Jewish leaders in German public life, learning, literature, theology, science and the arts, issued a protest against this cruel and utterly baseless libel on Judaism. They wrote: "This unscrupulous fiction, spread among the people, has from the Middle Ages until recent times led to terrible consequences. It has incited the ignorant masses to outrage and massacre, and has driven misguided crowds to pollute themselves with the innocent blood of their Jewish fellow-men. And yet not a shadow of proof has ever been adduced to justify this crazy belief." See Cecil Roth, The Ritual Murder Libel and the Jew, London, 1935; and A Book of Jewish Thoughts, Oxford edition, p. 181.

c) RELIGIOUS SEDUCERS

In addition to the natural temptation to worship as the Canaanites did, there might be the danger of religious seduction on the part of false prophets, self-deluded visionaries, and base men.

1. thou shalt not add thereto. See on IV, 2.

"Constant changes would tend to disturb the whole system of the Torah, and would lead people to believe that it was not of Divine origin. But permission is at the same time given to the wise men, i.e. the Sanhedrin of every generation, to make 'fences' round the judgments of the Torah, in order to ensure their keeping. In the same manner, they have the power temporarily to dispense with some religious act prescribed in the Torah, or to allow that which is forbidden, if exceptional circumstances and events require it; but none of the laws can be abrogated permanently" (Maimonides).

This prohibition is of more than theoretic interest in modern Judaism. The various attempts made by revolutionary religious leaders to "accommodate" Judaism to present-day conditions have all suffered spiritual shipwreck, because they acted in defiance of either ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, or of neither shall ye diminish from it. On the one hand, some attempted "to diminish" Judaism by such vital things as the Sabbath, the Hebrew Language, and the Love of Zion. And, on the

ye observe to do: thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it.
2. If there arise in the midst of thee a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and he give thee a sign or a wonder, 3. and the sign or the wonder come

other hand, there are those who, besides, are prepared "to add" to the Jewish Heritage things that constitute a serious weakening of the Unity of God, and a radical departure from other fundamental principles of the Jewish Faith.

2. a prophet. A false prophet.

a dreamer of dreams. In Scripture, God often communicates with His chosen servants through the medium of dreams (cf. Num. xii, 6); and it would be easy for one who had experienced a dream to regard it as the vehicle of a Divine message.

or a wonder. Better, or a portent. Not necessarily a miracle, but a prediction of something that shall happen in the future.

3. saying. The sense of the v. is, And the sign or the wonder came to pass whereof he spoke unto thee, saying, If what I foretell happens, let us go after other gods.

which thou hast not known. Cf. xi, 28. These are the words of Moses, and are not part of the remarks of the "prophet."

4. thou shalt not hearken. "Reason which declares his testimony false is more to be trusted than the eye which sees his signs" (Maimonides).

4 לֹא תִשְׁמַע אֶל־דִּבְרֵי הַנָּבִיא הַהוּא אוֹ אֶל־חוֹלֵם הַחֲלוֹם proveth you. i.e. the fulfilment of the prediction is not evidence of the validity of the man's claims, but God is putting you to the test, whether your loyalty to God can withstand the most insidious seductions from His revealed will. This refusal to recognise miracle as necessarily a proof of the truth of a doctrine is typically Jewish. When Sir George Adam Smith writes that it is not in harmony with both the official and the popular mind of ancient Jewry, he does so as a New Testament apologist and in disregard of Rabbinic teaching. The latter can be learned from the story of R. Joshua's unchallenged assertion אין סומכין על הנס, " Miracles in themselves cannot be invoked as decisive in matters of reason and law." A thousand years later, Hallevi and Maimonides likewise maintained that miraculous acts can on no account be deemed as an unerring attestation of a Divine mission.

to know whether. These words do not mean that God desires to know whether they loved God, for He already knows it. The expression is an anthropomorphism, Scripture using " the language of men." If the Israelites succumbed to the test, it would demonstrate the weakness of their attachment to God; if they came through it successfully, their Faith would be strengthened as a result of the trial.

5. ye shall walk . . . unto him. lit. " after the LORD your God shall ye go, and him shall ye fear, and his commandments shall ye keep, and his voice shall ye obey, and him shall ye worship, and unto him shall ye cleave."

hearken unto the words of that prophet, or unto that dreamer of dreams: for the LORD your God proveth you, to know whether ye love the LORD your God with all your heart and with all your soul. 5. Ye shall walk after the LORD your God, and fear him, and keep his commandments, and obey his voice, and ye shall serve him, and cleave unto him. 6. And that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams, shall be put to death; because he hath spoken rebellion against the LORD your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt, and redeemed thee out of the house of bondage, to draw thee aside out of the way which the LORD thy God commanded thee to walk in. So shalt thou put away the evil from the midst of thee.

6. rebellion. lit. "turning aside," apostasy.

brought you out . . . redeemed thee. He hath spoken rebellion against Him who is your Saviour and Redeemer, Who alone deserves Israel's undivided allegiance and lasting gratitude.

Hoffmann calls attention to the fact that Christian theologians have often explained v. 1–6 in relation to the founder of their religion. The rise of Christianity was indeed a test unto Israel; so also were the expansion of Christianity and its triumphant world-dominion an age-long trial of Israel's loyalty to God and His Torah. Israel nobly stood that test and trial. It remained undazzled by the power of the dominant Faith, and undaunted

As against God, even the closest personal ties are not to protect the would-be idolater from unsparing punishment.

7. the son of thy mother. i.e. even if he be the son of thy mother. The v. speaks here of two brothers who are on mutually affectionate terms; and in the days of polygamy, the sons of the same mother were more intimate with one another than with the sons of their father by another wife. "As so often, the Septuagint and the Samaritan Text misunderstand the Hebrew original, and insert the words, the son of thy father or before 'the son of thy mother'—which renders it trivial" (Koenig).

stone him with stones, that he die; because he hath sought to draw thee away from the LORD thine hand shall be first. In the public infliction of the death penalty, according to XVII, 7. The convicting witness must bear the initial responsibility of the act, cost him what sorrow it may.

Jewish history does not record a single instance of punishment for religious seduction by false prophet or member of one's family.

confiscated the possession of heretics. Persecution became more frequent because of the plunder that accompanied it (Guttmann).

Deut. XIII, 13–19 has had a curious history, both in the Synagogue and in the Church. In the Synagogue, it was maintained that this law was not to be carried out, even if only one mezuzah were found in the tainted city, as the destruction of the city would involve the cardinal sin of destroying the Name of God inscribed on that mezuzah ; cf. on XII, 4. Some Rabbis go further, so as to declare, עיר הנדחת לא היתה ולא עתידה להיות, "The case here described of a city tainted with idolatry never occurred, nor was likely to occur." This section, they said in effect, was only added to the Torah for the sake of deepening the understanding of the vital necessity of resisting all temptation to idolatry. This view was not shared by the Church. Deut. XIII, 13–19 was embodied in the Canon Law; and the ghastly records of medieval persecution show that it was not construed as a mere warning against idolatry. In the year 1097, when the Crusaders arrived at Pelagonia in Macedon, and learned that the inhabitants of the town were "heretics," they paused in their pilgrimage to the Holy Sepulchre, conquered the city, razed it to the ground, and put all its inhabitants to the sword. Again, at the beginning of the thirteenth century, Crusaders annihilated the 20,000 Albigenses, men, women and children, who had fled to Beziers, in Southern France. Not one was spared. (Lea, History of the Inquisition in the Middle Ages, I, p. 107, 154).

d) LAWS OF HOLINESS

(CHAPTERS XIV–XV)

The opening words of this chapter are introductory to the regulations following. There being a close kinship between God and Israel, His people were subject to special regulations that would distinguish them from other nations and constantly remind them of the duty of holiness.

XIV, 1–2. AGAINST HEATHEN RITES

1. ye are the children of the LORD. Cf. Exod. IV, 22. "Many ancient nations believed in their descent from gods and demi-gods. But the relation was conceived physically. In the Hebrew Scriptures, however, God's

CHAPTER XIV

14 1. Ye are the children of the LORD your God: ye shall not cut yourselves, nor make any baldness between your eyes for the dead. 2. For fatherhood and Israel's sonship are historical and ethical, and based on God's love, deliverance and providence" (G. A. Smith). According to the interpretation of Rabbi Judah, the people of Israel were only children of the LORD so long as they conformed to the Divine will, and they forfeited the honour when they were disobedient; but Rabbi Meir maintained that, whether their conduct was filial or unfilial, they could never cease being children of the LORD.

cut yourselves. As a sign of mourning; see I Kings XVIII, 28. The Israelites were not to gash themselves in their grief: firstly, because any deliberate disfigurement of the body was forbidden; and secondly, because as "children of God" they were to regard a bereavement as His decree, and, therefore, something to be accepted with resignation. The Sifri gives a homiletic interpretation to the Heb. לא תתגדדו; "Ye shall not cut yourselves up into factions"; i.e. a holy people must be a united people (לא תעשו אגודות אגודות).

nor make any baldness. This disfigurement was likewise a heathen mourning custom, the hair being sometimes buried with the corpse as an offering to the dead. In Lev. XXI, 5 a similar prohibition had been addressed to the priests; in Deut. the law is given a wider application, in order to embrace the whole of the people who were "a kingdom of priests."

2. an holy people. See on VII, 6.

3–20. CLEAN AND UNCLEAN BEASTS, FISHES AND BIRDS

The twofold purpose of the dietary laws is clearly defined. In the first place, Israel is to be "holy," i.e. distinct, marked off from the other peoples; and these laws powerfully served to maintain the separateness of Israel. In the second place, the creatures which are forbidden are described as "abominable things"—in themselves loathsome and undesirable as articles of diet; see Introductory Note on Lev. XI, Leviticus, p. 92.

In Deut. we have something more than a mere repetition; there is just the kind of exposition which is appropriate to the circumstances of Moses' farewell to his people.

4. the ox, the sheep, the goat. In Lev. XI, we merely have the general classification given in v. 6 of this chapter of forbidden animals, with mention of some. Here the animals are named that may be eaten.

thou art an holy people unto the LORD thy God, and the LORD hath chosen thee to be a peculiar people unto himself, out of all peoples that are upon the face of the earth.

3. Thou shalt not eat any abominable thing.
4. These are the beasts which ye shall eat: the ox, the sheep, and the goat, 5. the hart, and the gazelle, and the roebuck, and the wild goat, and the pygarg, and the antelope, and the chamois.
6. And every beast that parteth the hoof, and hath the hoof cloven in two, and cheweth the cud, among the beasts, that ye shall eat. 7.
Nevertheless these ye shall not eat of them that chew the cud, or of them that have the hoof cloven: the camel, and the hare, and the coney, because they chew the cud but part not the hoof, they are unclean unto you: 8. and the swine, because he parteth the hoof but cheweth not the cud, he is unclean unto you: of their flesh ye shall not eat, and their carcases ye shall not touch.

9. These ye shall eat of all that are in the waters: whatsoever hath fins and scales shall 11–20. Of birds. Only the unclean are here named. In Lev. XI, these are mentioned in a slightly different order.

13. glede. This bird is not mentioned in Lev. XI, 14. According to the Talmud, all the names in this v. refer to the same bird, which was known under different designations.

20. clean fowls. Better, clean winged things (AJ). In Lev. XI, 21f, a distinction is drawn between "winged creeping things that go upon all four" and those that do not,—the former class being prohibited as food. According to Sifri, the phrase "clean winged things" corresponds to the permitted "winged creeping things" in Leviticus; and the unclean species alluded to in the preceding v. is the same prohibited kind mentioned in Lev. XI, 23.

21. anything that dieth of itself. Heb. נבלה; the true meaning of this Heb. term seems to be "the carcase of an animal which has not been killed according to the method of Shechitah" (Hoffmann). It would thus include not only an animal which died a natural death, but one which has been put to death by shooting.

And all winged creeping things are unclean unto you: they shall not be eaten. 20. Of all clean fowls ye may eat.

21. Ye shall not eat of any thing that dieth of itself: thou mayest give it unto the stranger that is within thy gates, that he may eat it; or thou mayest sell it unto a foreigner: for thou art an holy people unto the LORD thy God. Thou shalt not seethe a kid in its mother's milk.* v and the "stranger." In Lev. the "stranger" meant the non-Israelite who had become a proselyte in the full sense of the word, a ger tzedek. Here the "stranger that is within thy gates" refers to the time when Israel would be settled in their Land and would have in their midst not only proselytes, but also men who while they had abandoned idolatry did not completely take upon themselves the life and religious practices of the Israelite. The Rabbis called this class of resident aliens ger toshav; and this v. refers to that class, who were neither Israelites by birth or conversion, nor "foreigners." See Exodus, p. 132.

22–29. Tithes

A tenth of all the yearly produce shall be set aside, taken to the Sanctuary, and eaten there. This tenth is the so-called "second tithe," as contrasted with the tithe of the produce that was to be given for the maintenance of the Levites; Num. XVIII, 26f.

22. all the increase of thy seed. This is defined in the next v. as including corn, wine and oil.

year by year. The tithe must be computed upon the produce of each year separately.

23. before the Lord. i.e. at the Central Sanctuary.

to fear the Lord thy God. The Biblical phrase for being filled with the sense of dependence upon God. And that was the purpose of bidding the Israelite eat this tithe in the Holy City. It would impress upon him the thought that the year's produce was the bounty of God. Furthermore, "inasmuch as the man and his household would not be likely to consume the whole of the tithe, he would be compelled to give part away in charity" (Maimonides).

22. Thou shalt surely tithe all the increase of thy seed, that which cometh forth of the field year by year. 23. And thou shalt eat before the LORD thy God, in the place which he shall choose to cause his name to dwell there, the tithe of thy corn, of thy wine, and of thine oil, and the firstlings of thy herd and of thy flock; that thou mayest learn to fear the LORD thy God always. 24. And if the way be too long for thee, so that thou art not able to carry it, because the place is too far from thee, which the LORD thy God shall choose to set his name there, when the LORD thy God shall bless thee: 25. then shalt thou turn it into money, and bind up the money in thine hand, and shalt go unto the place which the LORD thy God shall choose: 26. and thou shalt bestow the money for whatsoever thy soul desireth, for oxen, or for sheep, or for wine, or for strong drink, or for whatsoever thy soul asketh of thee: and thou shalt eat there before the LORD thy God, and thou shalt rejoice, thou and thine household: 27. and the Levite that is within thy gates, thou shalt not forsake him; for he hath no portion nor inheritance with thee.

24–27. Israelites who dwell too far from the Sanctuary may turn their tithe into money, purchase at the Temple what they desire, and feast before God with their households and Levites.

26. for strong drink. Heb. שכר. "The attempt is sometimes made to argue that the juice of the vine praised or prescribed in Scripture is never an intoxicating liquor. That is clearly contradicted here" (G. A. Smith).

27. the Levite. Cf. XII, 12, 19.

28–29. The Poor Tithe

This was due in the third and sixth years of the Sabbatical period instead of the second tithe, which, or its equivalent in money, had to be consumed in Jerusalem. In those years, what would have been the Second Tithe is to be retained at home for the poor to consume. The third year is called "the year of the tithing" in xxvi, 12.

may bless thee. The purpose of the poor tithe was to teach the salutary doctrine that man's possessions are only truly blessed when he permits others to join with him in their enjoyment. Self-indulgence, without a thought for those in need of assistance, brings no lasting satisfaction; and such a mode of living is without blessing.

28. At the end of every three years thou shalt bring forth all the tithe of thine increase in the same year, and shalt lay it up within thy gates: 29. and the Levite, because he hath no portion nor inheritance with thee, and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, which are within thy gates, shall come, and shall eat and be satisfied; that the LORD thy God may bless thee in all the work of thine hand which thou doest.* vi

CHAPTER XV

THE YEAR OF RELEASE

Every seventh year shall be a year of remission for all debts; this however shall not operate as a motive for refusing loans. Likewise, the seventh year of the individual's service brought freedom to the Hebrew bondman, with liberal parting gifts from his master.

1–11. OF DEBTS

1. at the end of every seven years. It is possible that these words signify "when each seventh year has arrived"; cf. Jer. XXXIV, 14 (Exodus, p. 520) where "at the end of seven years" clearly means, "in the seventh year." See, however, comment on next v.

a release. Heb. shemittah. This "release" took two forms. 1) The soil was not to be sown; see Exod. XXIII, 10f, and Lev. XXV, 2f. 2) the remission of loans.

2. not exact it of his neighbour. Or, " he shall not press his neighbour for payment." The Jewish traditional view is that the Year of Release in regard to debts does not come into operation until the end of the seventh year. This law was intended for an agricultural community, in which each family had its homestead. A debt would only be contracted in case of misfortune. The loan was, therefore, an act of charity, rather than a business transaction. Circumstances had altered altogether when economic life became more complex and people engaged in commerce. Debts contracted in the course of trading belonged to quite a different category, and this law could not fairly be invoked for their cancellation. Consequently in the first century of the present era, Hillel instituted a method whereby the operation of the year of release did not affect debts that had been delivered to the Court before the intervention of the year of release. Without actually handing over the bond or promissory note to the Court, the creditor could secure his debt against forfeiture by appearing before the Beth Din, and making the declaration, " I announce unto you, judges of this Court, that I shall collect any debt which I may have outstanding with N.N., whenever I desire." This institution was known as Prosbul.

he hath lent unto his neighbour; he shall not the LORD'S release hath been proclaimed. 3.

Of a foreigner thou mayest exact it: but whatsoever of thine is with thy brother thine hand temporarily, for trade. He is not, like the Israelite (Exod. XXIII, 10f), under the obligation of surrendering the produce of his land every seventh year; there is, therefore, no reason in his case for any relaxation of his creditor's claims (Driver). It should be noted that the Torah does not declare that the creditor must exact payment; he may do so, if he wish.

thine hand shall release. lit. "let thy hand release." The Rabbis understood this to mean that payment could not be claimed; but, if the debtor voluntarily offered it, it may be accepted.

4. no poor with thee. This expresses an ideal which would only be realised if the condition of obedience in v. 5 were fulfilled. There is thus no contradiction with the statement in v. 11, "the poor shall never cease out of the land."

6. as he promised thee. See VII, 13; Exod. XXIII, 25; Lev. XXVI, 3f.

of "there shall be no poor with thee." The Israelites began to engage in commerce in the days of King Solomon. Isa. II, 7 and Hos. XII, 8 testify to considerable foreign trade in the long reigns of Uzziah and Jeroboam II. Of later times, the Greek geographer Strabo writes: "These Jews have penetrated to every city, and it would not be easy to find a single place in the inhabited world which has not received this race, and where it has not become master." Through no fault of their own, Jews were divorced from agriculture and confined to commerce for over 1500 years. However, commerce is not their native bent, as is evidenced by the fact that, in recent generations, leadership has almost everywhere been wrested from them by the non-Jewish newcomers in industrial and financial enterprise; see p. 200.

7–11. The Israelite is warned against letting the approach of the Year of Release hinder him from helping his needy brother.

7. within any of thy gates. i.e. in one of thy cities (cf. XII, 12); and the Sifri bases therein the rule, "The poor of thine own city should be helped before those of another city."

7. If there be with thee a poor man, one of thy brethren, within any of thy gates in thy land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother: 8. but thou shalt surely open thine hand unto him, and shalt surely lend him sufficient for his need in that which he wanteth.
9. Beware that there be not a base thought in thine heart, saying, The seventh year, the year of release, is at hand; and thine eye be evil against thy poor brother, and thou give him nought;
and he cry unto the LORD against thee, and it be sin unto thee. 10. Thou shalt surely give him, and thine heart shall not be grieved when thou givest unto him; because that for this thing the LORD thy God shall bless thee in all thy work, and in all that thou puttest thine hand unto.
11. For the poor shall never cease out of the land;
therefore I command thee, saying, Thou shalt surely open thine hand unto thy brother, to thy needy, and to thy poor, in thy land.

12–18. The Release of Slaves

A man's misfortune may be so overwhelming that he could not save himself by a loan. To avoid destitution, a Hebrew might sell himself temporarily; i.e. become a member of another's household, and earn his food and shelter by his labour. The "slavery" of the Bible was in no way identical with what was understood by that term in Greece or Rome. The master had many obligations towards the bondman, and the infliction of bodily injury by the master secured the bondman his immediate freedom; see Leviticus, p. 284.

In the seventh year of service the bondman goes free, and his master is required at the time of the emancipation liberally to supply the new freedman with an equipment that shall enable him to begin life again with some confidence for the future. This provision is characteristic of the humaneness and philanthropy of the Torah in regard to the bondman.

12. Hebrew woman. This is an addition to the law as stated in Exod. xxi, 1–6, and decrees that the same treatment is to be meted out to a man and woman. Exod. xxi, 7f refers to a different set of circumstances.

be sold. The Heb. could also mean "sell himself." According to the Talmud, Scripture here speaks of the case where a person is sold by the court of law because he had committed a burglary and could not repay what he had stolen; Exod. xxii, 2.

12. If thy brother, an Hebrew man, or an Hebrew woman, be sold unto thee, and serve thee six years; then in the seventh year thou shalt let him go free from thee. 13. And when thou lettest him go free from thee, thou shalt not let him go empty: 14. thou shalt furnish him liberally out of thy flock, and out of thy threshing-floor, and out of thy winepress: as the LORD thy God hath blessed thee thou shalt give unto him. 15. And thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondman in the land of Egypt, and the LORD thy God redeemed thee: therefore I command thee this thing to-day. 16. And it shall be, if he say unto thee, I will not go out from thee; because he loveth thee and thine house, because he is well with thee; 17. then thou shalt take an awl, and thrust it through his ear unto the door, and he shall be thy bondman for ever. And also unto thy bondwoman thou shalt do likewise. 18. It shall

Thou mightest say it refers to "thou shalt take an awl, and thrust it through the ear"; therefore the Torah states "and it shall be, 'if he say unto thee'; he, not she." Accordingly, the female slave had to leave in

18. for to the double. The master gets double value out of a slave of this kind as compared with a hireling, i.e. a day-labourer; the slave being a member of the household, the master could get work done by him at night as well as by day.

19–23. Of Firstlings

This paragraph, dealing with the firstlings of the cattle, should have followed on xiv, 22–29, the law of the tithe. But the last verses which mentioned the "poor tithe" suggested the subject of the treatment of the poor which occupied this chapter on to this point.

19. all the firstling males. For the idea of consecrating the firstborn, see on Exod. xiii, 2.

20. year by year. i.e. the offering must not be delayed beyond a year. This is not at variance with what was stated in Exod. xxii, 29 "on the eighth day thou shalt give it Me", for the Mechilta explains that to mean, from the eighth day onwards; cf. Lev. xxii, 27.

not seem hard unto thee, when thou lettest him go free from thee; for to the double of the hire of an hireling hath he served thee six years: and the LORD thy God shall bless thee in all that thou doest.* vii

19. All the firstling males that are born of thy herd and of thy flock thou shalt sanctify unto the LORD thy God: thou shalt do no work with the firstling of thine ox, nor shear the firstling of thy flock. 20. Thou shalt eat it before the LORD thy God year by year in the place which the LORD shall choose, thou and thy household. 21. And if it have any blemish, as if it be lame or blind, any ill blemish whatsoever, thou shalt not sacrifice it unto the LORD thy God. 22. Thou shalt eat it within thy gates: the unclean and the clean shall eat it alike, as the gazelle, and as the hart. 23. Only thou shalt not eat the blood thereof; thou shalt pour it out upon the ground as water.

21. have any blemish. The law of the firstlings is also dealt with in Lev. XXVII, 26, where it is forbidden to sanctify the firstling by using it as an offering for any other purpose. Also in Num. XVIII, 17f where the flesh of the firstling is declared to be the priest's. The words, "Thou shalt eat it before the LORD," in this section refer to the person who is entitled to eat it; i.e. the priest, as is prescribed in Numbers. As Deut. is a continuation of the preceding Books of the Pentateuch, it was obvious to Moses' hearers who it was that were to eat the firstling, since it had already been ordained and well understood (Hoffmann).

e) THE THREE PILGRIMAGE FESTIVALS

The law concerning the three annual pilgrimages to the Temple has already been given in Exod. xxiii, 14f; xxxiv, 18f; Lev. xxiii, 4f; and Num. xxviii, 16f. What distinguishes the statement of the law in Deut. is the emphasis upon the Central Sanctuary at which all Israel must gather on these Festivals. These Pilgrimage-Feasts had a double signification. They each had reference to a historical event of national importance, but they also marked the three seasons of the agricultural year. "It is well to keep in view the agricultural aspect of the Three Festivals. It helps us to realise the fact that Israel was once an agricultural people and that its commercial character is not, as is commonly thought, inborn, but is the result of the unkindly conditions in later ages. It is good for us and for the world at large to remember that the history of our race has its idyllic side" (M. Joseph).

1–8. The Passover

1. the month of Abib. i.e. of the green ears of corn; later known as Nisan.

CHAPTER XVI

16 1. Observe the month of Abib, and keep the passover unto the LORD thy God: for in the month of Abib the LORD thy God brought thee forth out of Egypt by night. 2. And thou shalt sacrifice the passover unto the LORD thy God, of the flock and the herd, in the place which the LORD shall choose to cause his name to dwell by night. In Num. XXXIII, 3 it is mentioned, "on the morrow after the passover, the children of Israel went out." The deliverance took place during the night (Exod. XII, 31), though the Exodus itself did not begin until the break of the day following the Passover-offering.

2. and thou shalt sacrifice. The natural way for the Israelites to express their gratitude for God's mercies was to bring offerings upon the Altar.

of the flock and the herd. In Exod. XII, 3f it is ordained that a lamb was to be used as the Paschal offering; but that restriction was for that special occasion only, not for the perennial observance to be carried out in the Temple. Another explanation is that the lamb was for the Paschal sacrifice, and the ox for the Festival-sacrifice (חגיגה). This is confirmed by what is narrated in II Chron. XXXV, 7f. In v. 13 of that chapter, it is stated that the lambs, which were the Passover-offering, "they roasted with fire according to the ordinance"; and the oxen, which were "the holy offerings," were boiled—this being forbidden with the Paschal sacrifice, but allowed with the Festival-sacrifice.

8. six days. In v. 3 and Exod. XIII, 6f, the command is to eat unleavened bread for seven days. There are several methods of reconciling the two statements. The most obvious is to connect v. 8 with what immediately precedes. After leaving the Holy City, unleavened bread is to be eaten for six more days. The Rabbis deduce from the passages that the eating of unleavened bread is obligatory on the first day of the Festival only; on the six other days, the Israelite may not eat that which is leavened, but he is not compelled to eat unleavened bread. He would not contravene the law, if, e.g., he subsisted on fruit.

on the seventh day. Of the Passover Festival.

Passover is the greatest of all the historical festivals, at once the starting-point of Israel's national life and a well-spring of its religious ideas. In the Biblical age, we find the Passover celebrated with especial solemnity at important epochs in the national life; such as the religious revivals which marked the reign of pious kings, like Hezekiah, II Chron. XXX, and Josiah, II Chron. XXXV.

9–12. The Feast of Weeks

9. from the time . . . the sickle. See on Lev. XXIII, 15.

10. the feast of weeks. Heb. Shavuos. In Exod. XXIII, 16 it is called "the feast of harvest," and in Num. XXVIII, 26 "the day of the first-fruits," alluding to its agricultural aspect. In the Liturgy it is described as זמן מתן תורתנו

8. Six days thou shalt eat unleavened bread: and on the seventh day shall be a solemn assembly to the LORD thy God; thou shalt do no work therein.

9. Seven weeks shalt thou number unto thee: from the time thou beginnest to put the sickle to the standing corn shalt thou begin to number seven weeks. 10. And thou shalt keep the feast of weeks unto the LORD thy God with a tribute of a freewill offering of thine hand, which thou shalt give, according as the LORD thy God blesseth thee: 11. and thou shalt rejoice before the LORD thy God, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy manservant, and thy maidservant, and the Levite that is within thy gates, and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, that are in the midst of thee, in the place which the LORD thy God shall choose to cause his name to dwell there. 12. And thou freewill offering. i.e. with a gift adequate to the ability of the offerer. On Passover, the Israelite's offering was prescribed; but on the Feast of Weeks, each pilgrim offered what he felt disposed to give.

11. thou shalt rejoice. Cf. XII, 12, XIV, 29. "It is a man's duty to be joyful and glad at heart on the festivals, he and his wife and his children and those dependent upon him. Make the children happy by giving them sweets and nuts; and the womenfolk by buying them frocks and jewellery according to your means. It is also a duty to give food to the hungry, to the fatherless, and to the widow, as well as to other poor people" (Shulchan Aruch).

12. a bondman in Egypt. "It was with the view that thou shouldest do these statutes, that I redeemed thee from Egypt" (Rashi).

Unlike Passover and Tabernacles, the Feast of Weeks has no distinctive ceremony. In many rites, the Book of Ruth, presenting a charming picture of agricultural life in ancient Palestine, is read. In many congregations it is also customary to spend the first night of Shavuos in reading selections from the Torah and the Prophets, as well as from Rabbinic literature. The special book of service for this purpose is known as Tikkun leyl Shavuos. A more universal custom is to decorate the synagogues with flowers and plants on this Festival; see Leviticus, p. 248. On Shavuos, the Jewish child was first initiated into the study of the Jewish religion and the Hebrew Language.

13–15. Feast of Tabernacles

tabernacle. Is here used in the sense given by Dr. Johnson, "casual dwelling."

15. seven days. It is noteworthy that the Torah does not add here the observance of Shemini Atzeres, the eighth day of solemn assembly, as in Lev. xxiii, 36. But it is evident that this chapter does not aim at giving a list of all the special days, and that is why there is no mention here of the New Year and Day of Atonement. Its purpose is to describe the three occasions in the year when the Israelite must make a pilgrimage to the Temple (see the summary in the next v). The reason for the omission of Shemini Atzeres is perhaps to be sought in the fact that it was considered "a separate Festival" שמיני רגל בפני עצמו, and the Israelite was not commanded to make the pilgrimage specially for this eighth day. Being in the Holy City for Tabernacles, he remains there until after Atzeres.

altogether joyful. Since this Festival marked the reaping of the fruits of the year's soil, it was an occasion of great rejoicing. It is sometimes referred to as "the Festival," par excellence.

"Joyous worship has always been the key-note of the festival of Tabernacles. In Temple days, the priests, with Lulav and Ethrog, went round the Altar in procession to the sound of the Shofar, chanting, "Save now, I beseech thee, O LORD: O LORD, I beseech thee, send now prosperity" (Ps. CXVIII, 25). The ceremony which appears to have aroused the greatest enthusiasm was the Drawing of water. The Mishnah tells us, "He that hath not beheld the joy of the Drawing of water hath never seen joy in his life." There were torch dances by men of piety and renown, and songs and hymns by Levites and people to the accompaniment of flutes, harps and cymbals.

"The latest feature in the development of the Festival is the festive character given to the last day (Simchas Torah), as marking the occasion of the completion and recommencement of the reading of the Law. In the Middle Ages, it became customary to take all the Scrolls from the Ark and to bear them in procession round the Synagogue. Anxious as Jewish parents have always been to stimulate their children's love and interest in their religion, they made it essentially a Children's festival. In some synagogues, children were called to the reading of the Law. Fruits and sweets were distributed amongst them.

"And thus, in ever-changing surroundings, the note of joy in the festival of Tabernacles can be heard through all the centuries; now as the rejoicing over the harvest, now as the joy of Temple-worship, and now again in triumphant homage to the Law, Israel's inalienable birthright, 'whence with joy he draws water out of the wells of salvation'" (H. M. Adler).

rich or poor. The Rabbis, however, ruled that an exception be made in the suit of an orphan, whose case must always be heard first; next in order, that of a widow; furthermore, that a woman's cause must be heard before that of a man. The judge is to give everyone a patient and courteous hearing. He is warned against yielding to the subtle temptation of giving an unjust judgment out of pity to the poor. "The judge shall not say, 'This man is poor and his opponent is rich, and it is the duty of the latter to help him in his need. I shall therefore decide against the rich man, and thereby cause the poor man to be helped without the taint of almsgiving.' Nor shall the judge say, 'How can I put this rich man to shame in public, on account of a paltry sum. I shall acquit him now, but shall tell him afterwards to make good the amount'" (Talmud); see on Exod. XXIII, 8.

a gift. A bribe. The acceptance of any gift by a judge is forbidden; see XXVII, 25. In the East, that judge was regarded as still a just judge who took gifts only from the party in the right. But judicial venality is not unknown in Western lands. The absolutely honest intention to accord justice to all is, even in England, only a recent attainment.

words of the righteous. Of men who otherwise would be righteous. Some translate "cause" instead of words; in that case, righteous means, "those who are in the right," the innocent.

JUSTICE, JUSTICE SHALT THOU FOLLOW

20. justice, justice. Or "that which is altogether just"; or, "justice, and only justice." Heb. צדק צדק תרדף. The duplication of the word "justice," brings out with the greatest possible emphasis the supreme duty of even-handed justice to all. "Justice, whether to your profit or loss, whether in word or in action, whether to Jew or non-Jew" (Bachya ben Asher). A Chassidic rabbi explained this insistence on "justice, and only justice" to imply, "Do not use unjust means to secure the victory of justice"—a deep saying. Man is slow to realise that justice is strong enough, Divine enough, to triumph without itself resorting to injustice. In the eyes of the Prophets, justice was a Divine, irresistible force. Isaiah, for example, uses only one word (צדקה) to designate both "justice" and "victory" (i.e. the triumph of right in the world); see p.

Justice, justice shalt thou follow. These passionate words, may be taken as the key-note of the humane legislation of the Torah, and of the demand for social righteousness by Israel's Prophets, Psalmists and Sages. "Let justice roll down as waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream," is the cry of Amos. Justice is not the only ethical quality in God or man, nor is it the highest quality; but it is the basis for all the others. "Righteousness and justice are the foundations of Thy throne," says the Psalmist: the whole idea of the Divine rests on them.

It must be noted that the idea of justice in Hebrew thought stands for something quite other than in Greek.

thou follow, that thou mayest live, and inherit the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

In Plato's Republic, for example, it implies a harmonious arrangement of society, by which every human peg is put into its appropriate hole, so that those who perform humble functions shall be content to perform them in due subservience to their superiors. It stresses the inequalities of human nature; whereas in the Hebrew conception of justice, the equality is stressed. To understand the idea of justice in Israel we must bear in mind the Biblical teaching that man is created in the image of God; that in every human being there is a Divine spark; and that each human life is sacred, and of infinite worth. In consequence, a human being cannot be treated as a chattel, or a thing, but must be treated as a personality; and, as a personality, every human being is the possessor of the right to life, honour, and the fruits of his labour. Justice is the awe-inspired respect for the personality of others, and their inalienable rights; even as injustice is the most flagrant manifestation of disrespect for the personality of others (F. Adler). Judaism, requires that human personality be respected in every human being—in the female heathen prisoner of war, in the delinquent, even in the criminal condemned to death. The lashes to be inflicted on the evil-doer must be strictly limited, lest "thy brother seem vile unto thee" (XXV, 3); and, if he be found worthy of death by hanging, his human dignity must still be respected: his body is not to remain hanging over night, but must be buried the same day (XXI, 23).

It is thus seen that whereas in Greek the idea of justice was akin to harmony, in Hebrew it is akin to holiness. Isaiah (V, 16) has for all time declared האל הקדוש נקדש בצדקה, "The Holy God is sanctified by justice." In brief, where there is no justice, no proper and practical appreciation of the human rights of every human being as sons of the one and only God of righteousness—there we have a negation of religion. The oppressor, the man who tramples on others, and especially on those like the orphan and the stranger who are too weak to defend themselves, is throughout Scripture held forth as the enemy of God and man. The final disappearance of injustice and oppression is represented in the New Year Amidah as the goal of human history, and as synonymous with the realisation of God's Kingdom on earth, וכל הרשעה כעשן תכלה כי תעביר ממשלת זדון מן הארץ.

However, justice is more than mere abstention from injuring our fellow-men. "The work of justice is peace; and the effect thereof quietness and confidence forever" (Isa. XXXII, 17). It is a positive conception, and includes charity, philanthropy, and every endeavour to bring out what is highest and best in others. Just as "truth" is usually preceded in Scripture by "lovingkindness" (חסד ואמת), to remind us that the truth must be spoken in love; even so is "justice" often accompanied by some synonym of "lovingkindness" (חסד)—to teach that strict justice must, in its execution, be mitigated by pity and humanity. "To do justly and to love mercy," is the Prophet's summing up of human duty towards our fellow-men. The world could not exist if it were governed by strict justice alone (מדת הדין)—say the Rabbis; therefore, God judges His human children by justice tempered with mercy (מדת הרחמים). Such being the Jewish understanding of justice (צדקה) it is but natural that in later Hebrew that same word came to denote "charity" exclusively.

Nor is justice limited to the relation between individuals. It extends to the relation between group and group, and it asserts the claims of the poor upon the rich, of the helpless upon them who possess the means to help. And even as there is social justice, prescribing the duties of class to class, so there is international justice, which demands respect for the personality of each and every national group, and proclaims that no people can of right be robbed of its national life or territory, its language or spiritual heritage.

21. Thou shalt not plant thee an Asherah of any kind of tree beside the altar of the LORD thy God, which thou shalt make thee.
22. Neither shalt thou set thee up a pillar; which the LORD thy God hateth.

It is this wider recognition of justice that has called into existence the League of Nations. "I do not know whether you are aware that the League of Nations was first of all the vision of a great Jew, almost 3,000 years ago—the prophet Isaiah" (J. C. Smuts); see Isa. II, 1–4.

"The world owes its conception of justice to the Jew," says an American jurist. "God gave him to see through the things that are ever changing, the things that never change. Compared with the meaning and majesty of this achievement, every other triumph of every other people sinks into insignificance."

thou mayest live. The pure administration of justice is thus one of the conditions of Israel's existence as a nation. Our Teachers, from the first of them to the last, brand the perversion of the course of justice, as the most alarming sign of national decay. "The appointment of proper judges was itself worthy to give life to Israel, and cause it to dwell peacefully on its soil" (Talmud).

XVI, 21–XVII, 7. AGAINST IDOLATROUS WORSHIP

Idolatry may well be included among laws dealing with government and justice. The Jewish State, as a theocracy, was based on loyalty to God, and idolatry was regarded as high treason. The Rabbis give a moral explanation for the close connection between the commands concerning judges and idolatrous worship: "He who appoints a judge who is unfit for his office, is as if he were to build an Asherah, a centre of heathen worship."

21. Asherah. See on VII, 5.

22. pillar. See on VII, 5 and Exod. XXIII, 24.

which the LORD thy God hateth. These additional words distinguish the heathen pillars from the innocent pillars mentioned in Gen. XXVIII, 18; XXXV, 14 (Ibn Ezra, Dillmann).

8–13. The Supreme Court

Not a Court of Appeal, but a High Court at the Central Sanctuary for cases too hard for the local courts. Such a Court is mentioned in II Chronicles xix, 8f. Jewish Tradition—both Talmud and Josephus—attests to the continued existence of such a Court from the days of Moses to the destruction of the Jewish State, and beyond. In the first century of the present era, the Sanhedrin in Jerusalem made the laws and acted as Court of Appeal. It consisted of 70 members in addition to the presiding officer, who was generally the High Priest. In the Provincial towns, there were smaller Sanhedrins of twenty-three members.

12. the man that doeth presumptuously. The decisions of this Court must be strictly obeyed. Refusal to do so would, in a theocracy, be tantamount to revolt against the Constitution, and involve capital punishment for the offender. Tradition explains this v. to refer to a judge (זקן ממרה) who defies the ruling of the Supreme Court.

b) THE KING

14–20. These verses define the selection, the qualifications, and the duties of the king. It is legitimate to have a king, but he must be a native Israelite and be a constitutional monarch who governs in accordance with the Torah. He was to have no standing cavalry to keep his people in subjection, nor establish a harem; and he was himself to study and obey the laws of the realm.

15. thou shalt in any wise set. lit. "thou mayest certainly set." Monarchy is not commanded, like the appointment of judges, but permitted. This explains the possibility of the opposition to the setting up of a king in I Samuel VIII.

foreigner. In the latter days of the Second Temple, the Romans made Herod and his kinsmen—who were of Edomite descent—kings of Judea. When one of these Herodian kings, Agrippa I, read this v. in the Court of the Temple at the close of a Year of Release, "he burst into tears, deeming himself unworthy of kinghood on account of his alien ancestry; whereupon the people reassured him with the words, 'Thou art our brother, thou art our brother'" (Talmud).

16. not multiply horses. For war. He was not to cherish military ambitions. "The early kings possessed horses in direct proportion to the strength of their military establishments; and the mark of their strength was the number of their horses" (Radin).

to the end . . . horses. "Several of the Hebrew kings," said a German Professor some years ago, "seem to have plied a considerable trade in horses"—a remark that was greeted with ironic applause by his students. The Professor continued, however, "This trade, though not very honourable for kings, is not quite as dishonourable as the trade in human beings that was carried on by German princes during the eighteenth century, in the sale of their subjects as mercenaries in foreign wars." See also I Kings x, 28.

18. a copy of this law. Heb. משנה התורה הזאת; lit. "a repetition of this law," wrongly understood by the Septuagint to refer to the whole of the Fifth Book of Moses, and therefore they called it Deuteronomy, "the Second Law." According to the Talmud, the king possessed two copies of the Torah; one in his private treasure, and one which he carried about with him; "just as in a modern republic, the President has the Constitution before him at his office table" (Junker).

17. Neither shall he multiply wives to himself, that his heart turn not away: neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold.
18. And it shall be, when he sitteth upon the throne of his kingdom, that he shall write him a copy of this law in a book, out of that which is before the priests the Levites:
19. and it shall be with him, and he shall read therein all the days of his life: that he may learn to fear the LORD his God, to keep all the words of this law and these statutes, to do them:

At the coronation of King Josiah, the "testimony" was put into his hands; II Chron. XXIII, 11. Similarly at the crowning of a British monarch, the Bible is delivered to him with the words, "We present you with this Book, the most valuable thing the world affords. Here is wisdom; this is the royal law; these are the lively (i.e. living) oracles of God."

and these statutes. Or, "and especially these statutes" (Koenig). Whenever a king in Israel threw off the yoke of the Torah and disregarded its precepts of righteousness, then the evils of despotic Oriental rule made their appearance unchecked. Cruelty, callous indifference to the welfare of the weaker and poorer classes, avarice, corruption, and disorder in all public affairs were rampant; and these are precisely the sins which the true prophets of Israel were continually denouncing (Harper).

c) PRIESTS AND LEVITES

Israel: they shall eat the offerings of the LORD and the maw. 4. The firstfruits of thy corn, of LORD, him and his sons forever.*iv

6. if a Levite come. Only a portion of the tribe of Levites would live in Jerusalem engaged in the service of the Sanctuary. Most of them would be scattered among the tribes. Unlike the non-Levites living on the land in their own clan, these Levites had necessarily no fixed abode; cf. Judges XVII, 7–9, XIX; I Sam. II, 36. The officiating priests would tend to close their ranks against the wandering priests from the villages. It is here enacted that should any of these latter come to the Central Sanctuary, he should be allowed to minister along with the others, and share equally with them in the priestly emoluments.

8. like portions to eat. lit. "they shall eat portion as portion"; i.e. share and share alike.

beside . . . sale of his patrimony. Or, "beside that which is his due according to the fathers' houses" (AJ); lit. "besides his sellings according to the fathers." This refers to the proceeds of the sale of his local possessions which a Levite inherited from his ancestors (Lev. XXV, 33) or of private dues accruing to him. If a Levite had such extra income, his brother-Levites were not permitted to say to him, "You have enough, you must not expect or accept any priestly emoluments"! He still has his right to share alike with the others.

Modern writers seldom do justice to the priesthood. They exalt the prophet, and almost invariably depreciate the priest. It is true that "the centre of gravity in religion lies for the priest elsewhere than for the prophet; it lies in man's attitude, not toward his fellow men, but toward God; not in his social, but in his personal life" (Kuenen). To the priest, man is more than a social being; he has also an individual life of his own, his joys and sorrows, his

And if a Levite come from any of thy gates out of all Israel, where he sojourneth, and come with all the desire of his soul unto the place which the LORD shall choose; 7. then he shall minister in the name of the LORD his God, as all his brethren the Levites do, which stand there before the LORD. 8. They shall have like portions to eat, beside that which cometh of the sale of his patrimony.

historical claims, his traditions of the past, and his hopes for the future; and all these are brought by the priest under the influence of religion, to become sanctified through their relation with God. All the details of human life are with the priest so many opportunities for the worship of God (Schechter).

The priest's indispensable function was to conserve the spiritual discoveries of the past by means of religious institutions. He gave the daily bread of religion to the people, treasured up whatever had been gained, and kept the people nurtured on it and admonished by it. To picture the priest as exalting external observance at the expense of moral values, is a controversial fiction. Though Malachi had much to complain of the priests of his day, his estimate of what Levi had been in the past is no exaggeration. "The law of truth was in his mouth, and unrighteousness was not found in his lips; he walked with Me in peace and uprightness, and did turn many away from iniquity." See further the note at the end of the chapter.

d) PROPHETS

naturally desire to know the future or to learn the Divine mind; and they will be living among nations who hold that the will of the gods was best learned through augury and sorcery. But Israel does not need such means of obtaining Divine guidance. "Alone in the antique world, Israel has the high honour of having broken with this entire system of approaching the Divine" (Welch). Its communion with the spiritual world was through a spiritual channel—that of the prophet. As it is said in Num. xxiii, 23, "There is no enchantment in Jacob, neither is there any divination in Israel: at the right time it is said to him what God doeth."

The problem of sorcery confronts every administrator of primitive races. "Attempts to advance them to a higher life in our own day are being rendered futile by the sorcerer; at his instigation the darkest crimes are committed. To what depths of wickedness his practices can bring men is seen in the horrors of the secret cult of the negroes of Haiti" (Harper).

10. pass through fire. Human sacrifice was an essential part of Moloch worship.

divination. This is the most general term for the magical practices that follow. A Gold Coast official recently complained that the numbing effect of omen-taking and consultation with soothsayers had not hitherto received the attention it deserved.

enchanter. Or, "augur."

For whosoever doeth these things is an abomination unto the LORD: and because of these abominations the LORD thy God doth drive them out from before thee. 13. Thou shalt be perfect with the LORD thy God.*v 14. For these a ghost" (AJ). Heb. ob. Saul, desirous of speaking to Samuel on the night before the fateful battle of Gilboa (I Sam. XXVIII, 7) said unto his servants, "Seek me a woman that hath a familiar spirit" (i.e. that divineth by a ghost). From Isaiah VIII, 19 it would seem that the ob was a kind of ventriloquist who impersonated the dead by speaking in a faint voice from the ground.

wizard. Heb. ידעני; possibly a synonym of ob. Coming from the root ידע ("know") it would seem to correspond to the English word wizard, which originally meant "wise or knowing one," without any hint of sorcery or evil.

necromancer. An enquirer of the dead. "In the Hebrew religion the spiritual part of man was conceived not as ghostly, but under the attribute of holy. It is a significant fact that stories of ghosts or apparitions are almost absent from the Old Testament; and necromancy, which attempts to come into communication with the dead, that is, to deal with ghosts, was especially abhorrent" (F. Adler).

13. thou shalt be perfect. Or, "whole-hearted" (AJ), and not given over in part to demoniac powers, or other evil superstitions of the heathen. "Walk with Him whole-heartedly and hope in Him. Pry not into the veiled future, but accept whatever lot befalls you. Then will you be His people and His portion" (Rashi).

Whole-heartedness is one of the great requirements of Religion; hence תמים is written with a large initial letter.

14. hath not suffered thee so to do. To turn to soothsayers, because God would raise up a Prophet from amongst the Israelites themselves, and thus reveal to them whatever they desired to know from God.

15. a prophet. In each generation.

like unto me. Not of the same rank as Moses (xxxiv, 10), but of the line of Prophets of which Moses is the "father."

16. in Horeb. Israel had refused the high honour of hearing directly the voice of God. As Moses was the intermediary at Horeb, so the Prophets shall be the intermediaries in their generation.

18. command him. The office of the Prophet is thus conceived not so much as a foreteller, but in spiritual succession to Moses as the teacher and religious guide of his age, though the gift of predicting the future where this serves a moral purpose, cannot be denied him.

nations, which thou shalt possess, hearken unto them that practise augury, and unto diviners: but as for thee, the LORD thy God hath not suffered thee so to do. 15. The LORD thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken; 16. according to all that thou desiredst of the LORD thy God in Horeb in the day of the assembly, saying, Let me not hear again the voice of the LORD my God, neither let me see this great fire any more, that I die not. 17. And the LORD said unto me, They have well said that which they have spoken. 18. I will raise them up a prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee; and I will put my words in his mouth, and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him. 19. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him. 20. But the prophet, which shall speak a word presumptuously in my name, which I have not commanded him to speak, or that shall speak in the name of other gods, that same prophet shall die. 21. And if thou say in thine heart, How shall we know the word which the LORD hath not spoken?

19. require. I will seek out his disobedience, and judge him for it. "The rigorous punishment would deter anyone from coming forward as a prophet, who had not an absolute conviction of his Divine call" (Dillmann).

22. follow not. The test of the false prophet was the non-fulfilment of the specific prediction that he announced as the credentials of his Divine call, though signs and miracles performed by a "prophet," are not necessarily a proof of his truth (XIII, 2, 6). "The ultimate criterion of the true prophet is the moral character of his utterance" (Dummelow).

Even as the kingship ensured stability to national and social life, and the priesthood gave stability in religion, so the Prophetic order secured spiritual progress and averted stagnation. The Prophets are the inspired declarers of the Divine will. "The mere foretelling of future events is the lowest stage of prophecy, and in the eyes of the great Prophets of Israel it was of quite secondary importance. Their aim was to fathom the secrets of holiness; and their striving, by means of admonition and moral suasion, to guide the peoples in the paths which lead mankind to spiritual and political well-being" (Shemtob ibn Shemtob).

The competence of the Prophet however is not unlimited. He too is bound by the Torah, to which he may neither add nor subtract, except as a temporary measure of extreme urgency (horaath shaah). Nor may he venture, solely in virtue of the prophetic gifts with which he is endowed, to give a ruling in matters of Law. In this respect he must yield place to the Judge, the sage in whom alone is vested the authority to interpret and to apply the sanctions of the Law according to the accepted norms of Biblical interpretation.

"There is no quarrel between prophet and priest; nor was there ever one. As guardians of the Law of God, they both cherish common ideals. The prophets never preached the abrogation of the Law. What they did stress—and it is what the most resolute formalist can endorse word for word—was that only the heart which is right with God can find fit and proper expression in the well-ordered Temple-worship, and be brought nearer to the Eternal by ritual and ceremony. Nor did the good and genuine priest—for there were false priests as there were false prophets—ever hold that one could shelter himself behind sacrifices from the judgment of Heaven upon his moral turpitude and waywardness of conduct" (I. Epstein).

XIX, 1–13. CITIES OF REFUGE

Three cities shall be set aside in the future territory to serve as "sanctuary" to the manslayer; see Num. xxxv, 9–34 and Deut. IV, 41–3. In this way the immemorial custom of blood-revenge that to this day rests like a curse upon many Bedouin tribes is curbed; and the heathen conception of "sanctuary" for the wilful murderer is abolished.

And this is the case of the manslayer, which shall flee thither and live: whoso killeth his neighbour unawares, and hated him not in time past; 5. as when a man goeth into the forest with his neighbour to hew wood, and his hand fetcheth a stroke with the axe to cut down the tree, and the iron slippeth from the tree, and lighteth upon his neighbour, that he die; he shall flee unto one of these cities and live: 6. lest the avenger of blood pursue the manslayer, while his heart is hot, and overtake him, because the way is long, and smite him mortally; whereas he was not worthy of death, inasmuch as he hated him not in time past. 7. Wherefore I command thee, saying, Thou shalt separate three cities for thee. 8. And if the LORD thy God enlarge thy border, as he hath sworn unto thy fathers, and give thee all the land which he promised to give unto thy fathers; 9. if thou shalt keep all this commandment to do it, which

8. enlarge thy border. If, as a result of their steadfast obedience, Israel comes to possess all the territory that was promised to Abraham (Gen. xv, 18, " from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates "), then three more Cities of Refuge should be added to those already in existence.

v. 11. סבירין האלה

10 blood be upon thee. i.e. blood-guiltiness be upon thee. If no provision of such Cities of Refuge were made, the guilt of bloodshed would rest upon the whole land and nation; see on XXI, 1–9.

11. lie in wait for him. This and the succeeding two verses provide a safeguard against the abuse of the right of sanctuary. A fair trial and acquittal is secured to the innocent slayer; but the wilful murderer cannot, as among Arab tribes, compound for his crime by payment to the kinsmen of the victim. He must die.

14. Removing a Landmark

14. landmark. The line of stone defining the boundary of a man's field. In Deut. XXVII, 17 it is said, "Cursed be he that removeth his neighbour's landmark," in order thereby to enlarge his own estate. Such removal was equivalent to theft. Before the introduction of land-measurement,

I command thee this day, to love the LORD thy God, and to walk ever in his ways; then shalt thou add three cities more for thee, beside these three: 10. that innocent blood be not shed in the midst of thy land, which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance, and so blood be upon thee. 11. But if any man hate his neighbour, and lie in wait for him, and rise up against him, and smite him mortally that he die; and he flee into one of these cities: 12. then the elders of his city shall send and fetch him thence, and deliver him into the hand of the avenger of blood, that he may die. 13. Thine eye shall not pity him, but thou shalt put away the innocent blood from Israel, that it may go well with thee.*vi

14. Thou shalt not remove thy neighbour's landmark, which they of old time have set, in thine inheritance which thou shalt inherit, in the land that the LORD thy God giveth thee to possess it.

removing landmarks was a crime more difficult to combat than to-day.

In later times, this prohibition of removing a neighbour's landmark (hassagath gevul) received an ethical extension. Thereby any unfair encroachment upon another man's honour or livelihood, any "poaching on another man's preserves" or sphere of activity, is strictly prohibited.

they of old time. Those of a former age. Moses is here addressing future generations. Num. XXXIV gives the precise divisions of the land under the superintendence of Eleazar, Joshua and one prince out of every tribe.

15–21. Plotting Witnesses

Before guilt can be established, whether in a case of manslaughter, murder, the removal of a landmark, or any other injury to life or property, it is here enacted that the testimony must come from the mouth of at least two witnesses.

Whereas, in Jewish Law, intention to commit a crime was no punishable offence, it is otherwise with plotting witnesses (עדים זוממים). In their case, intention is of the very essence of their crime, and they are to receive the punishment they had intended for the innocent victim. The Schools differed as to their punishment, if they had succeeded in their criminal intention.

16. unrighteous witness. lit. "a witness of violence," i.e. a witness who purposes to do harm.

wrong doing. lit. "a turning aside," i.e. rebellion against the Law of God. In XIII, 6 the same word is used in reference to the sin of idolatry.

17. both the men. Both parties must be present at the hearing of the case; see on I, 16.

before the LORD. i.e. before the priests and judges who are God's representatives in judgment.

15. One witness shall not rise up against a man for any iniquity, or for any sin, in any sin that he sinneth: at the mouth of two witnesses, or at the mouth of three witnesses, shall a matter be established. 16. If an unrighteous witness rise up against any man to testify against him of wrong doing: 17. then both the men, between whom the controversy is, shall stand before the LORD, before the priests and the judges which shall be in those days; 18. and the judges shall make diligent inquisition: and, behold, if the witness be a false witness, and hath testified falsely against his brother; 19. then shall ye do unto him, as he had thought to do unto his brother: so shalt thou put away the evil from the midst of thee. 20. And those which remain shall hear, and fear, and shall henceforth commit no more any such evil in the midst of thee.
21. And thine eye shall not pity; life shall go for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot.

in those days. Whoever the judge of your day may be, due regard must be paid him. "Jephthah in his generation was the equal of Samuel in his;" see on XVII, 9.

19. as he had thought. The false witness shall suffer the penalty he had sought to bring on another, in accordance with the lex talionis, v. 21.

20. shall hear. According to the Talmud, it was customary for the court to issue the public proclamation, "Such and such a person has been punished for being a false witness."

21. shall not pity. Wilful murder must be punished by death; see on Exod. XXI, 12 and 14.

b) LAWS OF WARFARE

Israel is bidden to display human kindness even in war-time: thus, the betrothed is to be exempt from service; offers of peace are to be made to every city attacked; and fruit-trees are not to be destroyed during a siege. The conduct of war is to be guided by reason and mercy. Israelite kings were famed for their humanity (I Kings xx, 31); while contemporary Assyrian monarchs delighted in inhuman savagery, and made it a rule to devastate forests and cultivated fields; Isa. xiv, 8.

1–9. Exemption from Service

Chapter XX

20 1. When thou goest forth to battle against thine enemies, and seest horses, and chariots, and a people more than thou, thou shalt not be afraid of them: for the LORD thy God is with thee, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt. 2. And it shall be, when ye draw nigh unto the battle, that the priest shall approach and speak unto the people, 3. and shall say unto them, Hear, O Israel, ye draw nigh this day unto battle against your enemies: let not your heart faint; fear not, nor tremble, neither be ye affrighted at them; 4. for the LORD your God is he that goeth with you, to fight for you against your enemies, to save you. 5. And the officers shall speak unto the people, saying, What man is there that hath built a new house, and hath not dedicated it? let him go and return to his house, lest he die in the battle, and another

6. not used the fruit thereof. lit. "hath not made it profane," by common use. According to Lev. XIX, 23–25, the produce of any fruit-tree was not to be used during its first three years. In the fourth year, the fruit was to be dedicated to God. In the fifth year, the fruit became "profane;" i.e. it was permitted to be eaten. Hence the words, "he hath not made it profane" mean no more than, "he hath not used the fruit thereof."

8. fainthearted. Fear is infectious, and the presence of such persons in the host would be a source of weakness and danger.

In these verses, 1–8, we have "a shrewd psychological understanding of the dangerous contagion of cowardice, as well as of its probable self-conquest, if given freedom of choice. The contagion of courage would then probably act upon the trembler, and the fear of confessing himself faint-hearted might nerve him to bravery. Compare this genial wisdom with the grim 'Shot at dawn' of contemporary military law; with that stark brutality of the ritual of Moloch which has sent shell-shocked conscripts in their teens to a dishonoured grave. The Jewish law, at once more merciful and more intelligent, is the combination of universal service with freedom; making militarism its slave, and not its master" (Zangwill).

10. proclaim peace unto it. War is to be regarded as the last resort. First of all there must be offers of peace. If these are accepted, no one is to be harmed in person or in possession; the city becomes tributary to Israel. Most Traditional commentaries state that these offers of peace had to be made to all enemy cities, to those of the Canaanites as well. The latter were, in addition, to abandon idolatry and adhere to the Seven Commandments given to the descendants of Noah (i.e. the establishment of courts of justice, and the prohibition of blasphemy, idolatry, incest, murder, robbery and unnatural cruelty); see Genesis, p. 81.

17. Hittite . . . Jebusite. Only six nations are mentioned here, whereas in VII, 1–3 seven nations are named. Ibn Ezra accounts for the omission of "Girgashite" here because it was the smallest of the seven nations, and negligible. The Jerusalem Talmud states: "A three-fold message Joshua sent to the Promised Land before the Israelites entered it. It was to the following effect; 'Whosoever wishes to leave the country, let him do so; whosoever desires to make peace, his desire will be granted; and whosoever is determined on war, battle will be joined with him.' The Girgashites left Canaan, and migrated to North Africa; the Gibeonites made peace; and the thirty-one kings of the cities of Canaan chose to make war, and fell." It is clear from Joshua XI, 19 that peace-offers were made in every case. The

Thus shalt thou do unto all the cities which are very far off from thee, which are not of the cities of these nations. 16. But of the cities of these peoples, which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance, thou shalt save alive nothing that breatheth: 17. but thou shalt devote them; the Hittite, and the Amorite, the Canaanite, and the Perizzite, the Hivite, and the Jebusite; as the LORD thy God hath commanded thee: 18. that they teach you not to do after all their abominations, which they have done unto their gods; so should ye sin against the LORD your God.

BANNING THE CANAANITES

The moral difficulty in v. 10–18 has been variously met by Jewish and non-Jewish authorities. The traditional Jewish view is sufficiently indicated in the comments above. Non-Jewish exegetes of the older school point out that the ban was a pre-Mosaic institution, not confined to the Semitic world. It is found in peoples as far apart as the Romans and the Mexicans : among them all it was but an exhibition of cruelty for cruelty's sake. In Israel alone was it moralised—turned into a potent and terrible weapon for the safeguarding of the Sacred Cause entrusted to Israel's keeping. Israel's preservation from depravity and decay was the main anxiety of the Lawgiver. Just as in modern days the preservation of the State is reckoned in every country the supreme law which overrides every other consideration, so was in Israel the preservation of Israel's religious character. And rightly so, for the whole moral and spiritual future of mankind was involved in that preservation.

Furthermore, the search for a new homeland, and the conquest of such homeland, are not isolated phenomena in World History. The fact is that the population of nearly every European country to-day had conquered its present homeland and largely destroyed the original inhabitants. Thus, the Saxons all but exterminated the Romanised Celts ; and, in turn, the Saxons were "harried" by the Normans on their conquest of England. Even more dreadful was the enslavement or extermination of the native races by both Catholic and Protestant settlers in their Overseas possessions. Now, no nation has ever been called upon to justify the taking of such lands, or its conduct towards the natives who thus passed under its control. The peoples exhaust the vocabulary of praise for those of their national heroes who secured that homeland or colonial possessions for them. Israel alone has such an ethical justification for the conquest of Canaan and the banning of its inhabitants. In Lev. XVIII, dealing with the bestialities and moral depravities of the Canaanites, we

19. When thou shalt besiege a city a long time, in making war against it to take it, thou shalt not destroy the trees thereof by wielding an axe against them; for thou mayest eat of them, and thou shalt not cut them down; for is the tree of the field man, that it should be besieged read: v. 26–28, "Ye shall not do any of these abominations . . . (for all these abominations have the men of the land done, which were before you, and the land is defiled); that the land vomit not you out also, when ye defile it, as it vomited out the nation that was before you."

It is thus seen that the Canaanites were put under the ban, not for false belief but for vile action; because of the human sacrifices and foul immorality of their gruesome cults. The judicial extirpation of the Canaanites is but another instance of the fact that the interests of man's moral progress occasionally demand the employment of stern and relentless methods. "Here is no partiality of a merely national God befriending His worshippers at the expense of others, without regard to justice; here rather is a Power making for righteousness and against iniquity; yea, a Power acting with a beneficent regard to the good of humanity, burying a putrefying carcase out of sight, lest it should taint the air. In the execution of His righteous purposes, Almighty God is guided by one supreme aim, namely, the elevation of human character. It is to be observed, that Israel itself is threatened with a similar judgment, in the event of its yielding to the depraved rites and practices of heathendom" (Bruce).

19–20. Destruction of Trees

A precautionary warning to Israel—in view of such practices by nomadic warriors—not to devastate the land they are setting out to conquer.

19. is the tree . . . man? "Is it a human being that it should come into siege before thee"? Ibn Ezra renders, "For the tree of the field is man's life"; i.e. the trees of a besieged city must not be cut down, because they are vital to man. The Rabbis deduce from this v. a prohibition of the wanton destruction of any thing useful to man (בל תשחית).

This chapter contains various laws concerning the sacredness of human life, and regard for the rights and dignity of human nature.

1–9. ON THE EXPIATION OF AN UNTRACED MURDER

If a slain man be found in the open country, the murderer being unknown, the elders of the nearest town shall slay a young heifer in an uncultivated valley with a stream, and testify that they neither shed this blood nor saw it shed, and pray for forgiveness. In Israel, murder is not only a crime committed against a fellow-man, but also a sin against God in whose image man was made; hence, no money-compensation was permitted in the case of the wilful murderer (Num. xxxv, 33), "for the soul is not the possession of the nearest of kin, but of the Holy One, blessed be He" (Maimonides). "According to the oldest Hellenic idea, the murderer violated only the family sphere. Mosaism, however, by virtue of its conception of the human being as of Divine image, recognised in murder above all a sin against the Holy God, the Creator and Master of human

Hence, the presence of the judges was required, as arbiters and overseers, that all matters connected with the measurement and resultant responsibility are equitably settled (Welch).

The Rabbis' explanation of these ceremonies is, "Let the heifer which has never produced fruit (i.e. which has never been set to do any work) be killed in a spot which has never produced fruit (i.e. a rough, uncultivated ground), to atone for the death of a man who was debarred (through being prematurely made to die) from producing fruit." By this avowal the elders of the town declare, He did not come to us hungry, and we failed to feed him; he did not come to us friendless, and we failed to befriend him" (Sifri). Thus did the Rabbis bring home to the people the great principle of mutual responsibility and moral interdependence of men and classes.

NOTE D

MONARCHY AND FREEDOM IN ISRAEL

I

The Biblical theory of government is among the greatest contributions ever made to the political life of man. Such, however, is far from being the general opinion. This looks upon the two ancient Jewish kingdoms as petty Oriental despotisms, whose State life was never of any importance to the larger world.

Both Jewish and non-Jewish writers are responsible for this ignorance and radical misconception of Israel's remarkable achievement as a political entity.

On the one hand, many Jewish writers have been under the influence of the German–American Reform Movement in Judaism, which minimises and attempts to eliminate the national element from the consciousness of the Jew of to-day. These writers, approaching the question with a theological bias, dismiss the political history of ancient Israel as, on the whole, "a gloomy record of bad government, tyranny and oppression." We shall see how recklessly this die-hard partisan view runs counter to the facts of history, as marshalled by a whole series of scholars, from John Michaelis and Joseph Salvador to Justice Sulzberger and Prof. T. H. Robinson.

On the other hand, non-Jewish writers often look upon Israel's national existence as a mere "preparation" for Christianity; or, they share the late Sir Henry Maine's superstition that "nothing, except the blind forces of Nature, moves in the world to-day, that is not Greek in origin." They, therefore, bid us turn to Greece, if we would learn the origins of free government.

And the blood shall be forgiven them. 9. So shalt thou put away the innocent blood from the midst of thee, when thou shalt do that which is right in the eyes of the LORD.

Now, as to Greece, the 158 petty, quarrelling, fratricidal States that are comprised under that geographical term have left behind little indeed that is worthy of emulation in political life. Thus, the Athenians chose their judges by lot, and their generals by mass meeting. "The Greeks had no political unity. Every small city-state was an independent, sovereign community. This raised the hatred between city and city, still more the hatred between class and class in each city, to a dangerous pitch. At Athens, some of the men of the old ruling families formed an association, every member of which had to take an oath, 'I will be an enemy to the popular party and will try to do it every harm that I can'" (Edwyn Bevan). The Greeks displayed to the full that fatal vice of factiousness which imbues politics with fanaticism, and proscribes opponents by massacre or exile. "The various forms of government that the Greeks established were all experiments, which, owing to the fact that they were carried to their extreme logical conclusion, culminated in absurdity. Whether they tried an aristocracy, a tyranny, a democracy or a Spartan system of military communism, there was always some section of the people who were fettered and oppressed. Nietzsche rightly calls them, 'the political fools of ancient history'" (Kastein).

In absolute contrast to this, there existed in Israel one form of State, constructed on a definite principle, and a political constitution that was truly representative of the spirit and aspirations of the community. The normal form of government was the monarchy; and the conception of kinghood it embodied was unique throughout antiquity. "Down to modern times," says T. H. Huxley, "no State had a constitution in which the interests of the people are so largely taken into account, in which the duties so much more than the privileges of rulers are insisted upon, as that drawn up for Israel in Deuteronomy and Leviticus."

II

THE KING

Among all other Oriental peoples, the word "king" connotes an irresponsible despot, vested with unchallenged authority. All law is the expression of his will; and, while it binds every other member of the community, the monarch himself is free to disregard or to supersede it. He owes no formal duties to his subjects, and is answerable to none for his actions. To the Eastern mind, a "limited monarchy" was a contradiction in terms.

It was otherwise in Israel. There it is God who is the real King and the sole supreme authority; and the monarch is but the agent of the Divine King, entrusted with an indicated commission for which he is responsible to God who chose him. No Jewish ruler would ever have dared to claim Divine honours, and, like the Egyptian and Roman emperors, order sacrifices to be offered to him. In Israel, the monarch is under the Law, and is bound to respect the life, honour, and possessions of his subjects. We must keep these things in mind if we are to realise Israel's unique and original attitude to the monarchy. And then let us turn to the twenty-first chapter of the First Book of Kings. Naboth's vineyard was hard by king Ahab's palace at Jezreel. Ahab was anxious either to buy it, or to give Naboth a better vineyard in exchange. However, as Jezreel was a walled city, the law of Jubilee did not apply to it, and the inheritance of his fathers if sold by Naboth, would not eventually revert to the seller, but would be forever lost to the family. He, therefore, received the king's proposal with horror, and refused. Ahab showed his annoyance. When Jezebel, his foreign queen, hears the story, she is quite unable to comprehend her husband's difficulties. A king is nothing, who is not prepared to take what he wants, is her view of the situation. "I will give thee the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite," she says. The law which could not be changed by force, she evades by fraud. With Ahab's acquiescence she assumes royal powers for the purpose. It may be that Naboth in his indignation at the king's proposal had uttered some hasty words, though quite insufficient to warrant the course adopted by Jezebel. She has Naboth accused of blasphemy and treason; he is duly tried in the local courts; and, having been found guilty on perjured testimony, is made to pay the supreme penalty for his alleged crimes. When Ahab is about to take possession of the vineyard, he is confronted by Elijah. The Prophet of Truth and Justice denounces him as a murderer and robber, and foretells the vengeance of Heaven that would descend upon his entire House. It is interesting to compare this incident in Scripture with the conduct of the later Roman Emperor Diocletian. It was his habit to charge with treason any of his subjects whose estates he desired; to have the owner executed; and then confiscate those estates. Of course, there was no Elijah to raise his voice against the Imperial procedure. The Diocletian incident is typical of Roman rule in the Provinces of the Empire. It was unbelievably merciless. The hideous misgovernment of Palestine by the Roman Procurators as recorded by Josephus is not exceptional. "Roman administration sucked the life-blood out of its Eastern subjects, and diminished their will to live" (W. R. Inge). In the matter of humane government, Rome has as little to teach us as has Greece.

Normally—i.e. outside Israel—the subject's life, honour, and property were throughout antiquity at the absolute disposal of the sovereign. And this was so not only in regard to individuals. In Egypt, the lives of vast multitudes of men were sacrificed in connection with the frenzied building schemes of the Pharaohs. Herodotus tells us that in the time of Necho II (609–588 B.C.E.), no less than 120,000 labourers were worked to death in the construction of a canal connecting the Nile and the Red Sea. The contemporary Jewish ruler, king Jehoiakim, tried to emulate the example of Necho II, and he built himself palaces by means of forced labour. In other countries, such a thing was taken to be the unquestioned prerogative of the king. But absolute power in a ruler was incomprehensible to the Jewish mind; and that enterprise was deemed an outrage against law and reason, against immemorial custom and all human decency. Like Elijah before him, Jeremiah the Prophet arose, and came to the door of Jehoiakim's palace, crying: "Woe unto him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness, and his chambers by injustice; that useth his neighbour's service without wages, and giveth him not his hire. He shall be buried with the burial of an ass, drawn and cast forth beyond the gates of Jerusalem" (Jer. XXII, 13, 19).

The king in Israel recognised his responsibility not only to God and the Divine Law, but to the human community that had enthroned him as its leader as well. It is not the king but the people who is in possession of sovereign rights, and the people was free to impose fresh conditions on each new monarch at his accession. A refusal to accept these new conditions cost Solomon's son, Rehoboam, the greater part of his kingdom (I Kings XII, 16). And, as a rule, the kings did not dare to break the covenant entered into with their subjects at their accession. The exceptions to this rule are, Ahab, who was dominated by his Tyrian wife; and Jehoiakim, who was imposed on Judah by a foreign conqueror. Thus it comes that even the great Prophets, who certainly never shrank from denouncing social iniquity wherever it was found, say little of royal malpractices in either realm. And the Psalmists could bid their royal ruler "ride on prosperously in behalf of truth, and meekness, and righteousness" (Ps. XLV, 5); and could pray, "Give the king thy judgements, O God. In his days shall the righteous flourish, and the souls of the needy shall he save. He shall redeem their soul from oppression and violence, and precious shall their blood be in his sight" (Ps. LXXII, 1, 7, 13, 14). They all cherish the Messianic dream that days are coming when the king shall be shepherd to his people, when the king's sceptre shall be a sceptre of peace, and upon him shall rest the spirit of wisdom and counsel and the fear of the LORD (Isa. XI, 2).

This truly democratic relation between the governor and the governed in Israel is indicated in the Scriptural words, "And it shall be, when he sitteth upon the throne of his kingdom, that he shall write him a copy of this law in a book . . . . and he shall read therein all the days of his life . . . . that his heart be not lifted up above his brethren." On this a recent Schweich lecturer has the following admirable comment: "In Israel, the king exists for the sake of his people. He has power and authority; but they are not given him for his own pleasure, but for the safety and well-being of the nation over whom he rules. He does not stand on a higher level than others, except in so far as his duties give him a loftier place. He is primus inter pares, and though he must of necessity have special authority, yet he belongs to the same order as his people: he is one of them. While to every other ancient monarch the subject was a slave, to the Israelite king he was a brother" (T. H. Robinson).

ETHICAL FOUNDATIONS

The conception of a constitutional and law-abiding king, to whom the meanest of his subjects was a "brother," is not the only unique characteristic of the Mosaic Commonwealth. It is well to enumerate a few others of the ethical foundations of the Mosaic Polity.

1) The Supremacy of Justice in the State

It is noteworthy that the Biblical regulations concerning justice precede those of the appointment of the king (XVII, 14-20): justice is to be above the monarchy. This is certainly without a parallel in ancient times. Only in the modern world do we find similar instances of national reverence for justice. England's advance on the road of freedom, is largely due to the fact that, at an early date in her history, the administration of justice became independent of the king. To-day, however, there are at least two leading European states who openly and deliberately destroy the independence of their Courts of Law, and turn them into instruments of State policy. "Justice must be guided solely by State interests," says a Nazi ruler. "Every judge must remember that his decisions are intended to promote nothing but the prevailing policy of the State," is the pronouncement of the Soviet commissar for justice. As far as these two governments are concerned, the Divine demand of "Justice, and only justice, shalt thou pursue," was made in vain. Civilisation is once again witnessing travesties of, and outrages on, justice that recall the darkest days of the Middle Ages.

2) Dignity of Labour

The recognition of the dignity of labour could not be looked for in Athens and Rome. In these societies, labour was relegated to the slave, who was merely "an animated tool" without any human claims or rights. In every such society, work itself—even that of a physician or schoolmaster—becomes dishonourable; and, as in Sparta, is forbidden to the free citizen.

In sharpest contrast to the above, the Jewish Sages are unanimous in their insistence that work ennobles and sanctifies, and that idleness is the door to temptation and sin. They were themselves toilers, earning their daily bread by following some handicraft as masons, tailors, sandal-makers, carpenters. The most renowned of all the Rabbis, Hillel the Elder, was a wood-cutter.

In Israel, man remained master of labour; labour did not mean the bondage of man. The Sabbath gave the labourer every week a day of freedom and leisure. This was quite incomprehensible to the Greeks and Romans. Their writers —Tacitus, Juvenal, Plutarch—make merry over the idea of presenting one day in every seven to the worker! The far-reaching humanitarian significance of the Sabbath was, of course, undreamt of by them; and even "our modern spirit with all its barren theories of civic and political rights, and its strivings towards freedom and equality, has not thought out and called into existence a single institution that, in its beneficent effects upon the labouring classes, can in the slightest degree be compared to the Weekly Day of Rest promulgated in the Sinaitic wilderness" (Proudhon). It was many ages before its man-redeeming implications began to be seen. The Mosaic restrictions as to the days of weekly work that might be demanded of the labourer, laid down a principle of immeasurable importance for the social legislation of the future. At long last, after three thousand years, humanity has taken the next step; viz. that of regulating the hours of daily labour. This slowness in recognising the needs of labour is no doubt due to the fact that, till quite recent times, classical literature monopolised the education of the governing classes of the European peoples. As with the Greeks and Romans, idleness became the mark of nobility; and it was deemed to be beneath the man of gentle birth to worry over the condition of serfs or toilers (Bloch).

3) Property and Poverty

Among the Romans, the idea of property took precedence over the idea of humanity. Thus, if the debtor was unable to repay the sum advanced to him, the Roman creditor could imprison him in a private dungeon, chain him to a block, sell him into slavery, or slay him. With such a deification of property, it is small wonder that poverty was in itself considered dishonouring; and that pity for the poor, was looked upon as a sickly sentimentality, unworthy of the free man. Virgil praises one of his heroes because he never felt any sympathy with sufferers through want; Seneca thinks it natural to recoil in horror from a poor man; and Plautus declares feeding the hungry to be cruelty, because it merely prolongs a life of misery.

In Israel, property was never a noli me tangere; neither was the possession of the individual over it deemed to be absolute, as is shown by the Sabbatical and tithe laws. "He who says, What is mine is mine and what is thine is thine, that man speaks like a citizen of Sodom" (Ethics of the Fathers v, 13).

Such subordination of the rights of property to those of humanity explains the place and claims of the poor in the Jewish Commonwealth. It was a new conception in the history of the world—a conception that could as little have been derived from Egypt, as from Greece and Rome then unborn. "The Hebrew commonwealth was a commonwealth whose ideal it was that every man should sit under his own vine and fig-tree, with none to vex him or make him afraid; in which, for even the bond slave there should be hope; in which, for even the beast of burden there should be rest. With the blast of the jubilee trumpets the slave goes free, and a re-division of the land secures again to the poorest his fair share in the bounty of the common Creator. The reaper must leave something for the gleaner; even the ox cannot be muzzled as he treadeth out the corn" (Henry George).

IV

DEMOCRATIC INSTITUTIONS

Foremost among these are the Prophets. The vigilance of the Prophets, throughout Jewish history, against every abuse perpetrated by the brute force of the oppressor—whoever he be—was ceaseless. Samuel warns the tribes of Israel against the ways of the Eastern despot; and, long before Elijah, Nathan the Prophet hurls his "Thou art the man!" at the royal sinner. In view of the unique role the Prophets played in the moral evolution of the Jewish people, even a secularist like John Stuart Mill perceived the overwhelming influence of the Prophets in upholding ideals of true democracy. He saw in them the living equivalent of the modern freedom of speech and liberty of the press. Such likewise is the verdict of all modern scholars:

"It was part of the spirit of Prophecy to be dumbfounded at human ferocity as at something against nature and reason. In the presence of the iniquities of the world, the heart of the Prophets bled as though from a wound of the Divine Spirit, and their cry of indignation re-echoed the wrath of the Deity. Greece and Rome had their rich and poor, just as Israel had in the days of Jeroboam II, and the various classes continued to slaughter one another for centuries; but no voice of justice and pity arose from the fierce tumult. Therefore the words of the Prophets have more vitality at the present time, and answer better to the needs of modern souls, than all the classic masterpieces of antiquity" (James Darmesteter).

Next in importance in the moulding and administration of the Jewish state was the National Council. The researches of the late Justice Mayer Sulzberger in the domain of Israelite politics have thrown much light on the nature of the legislative body in ancient Israel. The general impression, he says, left on the mind by reading the Pentateuch and the Book of Joshua is that Israel was governed by a Chief (Prince, Judge, King) who was at the head of the military and civil authorities; and, that, alongside of him, was a High Priest who controlled the ecclesiastical establishment; that the Chief had a Council, probably bi-cameral, to determine national policies; that the smaller chamber was composed of twelve princes (Nesiim), and the larger of seventy elders (Zekenim), and that the two constituted the Edah (Congregation or Parliament) of the nation. The Edah did not disappear with the Mosaic age. Throughout the succeeding centuries, we find the same democratic institution in the state, exercising executive, political, and high judicial powers. This National Council became fully developed in the early days of the kingdom, under the name of Am ha-aretz (see Genesis, p. 192; Exodus, p. 579). It made and unmade kings (e.g. II Kings XXI, 24, XXIII, 30); and, as the trial of Jeremiah for "blasphemy" amply proves (Jer. XXVI), it exercised the highest judicial powers in the State. Eventually it re-emerged after the Exile as the Gerusia, the Great Synagogue, and the Sanhedrin.

The above is witness to a wonderful capacity for self-government on the part of our ancestors. We may disregard the kingdom of the Ten Tribes who had lapsed into idolatry, and confine our attention to the kingdom of Judah. That kingdom existed as an independent state from 933 to 586 B.C.E.; and during the entire period of these 347 years, we do not detect the faintest trace of a single civil war, nor of an attempt at a change of dynasty (I. Friedlander).

The only exception, that of Athaliah, the daughter of Ahab, confirms the rule. For she was not a Judean, but a princess of the Northern Kingdom, a daughter of Jezebel. She had usurped the throne of Judah, and was overthrown by the faithful Judeans after an illegitimate reign of six years. Of how many other peoples, ancient or modern, can this be said, that they persisted for a period of 347 years without a change of dynasty or civil war? And it was not a vegetative existence which that little kindgom led during that long period. The greater portion of the Prophetic literature was produced within that time; social justice and freedom of speech were maintained; and national independence was preserved, in spite of Judah's position as the little buffer-state between the Great Powers of that age, as the small bit of iron between the hammer of Assyria and the anvil of Egypt.

In view of all this, more and more students of the political facts of Bible history will endorse the following judgment:

"There is no historical record of any other nation which, as early as a millennium before the present era, had overcome the forces both of despotism and of unbridled democracy. The Jewish people at large had as keen an outlook and as wide a vision in political as in religious affairs; and while the modern monotheistic conception of the universe is largely the product of their genius, so the modern conception of a rational, democratic, representative government owes its origin to the same ancestry. The remarkable phenomenon that the English people and their American descendants, the only nations that have really comprehended and utilised the principles of parliamentary government, took the Jewish Bible as their text-book in times of stress and storm, will thus be explained" (Sulzberger).

To conclude with the weighty words of a Master of Balliol: "It is not without significance that the great struggle for political freedom in this country was led by men who drew much of their inspiration from the Old Testament, the sacred fountain of the spirit of nationality and national religion. This free religious spirit is one of the main causes why England outstripped all other European countries in its political development, and becomes their teacher in the methods of free government" (Edward Caird).

The Rabbis deemed such a marriage a concession to human weakness, as a preventive against worse manifestations of the unbridled passions of man. Israelite parents were particularly affectionate, and even indulgent. However, an incorrigible son whom milder measures failed to reclaim, might be tried by the elders at the gate, and was liable to death by stoning.

In Greece, weak children were exposed, i.e. left on a lonely mountain to perish ; and in Rome, a father could at will put even a grown-up son to death. In Israel, however, even when vice and insubordination in an adolescent son had become intolerable, the parents must appeal to the decision of an impartial tribunal. The death-penalty could only be inflicted by the community, with the sanction of the elders of the city.

The Rabbis tell us that this law was never once carried out ; and, by the regulations with which the infliction of the death-penalty was in this case surrounded, it could not be

The hanging took place after he had been put to death; the fiendish punishment of crucifying men alive, nailing them to the cross and prolonging their death agonies for days was the Roman custom. There were four methods of execution in ancient Israel—stoning, burning, the sword, and strangulation. Hanging was sometimes added after death in token of infamy, or as a further deterrent; Josh. X, 26.

accursed of God. Or, "involves the cursing of the judges", by his relations (Rashbam). "He that is hanged is a reproach unto God" (AJ). "It is a slight to the King, because man is made in the Divine image" (Rashi); and the dignity of humanity must be respected even in a criminal. Death, Judaism teaches, atones his sin; therefore, his body shall, at the earliest moment, receive the same reverent treatment that is due to any other deceased. The hanging was delayed till near sunset, so that the body might without delay be taken down for burial.

We have in these three verses a repetition of the law in Exod. xxiii, 4, 5 regarding our duty of restoring the strayed ox or ass, and of the lifting up of the fallen beast of burden. The law is here widened to include other lost articles that require restoration to their owners. It is noteworthy that whereas Exodus speaks of the things belonging to "thine enemy," here the wider term, "thy brother," is used. Whether thy neighbour be thy brother or enemy, his property must be protected and restored.

4. help him. lit. "help with him"; i.e. in company with the owner. The owner must not stand by idle and leave the work to others. A Chassidic Rabbi lamented that this law was little observed, and he devoted himself to its fulfilment. He was continually to be seen in the streets, helping one man to load his wagon, another to drag his cart out of the mire.

c) XXII, 5–12. MISCELLANEOUS LAWS—First Group

5. Distinction of Sex in Apparel

5. An interchange of attire between man and woman would promote immodesty and, in consequence, immorality. This law is probably directed against rites in Syrian heathenism, which included exchange of garments by the sexes and led to gross impurities.

6–7. Sparing the Mother-Bird

The ground of sympathy here is the sacredness of the parental relationship. The mother-bird is sacred as a mother; and length of days is promised to those who regard the sanctity of motherhood in this sphere, as it is promised to those who observe the Fifth Commandment. "When the mother is sent away, she does not see the taking of her young ones, and does not feel any pain. The eggs over which the bird sits, and the brood that are in need of the mother, are generally unfit for food. Consequently,

4. Thou shalt not see thy brother's ass or his ox fallen down by the way, and hide thyself from them: thou shalt surely help him to lift them up again.

5. A woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man, neither shall a man put on a woman's garment: for whosoever doeth these things is an abomination unto the LORD thy God.

6. If a bird's nest chance to be before thee in the way, in any tree or on the ground, with young ones or eggs, and the dam sitting upon the young, or upon the eggs, thou shalt not take the dam with the young: 7. thou shalt in any wise let the dam go, but the young thou mayest take unto thyself; that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest prolong thy days.*iii

this commandment will cause man to leave the whole nest untouched. The Torah provides that such grief should not be caused to cattle (Lev. XXII, 28) or birds; how much more careful must we be that we should not cause grief to our fellow men" (Maimonides); see XXV, 4f.

7. prolong thy days. "If the Torah promises the reward of lengthened days to him who performs a precept which involves no sacrifice whatsoever, how much greater must be the reward of him who performs a really great religious duty" (Rashi). Rabbi Akiba, referring to this promise of long life, supposes the case of a man who climbs a tower and takes the young from the nest, sparing the mother-bird in accordance with this commandment. But on his way down, he falls and dies. To the question, "Where is the well-being and prolonging of days in this case?" Akiba answers, "In that World where all goes well, and all is abiding."

8. Parapets to House-roofs

As the houses in all Eastern countries possessed flat roofs which were used for walking, sleeping, and other domestic purposes, it was necessary to erect a parapet to prevent accidental falling off. According to the Rabbis, the parapet was to be at least two cubits high.

8. blood. Blood-guiltiness; failure to protect human life exposes the builder, owner, or resident of the house to blood-guiltiness in the eyes of God. The Rabbis extended this prohibition to cover all cases where danger to life exists through our negligence; such as keeping a dangerous dog, or placing a broken ladder against a wall.

9. Against Mixing Seeds

This law—as well as the two laws following it against ploughing with an ox and an ass together, and the wearing of a garment composed of a mixture of wool and linen—is based on the idea that God has made distinctions in the natural world which it is wrong for a man to obliterate by processes of intermixing; see on Lev. xix, 19.

9. two kinds. Heb. kilayim, mutually exclusive kinds.

forfeited. lit. "to become consecrated"; the resultant crop would have to be consigned to the flames. The man would lose both his grapes and his other crop, as a penalty for his irreligious act.

10. Yoking an Ox and an Ass

10. ox and an ass. They differ greatly in their nature, in size, and strength; it is, therefore, cruel to the weaker animal to yoke them together.

8. When thou buildest a new house, then thou shalt make a battlement for thy roof, that thou bring not blood upon thine house, if any man fall from thence.
9. Thou shalt not sow thy vineyard with two kinds of seed: lest the whole fruit be forfeited, the seed which thou hast sown, and the increase of the vineyard.

10. Thou shalt not plow with an ox and an ass together.
11. Thou shalt not wear a mingled stuff, wool and linen together.

12. Thou shalt make thee fringes upon the four borders of thy vesture, wherewith thou coverest thyself.

11. Shaatnes

11. mingled stuff. The etymology and meaning of this word are both uncertain. Some derive it from the Egyptian. The reason underlying the prohibition may possibly be the same as that against mixing seeds, v. 9. The Rabbis class it with the prohibition of swine's flesh and other chukkim, which provoke the ridicule of scoffers, Jewish and non-Jewish, but which the loyal Israelite nevertheless willingly obeys, because they are the commands of his Father Who is in Heaven.

12. Tzitzis

12. fringes. Heb. gedilim; lit. "twisted threads," identified by the Rabbis with the tzitzis in Num. xv, 37–41. Among all peoples, knots have been used as reminders and symbols. The tzitzis are a constant reminder of the special relationship in which the Israelite stands to God, and the consequent duty of withstanding temptation to sin. There is a well-known Talmudic story of a reprobate and riotous liver who was recalled to his better self by the tzitzis he wore, so as to break completely with his wicked past.

d) XXII, 13–XXIII, 9. HOLINESS OF MARRIAGE

13–21. Charges Against A Bride

He who falsely accuses his wife of unchastity during betrothal shall be rebuked, fined, and he loses the right ever to divorce her. However, if such charge be true, it is a case of capital punishment. Betrothal in Bible times united the bridal couple as husband and wife for all purposes, save living together; and any infidelity on the part of the wife was considered adultery; see on v. 23. "In considering these plain-spoken laws (v. 13–21), it is just to remember that they represent an upward stage in the struggle against the animal passions of men. That we do not need some of them to-day, is due to the fact that their enforcement under religious sanction was needed at the time of their origin. It is only ignorance or ingratitude which can cavil at their spirit or their form" (G. A. Smith).

13. and hate her. The man had entered on marriage merely for the satisfaction of his passions, and then turned against his wife by a revulsion of feeling frequent in such characters (Bertholet); see on XXI, 14 and cf. II Sam. XIII, 15.

13. If any man take a wife, and go in unto her, and hate her, 14. and lay shameful things to her charge, and bring up an evil name upon her, and say, I took this woman, and when I came nigh to her, I found not in her the tokens of virginity: 15. then shall the father of the damsel, and her mother, take and bring forth the tokens of the damsel's virginity unto the elders of the city in the gate: 16. and the damsel's father shall say unto the elders, I gave my daughter unto this man to wife, and he hateth her; 17. and, lo, he hath laid shameful things to her charge, saying, I found not in thy daughter the tokens of virginity; and yet these are the tokens of my daughter's virginity. And they shall spread the garment before the elders of the city. 18. And the elders of that city shall take the man and chastise

14. shameful things to her charge. Or, "lay wanton charges against her" (AJ).

15. the tokens. The evidence on which the woman was acquitted was regarded as essential by many ancient races, though the absence of those tokens is by no means conclusive of guilt. Some of the Rabbis, therefore, took the phrase concerning the tokens as a metaphorical expression (כוורין את הדבר כשמלה חדשה) for clearly establishing the falsity of his charge by witnesses and expert evidence. Such also is their explanation in v. 20.

18. chastise him. Inflict the corporal punishment, "thirty-nine stripes," upon him (Josephus, Talmud).

22. Adultery

22. both of them die. The man as well as the woman; cf. Lev. xx, 10. There is to be no double standard of conjugal morality in Israel.

As in the case of all capital offences, the Rabbis required that the guilty parties be warned of the seriousness of their proposed action. Without such warning (hathraah), the death penalty could not be carried out. Furthermore, the law of evidence in capital offences and the proof of premeditation were made so severe that a death verdict was almost impossible. R. Tarphon and R. Akiba said, "If we would have been in the

23–27. A Betrothed Virgin

25. force her. Better, take hold of her (AJ).
26. no sin. Where there is compulsion, force majeure, there is no sin, or any of the legal consequences of sin.
27. cried. The woman is given the benefit of the doubt (Rashbam, Sforno). A similar provision, with similar phrasing, is found in the newly-discovered Hittite Law, going back to the year 1350 B.C.E. It seems, therefore, that in the laws concerning rape, we have the Common bring them both out unto the gate of that city, and ye shall stone them with stones that they die; the damsel, because she cried not, being in the city; and the man, because he hath humbled his neighbour's wife: so thou shalt put away the evil from the midst of thee.

25. But if the man find the damsel that is betrothed in the field, and the man force her, and lie with her; then the man only that lay with her shall die: 26. but unto the damsel thou shalt do nothing; there is in the damsel no sin worthy of death: for as when a man riseth against his neighbour, and slayeth him, even so is this matter: 27. for he found her in the field; the betrothed damsel cried, and there was none to save her.

28. If a man find a damsel that is a virgin, which is not betrothed, and lay hold on her, and lie with her, and they be found; 29. then the man that lay with her shall give unto the damsel's father fifty shekels of silver, and she shall be his wife, because he hath humbled her; he may not put her away all his days.

Law of the more advanced Semitic nations, just as we have seen in the Code of Hammurabi parallels to the Civil Legislation in Exodus; see Exodus, p. 290.

28–29. A Virgin Not Betrothed

The man must pay the "bride-price" and marry her, without right of divorce.

Chapter XXIII

1. Prohibition of Marriage with Stepmother

This law was aimed at the ancient heathen custom of inheriting women in the same way as other possessions of the deceased.

1. his father's skirt. Or, "his father's bed-cover"; a euphemism for marital relation; see Ruth III, 9.

2–9. Classes Excluded From Congregation

2. enter into the assembly of the Lord. Be counted as belonging to the community. He shall not therefore be permitted to marry an Israelite woman. The first to be excluded are the self-mutilated or unsexed in the service of some heathen cult. Isa. LVI, 3f speaks of men whose mutilation was not voluntary.

3. bastard. Heb. ממזר. This does not mean a child born out of wedlock, but the child of an adulterous or an incestuous marriage (i.e. one with the forbidden degrees of kinship as laid down in Lev. XVIII and XX).

tenth generation. i.e. never. The numeral "ten" here denotes, an indefinitely large number; cf. Gen. XXXI, 7.

4. Ammonite or a Moabite. From the use of the masculine and not the feminine, the Talmud deduces that it is only the male Ammonite and the male Moabite that are excluded.

Chapter XXIII

23 1. A man shall not take his father's wife, and shall not uncover his father's skirt.

2. He that is wounded in the stones, or hath his privy member cut off, shall not enter into the assembly of the LORD.

3. A bastard shall not enter into the assembly of the LORD; even to the tenth generation shall none of his enter into the assembly of the LORD.

4. An Ammonite or a Moabite shall not enter into the assembly of the LORD; even to the tenth generation shall none belonging to them enter into the assembly of the LORD for ever:
5. because they met you not with bread and with water in the way, when ye came forth out of Egypt; and because they hired against thee Balaam the son of Beor from Pethor of Mesopotamia, to curse thee.
6. Nevertheless the LORD

But the females could, after proselytisation, marry male Israelites; e.g. Ruth, who was a Moabitess, entered the Jewish fold and became the ancestress of King David.

According to the Rabbis this prohibition in regard to the admission of Ammon, Moab, Edom and Egypt into the community ceased with Assyrian conquest, which drove the inhabitants from their original homes and led to a commingling of tribes and races.

5. with bread. In Deut. II, 29, the Moabites sold the bread and water to the Israelites. As for the Ammonites, there is no record of their willingness to do even as much for them.

they hired. In the Heb. the singular is used, because Moab alone hired Balaam against Israel; Num. XXII, 5.

an Egyptian. The oppression of the Egyptians was the act of the Pharaohs rather than the will of the people. Israel had found a home in Egypt, and the Israelites were "guests" (גרים) in that land. For this the Egyptians must be remembered with gratitude. National gratitude is as rare as national self-criticism: Israel is the classical example of both.

e) XXIII, 10–25. MISCELLANEOUS LAWS—A SECOND GROUP

10–15. HOLINESS OF THE CAMP

10. every evil thing. This refers to both personal and moral pollution. The camp was hallowed by the Divine thy God would not hearken unto Balaam; but the LORD thy God turned the curse into a blessing unto thee, because the LORD thy God loved thee.

7. Thou shalt not seek their peace nor their prosperity all thy days for ever.*iv

8. Thou shalt not abhor an Edomite; for he is thy brother: thou shalt not abhor an Egyptian; because thou wast a stranger in his land.
9. The children of the third generation that are born unto them shall enter into the assembly of the LORD.

10. When thou goest forth in camp against thine enemies, then thou shalt keep thee from every evil thing.
11. If there be among you any man, that is not clean by reason of that which chanceth him by night, then shall he go abroad out of the camp, he shall not come within the camp:
12. but it shall be, when evening cometh on, he shall bathe himself in water: and when the sun is down, he shall come within the camp.
13. Thou shalt have a place also without the camp, whither thou shalt go forth abroad:
14. and thou

Presence, and must therefore be a place of purity. There is a far closer link than is commonly supposed between outward and inward cleanliness. Uncleanliness leads to ungodliness. Morals, religion, and even the elementary rules of sanitation, were absent in ancient camps. It was to be otherwise in Israel.

11. chanceth him by night. See Lev. xv, 16.

13. a place. "A prepared place" (Targum). Sanitation is of vital importance in a camp. In this respect also, the Mosaic Law is thousands of years in advance of its age.

turn away from thee. The camp must be "holy," otherwise there is no place in it for God.

16–17. Fugitive Slaves

The number of slaves was comparatively small in Israel; and the slave-trade could not have been extensive, since no slave-markets are mentioned in Scripture. Slaves had human rights in Jewish law, and were generally well-treated. In all Jewish history, there is no record of a servile insurrection, nor of runaway slaves. In the latter case, he was not to be restored to his master. "What an honourable contrast to the law of Hammurabi, which condemned to death anyone who sheltered a runaway slave!" (McFadyen). Among the Greeks and Romans the runaway bondman was, on recapture, branded with a red-hot iron. Readers of Uncle Tom's Cabin will remember that, as late as the middle of the last century, fugitive slaves were tracked and pursued by blood-hounds. In this Mosaic law, however, we have the same legislation which is the peculiar boast of England to have introduced into the modern world:

> "Slaves cannot breathe in England . . . .
> They touch our country, and their shackles fall" > (Cowper).

On the position of the slave in Greece and Rome, see Leviticus p. 284. Among the Greeks, slave-hunting was a not unfamiliar sport among them. As to Rome, Seneca records that the most gruesome punishments—torture, shalt have a paddle among thy weapons; and it shall be, when thou sittest down abroad, thou shalt dig therewith, and shalt turn back and cover that which cometh from thee:

15. for the LORD thy God walketh in the midst of thy camp, to deliver thee, and to give up thine enemies before thee; therefore shall thy camp be holy: that he see no unclean thing in thee, and turn away from thee.

16. Thou shalt not deliver unto his master a servant which is escaped from his master unto thee:
17. he shall dwell with thee, in the midst of thee, in the place which he shall choose within one of thy gates, where it liketh him best: thou shalt not oppress him.

crucifixion, being thrown to the wild beasts in the arena—were inflicted on the slave for slight misdoings. Even the Stoics debated whether in a shipwreck one should sacrifice a valuable horse to save a slave. The Romans could not understand the humane treatment which the Judeans extended to their slaves. During the Hadrianic persecutions, one of the grave counts against Rabbi Eleazar ben Perata was that he had set free his slaves.

16. a servant. A fleeing non-Israelitish slave, seeking refuge in Palestine from the harsh treatment of an unjust master, Jew or non-Jew, outside Palestine.

17. with thee. He was not only free, but was to be protected and helped to earn his livelihood and lead a useful life.

not oppress him. Better, not vex him, by words; this forbids wounding his feelings by speaking mockingly of his past or his race; see on Lev. XIX, 33.

18–19. Immorality

18. harlot. In Canaanite cults, there were males and females who committed acts of immorality as part of the idolatrous worship.

19. hire of a harlot. A departure from the RV. The profits, either in money or kind, earned in an infamous way must not be brought to the Sanctuary in fulfilment of a vow or for any other religious purpose.

a dog. The Semitic term for a male person who practised immoral conduct as a religious rite. The Rabbis, however, took the phrase in its literal sense, as anything obtained in exchange of a dog.

abomination. We dishonour God with gifts secured by unrighteous and impure means.

20–21. Interest

Israel is a brotherhood whose sons are linked together by kindly feeling. Hence, an Israelite must lend money to a necessitous brother without expectation of any profit whatsoever. It is otherwise in the case of the alien merchant, who requires money not to relieve his poverty but as a business investment; see on Exod. xxii, 24 and Lev. xxv, 36, 37.

20. not lend upon usury. lit. "not exact interest," moderate or excessive. In Old English usury means "interest."

"One of the great duties of charity is here prescribed—to assist persons in reduced circumstances with timely loans, so that they may be enabled to maintain themselves by their own industry, without resorting to the degrading necessity of accepting alms. If the poor man was to derive any real assistance from the loan granted him, it was

18. There shall be no harlot of the daughters of Israel, neither shall there be a sodomite of the sons of Israel. 19. Thou shalt not bring the hire of a harlot, or the wages of a dog, into the house of the LORD thy God for any vow: for even both of these are an abomination unto the LORD thy God.

20. Thou shalt not lend upon usury to thy brother; usury of money, usury of victuals, usury of any thing that is lent upon usury: 21. unto a foreigner thou mayest lend upon usury;

absolutely indispensable that no more was to be required of him than the actual amount that had been lent." (H. Adler).

21. unto a foreigner thou mayest lend upon usury. In contrast to the גר, the resident alien, the נכרי, "foreigner," is only temporarily in the land of Israel. He was usually a merchant in transit through Palestine. "The caravan trade was very extensive, and the foreign trader enjoyed ample protection in the customs and laws of the land. The uninterrupted course of trade and absence of complaints relative to acts of violence against caravans, speak plainly in favour of this fact. Some differentiation between the Israelite and foreigner was inevitable. The foreigner could not very well be expected, in a year which the Israelites celebrated as a Release Year, to remit the debt of his Israelitish debtor. Nor could he be expected to lend money to his Israelitish customer without taking interest. If an equal basis for trading between Israelites and foreigners was to be established, it could be attained only in this way: that the restrictions of the Release Year and the law of interest that were not binding on the foreigner a priori were also void for the Israelite, in so far as trade with foreigners was concerned" (Guttmann).

This permission to exact interest from a foreigner applied only to sums borrowed for mercantile purposes. When the Gentile needed the money for his subsistence, there was no longer any difference between Israelite and foreigner. "And if thy brother be waxen poor, and his hand fail with thee, then thou shalt uphold him; yea, though he be a stranger or a sojourner; that he may live with thee. Take thou no usury of him or increase; but fear thy God" (Lev. xxv, 35, 36). The Talmud maintains the interest prohibition throughout, even in regard to foreigners; and nowhere do we find stronger condemnation of the usurer than in Rabbinical literature. The Rabbis teach that the testimony of a usurer must not be accepted in a court of justice. He is classed in the same category with thieves and professional gamblers. These noble sentiments in regard to usury only deepen the moral tragedy of the Jew in the Middle Ages. Debarred from normal means of livelihood, money dealings were forced upon him throughout Christian Europe. "If we prohibit the Jews from following trades and other civil occupations, we compel them to become usurers," said Martin Luther. When on the eve of the French Revolution, the National Assembly hesitated in emancipating the Jews because of the charge of usury, a noted delegate, the Abbé Gregoire, pleaded; "O nations, if you record the past faults of the Jews, let it be to deplore your own work." However, if much may be brought forward in extenuation of the past, nothing can be said in defence of contemporary not lend. Rabbinic law forbids the Jewish lender to demand interest from Jew and non-Jew alike, and forbids the Jewish borrower from a Jew to pay it.

22–24. VOWS

22. not be slack to pay it. The sacred and binding character of the vow is given in Num. xxx, 3.

No one is under any obligation to make a vow. It is a purely voluntary act; but once made, it must be faithfully fulfilled. Ecclesiastes (v, 4) says, "Better is it that thou shouldest not vow, than that thou shouldest vow and not pay." See VOWS AND VOWING IN THE LIGHT OF JUDAISM, Numbers, p. 310.

24. that which is gone out of thy lips thou shalt observe. "You must be careful to perform any promise you have made" (Moffatt). A much-needed warning as to the sacred duty of keeping one's word; see Leviticus, p. 195.

vessel. The bag or wallet into which field or garden produce was put. Hunger, not greed, may be satisfied. Kindness must not be abused.

Chapter XXIV

f) 1-4. DIVORCE

What we have here is no law instituting or commanding divorce. This institution is taken for granted, as in Lev. xxi, 7 and Num. xxx, 10. We are merely given one regulation in regard to it; viz., that a man who has divorced his wife may not remarry her, if her second husband divorced her or died. See Additional Note, Marriage and Divorce in Judaism.

25. When thou comest into thy neighbour's vineyard, then thou mayest eat grapes thy fill at thine own pleasure; but thou shalt not put any in thy vessel.

26. When thou comest into thy neighbour's standing corn, then thou mayest pluck the ears with thine hand; but thou shalt not move a sickle unto thy neighbour's standing corn.

Chapter XXIV

24 1. When a man taketh a wife, and marrieth her, then it shall be, if she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some unseemly thing in her, that he shall write her a bill of divorcement, and give it in her hand, and send her out of his house. 2. And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife.
3. And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement, and give it in her hand and send her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife;

1. some unseemly thing. Heb. ערות דבר. The School of Shammai translated these words by "a thing of indecency," and maintained that divorce could only be allowed if the wife was guilty of unchastity; whereas the School of Hillel rendered them by, "indecency in anything," implying that a wife may be divorced also for reasons other than unchastity.

the arbitrary will and pleasure of the husband and by mere word of mouth, but upon reason given and by means of a formal document which demanded the intervention of a public authority, later a Beth-din, or a religious Teacher possessing full Rabbinical status. The Mosaic Law looks upon the marriage bond as holy in the sight of God and man; but, whilst it is inviolable, it is not indissoluble.

4. defiled. To her former husband only, by her marriage with another man. The strong expression defiled is used in order to condemn the easy passage of a woman between one man and another, which must always entail some degradation of the wifely ideal, and might lead to virtual adultery though the formality of the law would be observed (Nachmanides, Sforno). "Woman is a moral personality and not a thing, that a man may hand over to another, and then take back again at pleasure" (Koenig). The Koran permits remarriage twice unconditionally, but a third time only if, after the divorce, the woman had been the wife of another man. David remarried Michal (II Sam. III, 14), but she was taken from him, and not divorced by him.

6. MILLSTONE NOT TO BE TAKEN IN PLEDGE

shall die. The Code of Hammurabi decrees death for stealing a slave, the interest being not in human but in property rights.

8–9. Leprosy

8. take heed. The laws of leprosy are to be rigorously followed. These are laid down in Lev. xiii and xiv. "Even though the leper be a king like Uzziah, they must not honour him (by exempting him from the prescribed restrictions), but must shut him out from the camp in isolation" (Rashbam).

9. Miriam. Prophetess and sister of Moses though she was, when smitten with leprosy, she was yet separated from the camp seven days; Num, xii, 14f.

7. If a man be found stealing any of his brethren of the children of Israel, and he deal with him as a slave, or sell him; then that thief shall die: so shalt thou put away the evil from the midst of thee.

8. Take heed in the plague of leprosy, that thou observe diligently, and do according to all that the priests the Levites shall teach you: as I commanded them, so ye shall observe to do.
9. Remember what the LORD thy God did unto Miriam, by the way as ye came forth out of Egypt.

10. When thou dost lend thy neighbour any manner of loan, thou shalt not go into his house to fetch his pledge.
11. Thou shalt stand without,

10–13. Taking and Restoring a Pledge

As usury was forbidden in Israel, and there were elaborate precautions against excessive indebtedness, there were fewer possibilities of oppression in connection with debt than elsewhere. It was permitted to give pledges, but in the taking of these, the creditor must spare the debtor's feelings. He may not insolently invade the debtor's house, and select as a pledge any article that he deems fit. The dignity, as well as the need, of the poor man must be respected. "Even finer than the humanitarianism of these laws is their noble respect for human personality. Deuteronomy strikes the note of what is finest in Hebrew ethics and one of its great contributions to the world. Perhaps it is seen most finely, because most simply, in the direction, When thou dost lend thy neighbour any manner of loan, thou shalt not go into his house to fetch the pledge. For every Israelite, however poor, has the right to invite into

11. thou shalt stand without. Unless he invites thee to enter. Just because he requires our help, we are to remember how it deteriorates the poor to be dealt with in an unceremonious, tactless way, even by the benevolent (Harper).

13. sleep in his garment. If the debtor be a poor man he would probably give as security some necessary article of clothing, such as the simlah, worn for protection against wind and rain, and used as a covering during sleep. In Palestine the nights are mostly cold, and the poor man has no covering save his clothes. Hence the command that the creditor return such garment at nightfall, and not heartlessly deprive him of what is an essential of everyday life. Such heartlessness was peculiarly offensive to Israelite feeling; Amos II, 8, Genesis, p. 500.

14–15. TREATMENT OF WORKMEN

The workman is not to be wronged by being kept waiting for his wage. It must be punctually paid him the day he earns it; Lev. XIX, 13.

14. or of thy strangers. One and the same law must protect the Israelite and the non-Israelite worker.

15. in his day. He must receive the wages on the same day; i.e. as soon as his day's work is over; Lev. XIX, 13, "the wages of a hired servant shall not abide with thee all night until the morning."

16. Individual Responsibility

In ancient times, the family of a criminal often suffered supreme punishment with him.

Though the family is a moral unity, and the ethical solidarity of the nation is never to be lost sight of, no judge or tribunal must assume the power of putting the parents to death for a sin committed by the children, nor of putting the children to death for a sin committed by the parents. Ezekiel strikingly emphasised this fundamental teaching: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die; the son shall not bear the iniquity of the father with him, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son with him" (xviii, 4, 20).

16. for the fathers. Or, "in addition to the fathers" (Koenig). In II Kings xiv, 6, Amaziah king of Judah slays "his servants who had slain the king his father. But the children of the murderers he put not to death," in obedience to this law of Deuteronomy. Some explain the prohibition to mean the fathers shall not be permitted to die instead of the children, nor shall the children be permitted to die instead of the fathers. This was actually the case in Babylonian Law. If, through faulty construction, a house collapsed and a child was killed, then it was not the jerry-builder, but the child of the jerry-builder, that was put to death; see "Son for son, and daughter for daughter, in Code Hammurabi," Exodus, p. 289.

17–18. Injustice to the Stranger, Orphan and Widow

"It is astonishing to find how many of the laws—especially in the great-hearted Book of Deuteronomy—are expressly designed to protect the interests of the impoverished and defenceless members of society" (McFadyen). "No other

16. The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, neither shall the children be put to death for the fathers: every man shall be put to death for his own sin.

17. Thou shalt not wrest the judgement of the stranger, nor of the fatherless; nor take the widow's raiment to pledge: 18. but thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondman in Egypt, and the LORD thy God redeemed thee thence: therefore I command thee to do this thing.

19. When thou reapest thine harvest in thy field, and hast forgot a sheaf in the field, thou shalt not go again to fetch it: it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow: that the LORD thy God may bless thee in all the work of thine hands.

system of jurisprudence in any country at any period is marked by such humanity in respect to the unfortunate" (Houghton). The stranger, fatherless, and widow should be treated with a generous perception of the peculiar difficulties of their lot. Care for them is characteristic of Jewish civilisation generally, whether in ancient, medieval or modern times.

18. thou shalt remember. See xv, 15.

therefore. As God was kind to the Israelites in the hour of need, so let them in their turn be kind to those in need.

19–23. GENEROSITY TO THE LANDLESS

19. forgot a sheaf. The name for such a sheaf was shikchah. As this commandment could not be consciously observed, Rabbi Zadok grieved over the fact that he had never carried out this mitzvah. When at last he forgot some sheaves on his fields, he rejoiced, and made a festival for himself and his household.

20. olive tree. The Rabbis declared that the law of leaving the corner of the field unreaped (Lev. xix, 9) so that the poor might come and take it, applied also to trees. "In gathering olives, the fruit is brought to the ground either by shaking the boughs or beating them with a long palm branch. At the present time, the trees are beaten on a certain day announced by a crier, after which the poor are allowed to glean what is left. Gleaning is a beautiful and kindly custom still surviving to some extent in Palestine, but fast disappearing before the introduction of modern methods of harvesting" (Dummelow).

Chapter XXV

1–3. Against Excessive Punishment

In ancient societies, that had no system of imprisonment for lighter crimes, corporal punishment was of necessity much more frequent than in modern times. There was, therefore, great need for regulating it, if its possible barbarities were to be prevented.

1. controversy. Litigation.

justify the righteous. Acquit the innocent.

20. When thou beatest thine olive tree, thou shalt not go over the boughs again: it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow. 21. When thou gatherest the grapes of thy vineyard, thou shalt not glean it after thee: it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow. 22. And thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondman in the land of Egypt: therefore I command thee to do this thing.

Chapter XXV

25 1. If there be a controversy between men, and they come unto judgement, and the judges judge them; then they shall justify the righteous, and condemn the wicked; 2. and it shall be, if the wicked man be worthy to be beaten, that the judge shall cause him to lie down, and to be beaten before his face, according to his wickedness,

2. be worthy to be beaten. lit. "son of smiting"; i.e. one on whom smiting should be inflicted. No stripes were to be inflicted before or during the investigation; and the application of torture to extort confession from a criminal (or evidence from witnesses) was unknown in Israel. Only after he was found guilty, was the punishment to take place.

judge . . . before his face. In his presence, as a precaution against indiscriminate or unlimited flogging.

by number. The literal meaning is, the number is to be proportionate to his wickedness (Ibn Ezra, Mendelssohn, and all moderns). The Traditional explanation combines the last Heb. word of v. 2 with the first word of v. 3, and deduces therefrom that the 39 stripes are to be carefully counted, and the number inflicted to be in accordance with the physical strength of the offender.

3 בְּמִסְפָּר׃ אַרְבָּעִים יַכֶּנּוּ לֹא יֹסִיף פֶּן־יֹסִיף לְהַכֹּתוֹ עַל־
4 אֵלֶּה מַכָּה רַבָּה וְנִקְלָה אָחִיךָ לְעֵינֶיךָ׃ לֹא־תַחְסֹם שׁוֹר

3. stripes. By means of a leathern belt, and not by rods or any instrument that might prove fatal.

he shall not exceed. The Rabbis fixed the maximum at 39, for fear of exceeding the legal number by miscount.

thy brother should seem vile. Become an object of contempt, by destroying his human dignity which must be respected even in a criminal. The Rabbis point out that "previous to receiving his punishment the wrong-doer is termed the wicked man, but that after being punished he is designated thy brother. Once a man has expiated his offence, let his past be entirely forgotten; and let him be received once again into the brotherhood of Israel!" In such teaching we have a remarkable anticipation of the modern view that punishment must have a decidedly moral aim; viz., the improvement of the criminal. "It may in some cases be a man's duty to punish, and in other cases to pardon, but it is in all cases a man's duty to be merciful to a criminal; that is, to mix pity for him with the resentment inspired by his deed" (Seeley). The wonderful spirit of humanity of this Biblical law is quite absent from the codes of ancient and even relatively modern times. In nearly all those codes, the intention seems to be both to humiliate the offender and to inflict torment.

4. KINDNESS TO ANIMALS

The love of God regards not only the poor and the slave, but takes account also of the lower animals.

4. not muzzle the ox. This prohibition applies to all animals employed in labour, and not to the ox alone. "A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast" (Prov. XII, 10)—he has consideration for its feelings and needs. It is a refinement of cruelty to excite the animal's desire for food and to prevent its satisfaction. Prof. Cornill writes:

"What a truly humanitarian sentiment finds expression in the law, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn. The brute should not perform hard labour, and at the same time have food before its eyes without the possibility of eating therefrom. I remember some time by number. 3. Forty stripes he may give him, he shall not exceed: lest, if he should exceed, and beat him above these with many stripes, then thy brother should seem vile unto thee.

4. Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn.

ago to have read that one of the richest Italian real-estate owners, at the grape-harvest, fastened iron muzzles to his miserable, fever-stricken workmen, so that it might not occur to these poor peasants, working for starvation wages under the glowing sun of Southern Italy, to satiate their burning thirst and their gnawing hunger with a few of the millions of grapes of the owner." Jewish legislation extended the prohibition of muzzling the ox to workmen employed on production of articles of food; they must not be prevented from eating them; see p. 290.

The claims of the lower animals on human pity and consideration are characteristic of the Hebrew Scriptures. "In Psalm XXXVI, 7, there is an implication that, morally speaking, there is no complete break of continuity in the scale of sentient life; and (Gen. VIII, 1; Jer. XXI, 6) the domesticated animals are in fact regarded as part of the human community. In the Decalogue, the animals that labour with and for man have their share of Sabbath rest, and the produce of the fields during the Sabbatical year (Exod. XXIII, 11) is to be for them as for the poor" (Harper).

The duties to our dumb friends have been strangely overlooked in most ethical systems, not excluding Christianity. Paul dismisses as an idle sentimentalism the notion of man's duty to animals. "Is it for oxen that God careth?" he asks mockingly. And this remained the attitude of the Church till recent times. "In the range and circle of duties," says the historian Lecky, "inculcated by the early Fathers, those to animals had no place." In the Talmud, however, kindness to animals (צער בעלי חיים) becomes the basis of a whole code of laws. A great Rabbi is said to have been punished with long and continued physical pain because, when a calf which was about to be killed ran to him bleating for protection, he repulsed the animal,

ה בְּדִישׁוֹ׃ ס כִּי־יֵשְׁבוּ אַחִים יַחְדָּו וּמֵת אַחַד מֵהֶם וּבֵן
אֵין־לוֹ לֹא־תִהְיֶה אֵשֶׁת־הַמֵּת הַחוּצָה לְאִישׁ זָר יְבָמָהּ יָבֹא
6 עָלֶיהָ וּלְקָחָהּ לוֹ לְאִשָּׁה וְיִבְּמָהּ׃ וְהָיָה הַבְּכוֹר אֲשֶׁר תֵּלֵד exclaiming, "Go, that is thy destiny." In a beautiful legend which the poet Coleridge has paraphrased, the Rabbis tell how Moses, while he is still Jethro's shepherd, seeks out a stray lamb and tenderly carries the tired creature in his arms back to the fold, and how a voice from Heaven cries, "Thou art worthy to be My people's pastor." "This sympathy for the dumb animals is all the more remarkable because the terrible scenes in the Roman arena are only too clear an indication of the inhumanity which prevailed in the civilised world during the Talmudic period" (M. Joseph).

It is only in our day that legislation at long last forbade cruelty to animals. Until the middle of the nineteenth century, it was nowhere illegal—except in Jewish Law. It is, therefore, but another of the "conventional lies of our civilisation," if the duty of preventing cruelty to animals is invoked against one of the major requirements of Jewish life—Shechitah.

As is well known, the Rabbinical regulations concerning Shechitah, the Jewish mode of slaughtering animals intended for food, are in part due to a desire to prevent the slightest unnecessary suffering to the animal. "Since the need of procuring food necessitates the slaying of animals, the Law enjoins that the death of the animal should be the easiest. It is not allowed to torment the animal by cutting the throat in a clumsy manner, by pole-axing, or by cutting off a limb while the animal is still alive" (Maimonides). The Jewish method of slaughter is one continuous cut with the sharpest of knives, applied by a skilled operator. Such cut severs all the great blood-vessels of the neck, and produces instantaneous insensibility in the animal. A leading physiologist declares: "I should be happy to think that my own end were likely to be as swift and painless as the end of these cattle killed in this way undoubtedly is" (Prof. C. Lovatt Evans). Similar opinions in regard to Shechitah have been given some years ago by no less than

5. If brethren dwell together, and one of them die, and have no son, the wife of the dead shall not marry without unto a stranger: her husband's brother shall go in unto her, and take her to him to wife, and perform the duty of an husband's brother unto her.
6. And it shall be, that the firstborn which she beareth shall succeed in the name of his brother which is 446 non-Jewish Professors of physiology and veterinary surgeons in the principal European countries. If, nevertheless, Shechitah is prohibited in enlightened lands like Switzerland and Norway, this is due to the ignorance on the part of the electorate as to what the Jewish method of slaughter actually is. In Nazi Germany such prohibition was enacted not so much out of sympathy with the beast, as out of a desire to inflict pain on human beings: "they sacrifice men, and kiss calves" (Hosea, XIII, 2).

h) 5–10. Levirate Marriage

Levirate marriage (in Latin, levir is a husband's brother) is the technical name for the marriage with the widow of a childless brother (יבום). To avert the calamity of the family line becoming extinct, of a man's name perishing and his property going to others, the surviving brother of such a childless man was required to marry the widow, so as to raise up an heir to that man's name. This custom occurs in various forms among many ancient peoples. It existed in Israel in Patriarchal times (Gen. XXXVIII), but is here modified in important particulars.

5. dwell together. Not necessarily in the same community, but at the same time (Talmud).

no son. Heb. ben, in the sense of child, whether male or female. The Rabbis extended its meaning in this instance to grandchild, from this or any other wife.

the duty of the husband's brother. He shall take the place of the dead brother; i.e. he shall "build up the house" which the deceased had begun, and perpetuate his name.

8. speak unto him. "The elders counsel him as to what is the best course for him to follow" (Sifri). There are cases in which the levirate marriage was inadvisable, and they counselled that the rite of Chalitzah take its place. The latter course has been almost universally followed in later centuries, especially after the formal excommunication of all polygamists by Rabbenu Gershom in the year 1000.

9. loose his shoe. Or, "strip his sandal." The loosening of one's shoe by another was emblematic of the transfer of property. It betokened the giving up to that other of some property or right; Ruth IV, 7.

spit before him. This is a departure from the rendering of RV, which is contrary both to fact and Heb. idiom. Spitting before him "on the ground" (Talmud, Rashi) was to symbolise the contempt for the man who brings disgrace upon himself and his family by refusing the privilege to raise up unto his brother a name in Israel.

a name in Israel, he will not perform the duty of an husband's brother unto me. 8. Then the elders of his city shall call him, and speak unto him: and if he stand, and say, I like not to take her; 9. then shall his brother's wife come unto him in the presence of the elders, and loose his shoe from off his foot, and spit in his face; and she shall answer and say, So shall it be done unto the man that doth not build up his brother's house. 10. And his name shall be called in Israel, The house of him that hath his shoe loosed.

11. When men strive together one with another, and the wife of the one draweth near for to deliver her husband out of the hand of him that smiteth him, and putteth forth her hand, and taketh him by the secrets: 12. then thou shalt cut off her hand, thine eye shall have no pity.

11–12. Flagrant Immodesty

Even in extenuating circumstances, flagrant immodesty is to be dealt with without pity.

11. strive together. lit. "are wrestling together."

taketh. Seizes with violence.

12. cut off. The Rabbis commuted this severe penalty into a money-fine, varying "in accordance with the status of the culprit and the victim." There is no other case of mutilation in the Torah.

14 וָאָבֶן גְּדוֹלָה וּקְטַנָּה׃ לֹא־יִהְיֶה לְךָ בְּבֵיתְךָ אֵיפָה וְאֵיפָה

13–16. Honest Weights and Measures

13. divers weights. A large one for buying, and a small one for selling.

15. thy days may be long. Fair dealing, integrity in trade, must necessarily promote social happiness and prolong the life of a nation. "It is a known fact that every kingdom based on justice will stand. Justice is like a building. Injustice is like the cracks in that building, which cause it to fall without a moment's warning" (Ibn Ezra). "A false balance is an abomination unto the Lord: but a just weight is His delight" (Prov. xi, 1).

16. all that do unrighteously. A comprehensive summing-up. "All that do unrighteously either by mouth or deed, in secret or in open" (Ibn Ezra).

17–19. Remembering Amalek

Whilst Israel was to make justice and brotherly love its guiding rule, it was not to forget that Amalek had perpetrated a cowardly and unprovoked attack on the feeble and hindmost, when the Israelites were marching from Egypt; Exod. xvii, 8–16.

13. Thou shalt not have in thy bag divers weights, a great and a small. 14. Thou shalt not have in thine house divers measures, a great and a small. 15. A perfect and just weight shalt thou have; a perfect and just measure shalt thou have: that thy days may be long upon the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee. 16. For all that do such things, even all that do unrighteously, are an abomination unto the LORD thy God.*m

17. Remember what Amalek did unto thee by the way as ye came forth out of Egypt; 18. how he met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, all that were feeble behind thee, when thou wast faint and weary; and he feared not God. 19. Therefore it shall be, when the LORD thy God hath given thee rest from all thine enemies round about, in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance to possess it, that thou shalt blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven; thou shalt not forget.

18. met thee. Better, fell on thee.

smote the hindmost. He attacked the rear of the Israelites, the faint and weary stragglers enfeebled by the march.

he feared not God. He was devoid of pity and fundamental humanity; see Exodus, p. 11.

19. blot out. A people so devoid of natural religion as to kill non-combatants had forfeited all claim to mercy.

NOTE E

ON MARRIAGE, DIVORCE, AND THE POSITION OF WOMAN, IN JUDAISM

MARRIAGE

Its Meaning. Marriage is that relationship between man and woman under whose shadow alone there can be true reverence for the mystery, dignity and sacredness of life. Scripture represents marriage not merely as a Mosaic ordinance, but as part of the scheme of Creation, intended for all humanity. Its sacredness thus goes back to the very birth of man.

They do less than justice to this Divine institution who view it in no other light than as a civil contract. There is a vital difference between a marriage and a contract. In a contract the mutual rights and obligations are the result of an agreement, and their selection and formulation may flow from the momentary whim of the parties. In the marriage relation, however, such rights and obligations are high above the arbitrary will of both husband and wife: they are determined and imposed by Religion as well as by the Civil Law. The failure of the contract view to bring out this higher sphere of duty and conscience which is of the very essence of marriage, led a philosopher like Hegel to denounce that view as a "Schaendlichkeit."

Its purpose. The purpose of marriage is twofold—a) posterity, and b) companionship.

a) The duty of building a home and of rearing a family (Gen. I, 28, "Be fruitful and multiply") figures in the Rabbinic codes as the first of the 613 Mitzvoth of the Torah. To this commandment is due the sacredness and centrality of the child in Judaism—something which even the enlightened nations of antiquity could not understand. Tacitus deemed it a contemptible prejudice of the Jews that "it is a crime among them to kill any child." What a lurid flashlight these words throw on Græco-Roman society! It is in such a society that Judaism proclaimed the Biblical view that the child was the highest of human treasures. "O Lord God, what wilt Thou give me, seeing that I go childless?" was Abraham's agonising cry. Of what value were earthly possessions to him, if he was denied a child who would continue his work after him. This attitude of the Father of the Hebrew people has remained that of his descendants throughout the ages. A childless marriage was deemed to have failed of its main purpose; and, in ancient times, was admitted as ground for divorce after ten years. In little children—it was taught—God gives humanity a chance to make good its mistakes. They are "the Messiahs of mankind"—the perennial regenerative force in humanity. No wonder that Jewish infant mortality is everywhere lower than the non-Jewish—often only one-half of that among the general population.

b) Companionship is the other primary end of the marriage institution. Woman is to be the helpmate of man, עזר כנגדו. A wife is a man's other self, all that man's nature demands for its completion physically, socially, and spiritually. In marriage alone can man's need for physical and social companionship be directed to holy ends. It is this idea which is expressed by the term kiddushin ("hallowing") applied to Jewish marriage—the hallowing of two human beings to life's holiest purposes. In married life, man finds his truest and most lasting happiness; and only through married life does human personality reach its highest fulfilment. "A man shall leave his father and his mother and shall cleave unto his wife," says Scripture (Gen. II, 24). Note that it is man who is to cleave to his wife, and not the woman, physically the weaker, who is to cleave to her husband; because, in the higher sphere of the soul's life, woman is the ethical and spiritual superior of man. "Even as the wife is"—say the Rabbis, "so the husband is." The celibate life is the unblessed life: Judaism requires its saints to show their sanctity in the world, and amid the ties and obligations of family life. "He who has no wife abides without good, help, joy, blessing or atonement. He who has no wife cannot be considered a whole man" (Talmud). The satisfaction of the needs of physical and social companionship outside the sacred estate of matrimony, unhallowed by Religion and unrestrained by its commandments, Judaism considers an abomination. And such extra-marital relations are prohibited just as sternly with non-Jewish women as with Jewish. Thus, Joseph resists the advances of the heathen temptress with the words: "How can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?" (Gen. XXXIX, 9); and the Book of Proverbs is clear on the attitude of Judaism to the "strange woman"—married or unmarried (see Chapters II, V–VII). No less emphatically than in Scripture is purity demanded by the Rabbis. The New Testament accepted the Jewish view on the subject in its entirety. The whole of Gospel teaching on this subject, even Matthew v, 28, is to be found in the Talmud.

The Marriage Ceremony. The Marriage Service consists of the blessings of Betrothal, the formula of Marriage, the reading of the Kethubah, and the seven blessings of Sanctification. In later times was added the breaking of the glass. Originally a considerable time intervened between the Betrothal (אירוסין), by which the bridal couple became bound for all purposes save living together, and the Nuptials proper (נישואין). Since the sixteenth century, however, Betrothal is always combined with the Nuptials. The solemnisation of both the Betrothal and Nuptials opens with the benediction over a cup of wine. Wine is a symbol of joy, joyousness at a wedding being a religious duty; and in the Wedding Grace, "we bless our God in Whose abode is joy." The couple drink from both cups of wine—an indication of their resolve henceforth to share whatever destiny Providence may allot to them. The Betrothal blessing reads:—

> "Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe, who hast sanctified us by thy commandments, and hast given us command concerning forbidden marriages; who hast disallowed unto us those that are betrothed, but hast sanctioned unto us such as are wedded to us by the rite of the canopy and the sacred covenant of wedlock. Blessed art thou, O Lord, who sanctifiest thy people Israel by the rite of the canopy and the sacred covenant of wedlock."

The commands concerning forbidden marriages are given in Leviticus XVIII and XX; see the Table of Prohibited Marriages in force among Jews to-day, Leviticus, p. 186. The "rite of the canopy" is the chuppah, under which the bride and bridegroom stand during the Service, and is a symbol of the hometaking of the bride by the bridegroom. After this benediction there follows the bridegroom's Declaration, which constitutes the essence of the ceremony. He places a ring upon the forefinger of the right hand of the bride, and says: "Behold, thou art consecrated unto me by this ring according to the Law of Moses and of Israel." The general use of the ring is post-Talmudic; its place was formerly taken by any object of value. The formula is at least 2,000 years old, and expresses the resolve to lead their common life according to the rule and manner of Judaism. After this, the Kethubah is read. The Kethubah was introduced by Simeon ben Shetach in the first pre-Christian century as a protection to the wife in the event of her becoming widowed or divorced. This document testifies that on such and such a date, the bridegroom said to his bride: "Be thou my wife according to the Law of Moses and of Israel. I will work for thee; I will honour thee; I will support and maintain thee in accordance with the custom of Jewish husbands who work for their wives, and honour, support and maintain them in truth." The husband further undertakes the obligation of a certain fixed sum for her prior claim on his estate. "All my property even the mantle on my shoulders, shall be mortgaged for the security of this contract and that sum." Then begins the solemnisation of the Nuptials proper in seven Blessings. The fourth and seventh of these read:

> "Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe, who hast made man in thine image, after thy likeness, and hast prepared unto him, out of his very self, a perpetual fabric. Blessed art thou, O Lord, Creator of man.
> "Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe, who hast created joy and gladness, bridegroom and bride, mirth and exultation, pleasure and delight, love, brotherhood, peace and fellowship. Soon may there be heard in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, the voice of joy and gladness, the voice of the bridegroom and the voice of the bride, the jubilant voice of bridegrooms from their canopies, and of youths from their feasts of song. Blessed art thou, O Lord, who makest the bridegroom to rejoice with the bride."

It is seen that the Blessings "cover the whole of Israel's history. Each new home is thus brought into relation with the story of Creation and with Israel's Messianic Hope" (Abrahams). At the conclusion of the Blessings, a glass is broken by the bridegroom—a reminder of the Destruction of Jerusalem (זכר לחורבן). Another symbolisation may also be mentioned: just as one step shatters the glass, so can one act of unfaithfulness forever destroy the holiness and happiness of the Home. The Service concludes nowadays with the pronouncement of the priestly benediction.

Monogamy. The Biblical ideal of human marriage is the monogamous one. The Creation story and all the ethical portions of Scripture speak of the union of a man with one wife.

Whenever a Prophet alludes to marriage, he is thinking of such a union—lifelong, faithful, holy. Polygamy seems to have well-nigh disappeared in Israel after the Babylonian Exile. Early Rabbinic literature presupposes a practically monogamic society; and out of 2,800 Teachers mentioned in the Talmudim, one only is stated to have had two wives. In the fourth century Aramaic paraphrase (Targum) of the Book of Ruth, the kinsman (IV, 6), refuses to "redeem" Ruth, saying, "I cannot marry her, because I am already married; I have no right to take an additional wife, lest it lead to strife in my home." Such paraphrase would be meaningless, if it did not reflect the general feeling of the people on this question.

Monogamy in Israel was thus not the result of European contact. As a matter of fact, monogamy was firmly established in Jewish life long before the rise of Christianity. The New Testament does not prohibit polygamy, but only demands that a bishop or presbyter shall have but one wife (I Tim. III, 2). As late as Luther's day, bigamy was not unknown in Western Europe; and in the thirteenth century, for example, monogamy was but a name, at any rate in the upper classes of society. The Church too found it difficult to enforce strict monogamy among Eastern Christians.

DIVORCE

In the first pre-Christian century, there was a fundamental cleavage in the religious schools of Palestine in regard to Divorce. The dispute turned over the interpretation of Deut. XXIV, 1; but, as so often in theological controversy, the words of the Sacred Text were merely the pegs upon which to hang conflicting theories of life on the part of the disputants. The School of Shammai maintained that a marriage could be dissolved only by unchastity on the part of the wife, because adultery alone destroyed the whole structure of marriage and made its continuance impossible. The School of Hillel argued that divorce should be permitted for any reason which entailed a rupture of domestic harmony resulting in a daily violation of one of the main purposes of marriage—companionship. The Jewish sectaries (the Essenes, the "Zadokites" of Damascus, the Samaritans and Jewish Christians) opposed, in addition, marrying a second wife as long as the divorced wife was alive. Official Judaism, throughout the ages, followed the principle of the School of Hillel; and, of course, the unnatural prohibition for the parties to marry again is quite unknown to it. We shall see that in recent generations the civilised nations are more and more coming to adopt the Jewish attitude on this basic and vital question.

Not that Judaism ever lost sight of the fact that divorce was a calamitous necessity. "I hate divorce," is the Divine message by the Prophet Malachi (II, 16). "The very altar weeps for one who divorces the wife of his youth," says the Talmud. The rabbi was bidden to exhaust every possible expedient to dissuade husband and wife from proceeding to divorce; and later legislation made the writing and the delivery of the Get difficult and protracted, in order to facilitate attempts at reconciliation. "If there is a doubt as to the originator of the quarrel, the husband is not believed when he asserts that the wife has commenced the dispute, as all women are presumed to be lovers of domestic peace." (Shulchan Aruch).

Characteristics of Jewish Divorce. a) In theory, the power of divorce is in the hands of the husband. However, in the case of the wife's adultery, he is compelled to divorce her; connivance and condonation are not tolerated in Jewish Law. "Adultery is not merely infidelity towards the conjugal partner, but a violation of a Divine order, a crime which cannot be condoned by the offended party" (Z. Frankel, L. Löw). Divorce is also compulsory where a man has married within one of the prohibited degrees. (Incestuous "marriages" require no divorce, as these are null and void ab initio. On the distinction between incestuous marriages and those within the prohibited degrees, see Leviticus, p. 175). There are also a few cases in which the Torah deprives the husband of the right to divorce his wife (Deut. XXII, 19 and 29). Furthermore, the wife might sue for a divorce in the Jewish Courts, which could for certain causes—e.g., loathsome occupation or disease—compel him to free her. The uniform aim of the Rabbis throughout the succeeding centuries was to develop the law in the direction of greater equality between the man and the woman. At last, in the year 1000, Rabbenu Gershom decreed that the wife, unless she was unfaithful, could not be divorced except of her free will. Maimonides went even further: "If a woman says, 'My husband is repulsive to me, and I cannot live with him,' the husband is compelled to divorce her, because she is not like a captive woman that she should be forced to consort with a man whom she hates."

Such restriction of the husband's power to divorce was practicable only as long as the Jewish Rabbinic Courts had legal power to enforce their decisions. With the disappearance of that power, hardships have arisen in connection with divorce and chalitzah, difficulties which perhaps only a Central Sanhedrin in Jerusalem will in time be able to remove. The most serious of these is that of the Agunah, the woman whose husband has merely vanished. In favour of such a deserted wife, the laws of evidence as to the reported death of her husband have from the first been relaxed, and no effort is spared to free her from her uncertain state. While learned rabbis are to-day seeking a radical solution of this urgent question, it is a pity that the Agunah problem has become a tool in the hands of men whose purpose is the overthrow of Traditional Judaism, and some of whom recoil from no exaggeration in pursuit of that purpose. Jewish forsaken wives are relatively a very small minority when compared with the vast number of those in other faiths and legal systems who are deserted, are denied divorce or are granted it only on condition that they commit adultery, and those who are divorced without right to remarry.

b) Jewish divorce can take place by mutual consent, even as marriage is itself a matter of mutual consent. In English law, it is difficult to obtain divorce where both parties want it. If both desire to be freed, it savours of "collusion," and may involve the intervention of the King's Proctor and the denial or revocation of divorce, even though one spouse is innocent of matrimonial offence and the other guilty. Divorce as a result of mutual consent continued to be in force in Europe, including Saxon England, till the eighth century. It is to-day granted in various countries—e.g., Belgium, Switzerland and some of the United States of America.

It must be added that despite the ease with which, in theory, the marriage-tie may be dissolved in Jewish Law, divorce is less frequent among Jews than among the other populations of the various countries; see Jewish Encyclopedia, VIII, 340. Thus in the year 1933, there were in England, 2,549 marriages according to Jewish Law, but only 40 decrees nisi. In 1934, there were 2,600 marriages, and 46 such decrees. The strikingly small number of Jewish divorces is largely due to the fact that, "among Jews, there is an absence of drunkenness, always a fruitful source of domestic strife and misconduct" (H. Adler).

c) Perhaps the most characteristic feature of the Jewish

Law of Divorce is its absolute prohibition of the adulterer to marry the adulteress. Even in cases where such a marriage had, through suppression of the true facts, been entered into, it must be dissolved. A leader of the Anglican Church regrets that the sacred institution of marriage is so often used to whitewash an adulterous pair. "I should be glad to see the marriage of an adulterer with his or her paramour absolutely forbidden" (W. R. Inge).

New Testament Divorce. It is impossible to evade reference to the New Testament position of the question of divorce. According to Matt. XIX, 3, divorce was to be permitted, albeit for the one and sole reason of adultery. But it is now generally recognised that the Founder of Christianity desired the prohibition of divorce to be absolute, and taught that a divorced man or woman who married again was guilty of adultery (Mark X, 2–12). The Roman Catholic Church accordingly refuses in any way to recognise divorce, though in very rare cases it grants decrees of nullity. Outside that Church, however, the conscience of mankind has long been struggling with the problem of divorce as inherited from the Gospels. Nearly all Protestant States, and some Catholic ones, legislate to-day with due regard to the imperfections of human nature. They not only recognise adultery as a ground for divorce, but realise that there are other causes as well (e.g., drunkenness, disease, felony) that destroy the moral foundations of the family, interfere with the upbringing of the children, embitter the lives of two human beings, and often lead them to degradation and crime.

Divorce in England. English law until the other day demanded, in the case of the wife's petition, the committing of adultery, in addition to desertion, cruelty or some other enormity, as the indispensable condition for divorce. It was a definite incentive to perjury and immorality, and gave rise to an infamous class of professional helpers to procure a divorce. The evidence given before the Royal Commission of 1909 confirmed the fact that the Jewish outlook, which recognises the dissolution of a marriage when the happiness of the home is impossible, was in general harmony with progressive thought, while the Christian outlook was in direct conflict with it. In regard to the Anglo-Jewish population, prior to the passing of the Divorce Act of 1857, the Jewish Ecclesiastical Authorities granted divorces on grounds established by Jewish Law, and continued to do so till 1866. Since that date, no Jewish divorce as between parties domiciled in England is given by the London Beth Din, or any responsible Rabbi, unless a divorce, previously decreed by a Court, had been made absolute.

Jewish Modernists and Divorce. It is well known that not all Jews to-day follow Rabbinical law in the matter of marriage and divorce. Thus, in 1909, C. G. Montefiore proclaimed that the extreme New Testament utterances on divorce showed "unerring ethical instinct," whereas it was "to the eternal dishonour" of Hillel that he favoured divorce on other grounds besides adultery. This impelled Achad Ha-am to produce one of his most brilliant essays, (על שתי הסעפים, "Judaism and the Gospels") and subject Mr. Montefiore's views to an annihilating criticism. Neither the moderate nor the radical wing of Reform Judaism endorses Mr. Montefiore's position in this matter. On the one hand, Moderate reformers respect, in regard to marriage, the laws of the prohibited degrees, retain the essentials of the Traditional marriage service, and hold that "it is logical that the Synagogue which insists upon marriage between Jews being performed in accordance with Jewish rites, should also insist upon the divorce being performed in accordance with the same rites" (L. M. Simmons). Radical Reformers in Europe and America have, on the other hand, ever looked upon both marriage and divorce as purely civil acts, and hold that the Civil Law alone in regard to these matters possesses for Jews absolute validity. And as each one of the American States has its own divorce law, there are thus forty-eight different laws of marriage and divorce for the Liberal Jews in America! Some of these State laws are notoriously and even ludicrously lax; but no serious objection has been voiced against them by Liberal rabbis, except against the law of the State of Rhode Island. And this for a curious reason. That State—founded by the apostle of religious freedom, Roger Williams, the friend of Milton and Cromwell—rules that Jews, as all other religious bodies, be governed by their own regulations as to marriage and divorce.

Over against the secularist view in some sections of contemporary Jewry, the following words of the late Dr. Friedländer clearly define the attitude of Traditional Jews to the modern State on this vital question of Marriage and Divorce. "We acknowledge the principle laid down in the Talmud, 'The law of the Country is binding upon us' (דינא דמלכותא דינא), but only in so far as our civil relations are concerned. With regard to religious questions, our own religious Code must be obeyed. Marriage laws include two elements—civil relations and religious duties. As regards the former, we abide by the decisions of the civil Courts of the country. We must, therefore, not solemnise a marriage which the law of the Country would not recognise; we must not religiously dissolve a marriage by גט, unless the civil Courts of law have already decreed the divorce. On the other hand, we must not content ourselves with civil marriage or civil divorce; religiously, neither civil marriage nor civil divorce can be recognised, unless supplemented by marriage or divorce according to religious forms. Furthermore, marriages allowed by the Civil Law, but prohibited by our Religious Law, cannot be recognised before the tribunal of our Religion."

THE POSITION OF WOMAN IN JUDAISM

It is astonishing to note the amount of hostile misrepresentation that exists in regard to woman's position in Bible times. "The relation of the wife to the husband was, to all intents and purposes, that of a slave to her master," are the words of a writer in the Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics. That this judgment is radically false may be proved from hundreds of instances throughout Scripture. God created man and woman in His image (Gen. I, 27)—both man and woman are in their spiritual nature akin to God; and both are invested with the same authority to subdue the earth and have dominion over it. The wives of the Patriarchs are almost the equals of their husbands; later generations regard them as quite alike. Miriam, alongside her brothers, is reckoned as one of the three emancipators from Egypt (Micah VI, 4); Deborah is "Judge" in Israel, and leader in the war of independence; and to Hannah (I Sam I, 8) her husband speaks: "Why weepest thou? Am not I better to thee than ten sons?" In later centuries, we find woman among the Prophets (Huldah); and in the days of the Second Temple, on the throne (Queen Salome Alexandra). Nothing can well be nobler praise of woman than Prov. XXXI; and as regards the reverence due to her from her children, the mother was always placed on a par with the father (Exod. XX, 12; Lev. XIX, 3). A Jewish child would not have spoken to his grief-stricken mother as did Telemachus, the hero's son in the Odyssey: "Go to the chamber, and mind thine own housewiferies. Speech shall be for man, for all, but for me in chief; for mine is the lordship in the house."

The property rights of woman became clearly defined in the Talmudic period. Her legal status under Jewish law "compares to its advantage with that of contemporary civilisations" (G. F. Moore). "In respect to possessing independent estate, the Jewish wife was in a position far superior to that of English wives before the enactment of recent legislation" (Abrahams). A conclusive proof of woman's dominating place in Jewish life is the undeniable fact, that the hallowing of the Jewish home was her work; and that the laws of chastity were observed in that home, both by men and women, with a scrupulousness that has hardly ever been equalled. The Jewish Sages duly recognised her wonderful spiritual influence, and nothing could surpass the delicacy with which respect for her is inculcated: "Love thy wife as thyself, and honour her more than thyself. Be careful not to cause woman to weep, for God counts her tears. Israel was redeemed from Egypt on account of the virtue of its women. He who weds a good woman, it is as if he had fufilled all the precepts of the Torah". (Talmud).

The respect and reverence which womanhood enjoyed in Judaism are not limited to noble and beautiful sayings. That respect and reverence were translated into life. True, neither minnesingers nor troubadours sang for Jewish women; and the immemorial chastity of the Jewess could not well go with courts of love and chivalric tournaments. And yet, one test alone is sufficient to show the abyss, in actual life, between Jewish and non-Jewish chivalry down to modern times. That test is wife-beating. On the one hand, both Rabbenu Tam, the renowned grandson of Rashi, and Rabbi Meir of Rothenburg, the illustrious jurist, poet, martyr and leader of thirteenth-century Judaism, could declare: "This is a thing not done in Israel"; and the Shulchan Aruch prescribe it as the Beth Din's duty to punish a wife-beater, to excommunicate him, and—if this be of no avail—to compel him to divorce his wife with full Kethubah (Eben Ha-ezer CLIV, 3). Among non-Jews, on the other hand, no less an authority on the Middle Ages than G. C. Coulton writes: "To chastise one's wife was not only customary, not only expressly permitted by the statutes of some towns, but even formally granted by the Canon Law." Even in our own country, as late as the fifteenth century, "wife-beating was a recognised right of man, and was practised without shame by high as well as low" (G. M. Trevelyan). In the reign of Charles II, this recognized right of man began to be doubted; "yet the lower ranks of the people who were always fond of the Common Law still claim and exert their ancient privilege" (Blackstone). Even more strange was the public sale of wives that was not unknown among the very poor. Thomas Hardy wrote his powerful novel, The Mayor of Casterbridge, on such a sale. Some years ago, The Times (January 4, 8, 11, 17, 1924) traced a number of these sales throughout the nineteenth century: and Prof. A. R. Wright has shown that folk-custom to have survived in various parts of England into the twentieth century.

In modern times, friend and foe of the Jew alike speak with admiration of his home, and echo the praise of the heathen seer: "How beautiful are thy tents, O Jacob, thy dwelling-places, O Israel." The following description may well be quoted here of the Sabbath eve of a humble toiler in the London Ghetto a half-century ago:—

"The roaring Sambatyon of life was at rest in the Ghetto: on thousands of squalid homes the light of Sinai shone.

"The Ghetto welcomed the Sabbath Bride with proud song and humble feast, and sped her parting with optimistic symbolisms of fire and wine, of spice and light and shadow. All around, their neighbours sought distraction in the blazing public-houses, and their tipsy bellowings resounded through the streets and mingled with the Hebrew hymns. Here and there the voice of a beaten woman rose on the air. But no Son of the Covenant was among the revellers or the wife-beaters; the Jews remained a chosen race, a peculiar people, faulty enough, but redeemed at least from the grosser vices —a little human islet won from the waters of animalism by the genius of ancient engineers" (I. Zangwill).

a) XXVI, 1–11. First-Fruits and Acknowledgement of Divine Providence

The present chapter prescribes the rituals that were to accompany the presentation of the first-fruits and the tithe at the Sanctuary. It was to be an occasion of thanksgiving to God, by whose favour the Israelites had been rescued from the hardships of the past, and raised to become a great nation that dwelt in comfort in a rich and fertile land. This beautiful prayer leads us to believe that other sacrifices at the Sanctuary were likewise not offered in silence; cf. Joel II, 17, p. 561.

11. thou shalt rejoice. The yearly dedication of the first-fruits must be made a family festivity in which, as in the case of the fixed annual Feasts mentioned in XVI, 9–17, the Levite, who had no portion in the land, as well as the "stranger," were to participate.

The following description of the Procession of the first-fruits to the Temple is given in the Mishnah.

"How do they set apart the first-fruits? When a man goes down to his field and sees for the first time a ripe fig or

"How do they take up the first-fruits to Jerusalem? The men of all smaller towns that belonged to the Maamad (i.e. the local delegation to the Temple, see Leviticus, p. 51) gathered together in the town of the Maamad, and spent the night in the open place of the town. Early in the morning the officer of the Maamad said, 'Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion, unto the Lord our God.'

"They that were near to Jerusalem brought fresh figs and grapes and they that were far off brought dried figs and raisins. Before them went the ox, having its horns overlaid with gold and a wreath of olive-leaves on its head. The flute was played before them until they drew nigh to Jerusalem. When they had drawn nigh to Jerusalem, they sent messengers before them and bedecked their first-fruits. The rulers and the prefects and the treasurers of the Temple went forth to meet them. According to the honour due to them that came in, used they to go forth. And all the craftsmen in Jerusalem used to rise up before them and greet them, saying, 'Brethren, men of such-and-such a place, ye are welcome.'

When they reached the Temple Mount, even Agrippa the king would take his basket on his shoulder and enter in as far as the Temple Court. And the priests put his hand beneath it and waved it; and the man then recited the words from A wandering Aramean until he finished the passage. Then he left the basket by the side of the Altar, and bowed himself down and went his way.

"The rich brought their first-fruits in baskets overlaid with silver and gold, while the poor brought them in wicker baskets of peeled willow-branches: and baskets and first-fruits were given to the priests" (Bikkurim, Chapter III).

b) 12–15. TRIENNIAL DISTRIBUTION OF TITHES, AND PRAYER

There were three tithes. The first tithe was applied to the maintenance of the landless Levites; Num. XVIII, 21–32. The second tithe was taken by the owner to Jerusalem where he and the members of his family consumed it, or else redeemed it for money; Deut. XIV, 22f. In the third year, this second tithe was devoted entirely to the poor and dependent classes (XIV, 29), whose sufferings so often excite the compassion or indignation of the Prophets and Psalmists. It was later called מעשר עני, "the tithe of the poor." The third year was also known as "the year of removal." In it the landowner had to remove all his tithes out of the house; that is, pay all his arrears. This "removal" was accompanied by a solemn declaration, and a prayer for Divine blessing on Israel.

Some commentators refer these words to the Egyptian custom of placing articles of food inside the tomb. According to others, the allusion is to actual sacrifices offered to the dead in order to render them propitious to the survivors. However, the cult of the dead is opposed to both the letter and spirit of the Torah; see XVIII, 11 and Psalm CVI, 28.

I have not eaten thereof in my mourning, neither have I put away thereof, being unclean, nor given thereof for the dead: I have hearkened to the voice of the LORD my God, I have done according to all that thou hast commanded me. 15. D. MOSES' THIRD DISCOURSE:

Enforcement of the Law

(XXVII–XXX)

Chapter XXVII. Procedure on Crossing Jordan

The nation, upon entering the land, was to declare the terms of its tenure by expressive ceremonies. These are four in number. The Law was to be written on twelve stones great stones. As they were to contain "all the words of this law." Some commentators have held that only a brief summary of the Law could have been inscribed on the stones. However, since the discovery of the Hammurabi Code, consisting of 232 paragraphs, with a lengthy introduction and conclusion, in all about 8,000 words, engraved on one block of diorite, it is seen that the laws of Deuteronomy, or even the whole Torah, could have been written on twelve stones. The Behistun inscription of Darius is, in its triple form, twice as long as the Code (XII–XXVI), and is carved on the solid rock. There is, therefore, no reasonable doubt that, as Saadyah and Ibn Ezra hold, the 613 Precepts of the Torah were inscribed on those great stones.

4. mount Ebal. See XI, 29.

5–8. BUILDING AN ALTAR

This command is not contrary to chap. XII that an Altar be erected only in the Central Sanctuary, as the latter law came into force only after the conquest of the Holy Land.

It is noteworthy that the building of an Altar, i.e. the institution of Public Worship, was to be the first duty of the Israelites on their entering into Canaan. Throughout the ages, provision for public worship and the religious instruction of the children was ever the first care of the loyal Jew on coming into a new land.

5. no iron tool. See Exod. XX, 25. "The purpose of the Altar is to promote peace between Israel and his Father in Heaven. Let it not, therefore, be polluted by the touch of an iron tool, the symbol of division and destruction" (Talmud).

very plainly. Heb. באר היטב, so that the words of the Law could be easily read and understood. "In 70 languages," is the deep comment of the Rabbis, as its message was for all the children of men. They welcomed any serious attempt to make the Scriptures known and understood by those unable to read the Hebrew Original. "The words, baer hetev, demanding that the words on the stones of the Altar be lucidly explained, gave rise to the School of Sopherim, the Scribes, whose office it was to read the Book of the Law of God, build the altar of the LORD thy God of unhewn stones: and thou shalt offer burnt offerings thereon unto the LORD thy God:

distinctly, giving the sense, and causing the people to understand the reading (Nehemiah VIII, 8). In time, this activity resulted in the various Targumim, the versions in the Aramaic vernacular of Onkelos and Jonathan ben Uzziel, and in the Greek of Aquila, the pupil of Akiba. In the course of the ages, the Scribe of old became the Rabbi of to-day. He expounds the Law at the solemn convocations in the synagogue, applies it to the every-day needs and problems besetting the lives of the worshipper, and perpetuates it by teaching it diligently to the children of the community under his guidance" (Schechter).

The fulfilment of the command concerning the stones and Altar is given in Josh. VIII, 30–32.

9–10. "NOBLESSE OBLIGE"

9. this day. The erection of the Altar and the initiation of the sacrificial rites connected therewith, that were to take effect on the Israelites' entry into Canaan, made them become God's people, charged with the obligation of fulfilling His commandments and statutes. The consequences of obedience and disobedience are given in the next chapter.

11–14. Manner of the Solemn Blessing and Doom

The ceremony was antiphonal in character, the Levites speaking, and the people responding with an Amen. According to Tradition, the Levites stood round the Ark in some spot in the valley, midway between Gerizim and Ebal. They would first turn towards Gerizim and pronounce the Blessing, and the whole multitude on the slopes answered Amen. Turning then to Ebal, they would pronounce the Doom, followed by the same response. "Never did human imagination conceive a scene so imposing, so solemn, so likely to impress the whole people with deep and enduring awe, as the final ratification of their polity commanded by the dying Lawgiver" (Milman).

12. to bless. The Blessings, however, are not mentioned. According to the Talmud, a Blessing and a Doom were pronounced alternately, the Blessing being in each case the negative form of the Doom. Thus the first Blessing would be, "Blessed is the man who maketh not a graven or molten image," and so on.

14. the Levites. Not, as in v. 12, the ordinary members of the tribe of Levi but the "Levitical priests." They, as the chosen spokesmen, pronounced the Blessings and Dooms on behalf of the tribes.

answer. Solemnly pronounce.

15–26. The Solemn Dooms

In their clarity and succinctness, these denunciations recall

11. And Moses charged the people the same day, saying, 12. These shall stand upon mount Gerizim to bless the people, when ye are passed over Jordan; Simeon, and Levi, and Judah, and Issachar, and Joseph, and Benjamin: 13. and these shall stand upon mount Ebal for the curse; Reuben, Gad, and Asher, and Zebulun, Dan, and Naphtali. 14. And the Levites shall answer, and say unto all the men of Israel with a loud voice,

15. Cursed be the man that maketh a graven or molten image, an abomination unto the LORD, the work of the hands of the craftsman, and setteth it up in secret. And all the people shall answer and say, Amen.

16. Cursed be he that setteth light by his father or his mother. And all the people shall say, Amen.

the Decalogue. They relate to extreme cases of irreligion and immorality:—1) idolatry; 2) dishonour of parents; 3) removal of landmarks; 4) want of humanity to the blind; 5) injustice to the helpless; 6–9) incest and immorality; 10) murder; 11) bribery; and 12) general disobedience of the Law. The offences selected are those usually committed in secret, and therefore such as could not readily be brought to justice before a human tribunal (Rashbam, Ibn Ezra).

15. cursed be. Or, "cursed is." The words are a declaration of fact rather than an imprecation, announcing the inevitable result in God's righteous government of a certain line of conduct (Dummelow).

Amen. "So be it"; see Numbers, p. 54. On the prohibition, cf. IV, 16.

16. setteth light. Or, "dishonoureth." The Heb. is the exact opposite of "honour thy father and thy mother." This offence mostly occurs in secret; parents hesitate to make it public; cf. Exod. XXI, 17; Lev. XX, 9.

23. mother in law. "Such laws remained necessary well into Christian times. The Persians married their nearest blood-relatives; thus, Cambyses had two of his sisters in his harem. Similar abominations had to be fought in the early Church" (Koenig).

24. smiteth his neighbour. "By calumny" (Rashi), which smites the honour, peace, and happiness of one's neighbour; and calumny always starts in secret; cf. Exod. XXI, 12.

Chapter XXVIII

The Blessings and the Warnings

After the solemn rehearsal of the Dooms, there follows a description of their effect and import. "The Prophet has taught the higher law; he has rooted all human duty, both to God and man, in love of God; and now he tries to enlist man's natural fear and hope as allies of his highest principle" (Harper). The Warning (תוכחה), as this chapter is called in Hebrew, is far more detailed than the parallel Warning in Lev. xxvi. On the significance of these Warnings, see Leviticus, p. 290; and also p. 319, on their similarity with Code Hammurabi. "The language rises in this chapter to its sublimest strains: and the prophecies respecting the dispersion and sufferings of the Jewish people in latter days are among the most remarkable in Scripture. They are plain, precise, circumstantial; and the fulfilment of them has been literal, complete and undeniable" (Speaker's Bible).

1–14. The Blessings

2. overtake thee. The blessings (and curses v. 15) are personified as actual beings overtaking their objects. The same verb is used of the avenger of blood, xix, 6.

3–6. Six forms of blessing, covering Israel's life in town and field, in offspring, crops, cattle, harvest, and daily bread.

Chapter XXVIII

28 1. And it shall come to pass, if thou shalt hearken diligently unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to observe to do all his commandments which I command thee this day, that the Lord thy God will set thee on high above all the nations of the earth: 2. and all these blessings shall come upon thee, and overtake thee, if thou shalt hearken be in the field. 4. Blessed shall be the fruit of thy of thy cattle, the increase of thy kine, and the young of thy flock. 5. Blessed shall be thy basket and thy kneadingtrough. 6. Blessed shalt thou be when thou comest in, and blessed shalt thou be when thou goest out.*vi 7. The Lord shall cause thee one way, and shall flee before thee seven

5. thy basket . . . kneadingtrough. Metaphors for the annual harvest of fruit and daily bread.

6. comest in . . . goest out. The blessing of safety in all the manifold activities of ordinary life. Rashi gives it a wider spiritual meaning: "May thy going out from the world be as sinless as was thy coming into the world."

7–13. The Divine blessing will rest also on their larger enterprises whether in peace or war. Theirs will be a victory over enemies; material success in all forms of labour, accompanied by religious and cultural supremacy among the nations.

7. seven ways. A round number, indicating a great quantity. The compact array of the advancing foe is contrasted with his dispersion, in manifold directions, after defeat.

ו׳ יתיר v. 14.

9. an holy people. Set apart for Himself, and therefore inviolable.

10. called by the name of the LORD. i.e. that He is thy Owner, and, as such, surrounds thee with His protection (Driver).

12. treasury. The celestial reservoirs, in which the rain was conceived to be stored; cf. Job. XXXVIII, 22.

shalt lend. A sign of wealth, as well as of power and independence.

13. only. Here in the meaning of "nothing but;" ever rising in reputation. Israel shall have uninterrupted prosperity and success.

15–68. THE WARNINGS

In the remainder of this chapter, the Lawgiver sets forth in words of awful power the fact that God's laws have a reverse, as well as an obverse, side; that the Divine Covenant was indeed a hope and an encouragement, but ways. 8. The LORD shall command the blessing upon thee in thy barns, and in all that thou puttest thine hand unto; and he shall bless thee

in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.
9. The LORD shall establish thee for an holy people unto himself, as he hath sworn unto thee; if thou shalt keep the commandments of the LORD thy God, and walk in his ways. 10. And all the peoples of the earth shall see that thou art called by the name of the LORD; and they shall be afraid of thee. 11. And the LORD shall make thee plenteous for good, in the fruit of thy body, and in the fruit of thy cattle, and in the fruit of thy ground, in the land which the LORD sware unto thy fathers to give thee. 12. The LORD shall open unto thee his good treasury the heaven to give the rain of thy land in its season, and to bless all the work of thine hand: and thou shalt lend unto many nations, and thou shalt not borrow.
13. And the LORD shall make thee the head, and not the tail; and thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath; if thou shalt hearken unto the commandments of the LORD thy God, which I command thee this day, to observe and to do them; 14. and shalt not turn aside from any of the words which I command you this day, to the right hand, or to the left, to go after other gods to serve them.

also a responsibility and a warning. "The sublimity of the denunciations surpasses anything in the oratory or the poetry of the whole world. Nothing, except the real horrors of Jewish history, can approach the tremendous maledictions which warned Israel against the violation of the Law" (Milman). "Three times does the wave of holy passion rise and fall. At first the exuberance of the woes enumerated overpowers our attention; the musically parallel sentences, which in other speeches make perorations, here come for intervals of relief. Another stream of denunciation brings the serving the LORD with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart by reason of the abundance of all things, into contrast with the serving of the enemy in hunger, and in thirst, and in nakedness, and in want of all things; and the siege laid by the enemy is extended in picture to the last horrors the mind can conceive. Yet another flood of speech begins with the 'glorious and fearful' Name; and there passes before us the fading of the life of promise into plagues and exile; in exile, the trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and pining of soul; until for a final climax the original salvation of Israel is reversed in a voluntary returning to the land of bondage, the people selling themselves to their enemies for bondmen and bondwomen, a climax yet more final than this, for 'no man shall buy you'" (Moulton).

The curses are national and not individual. They are all of them conditional, declaring what God would bring on Israel in the event of its complete apostasy, and this was never true for any long time of the entire nation. However, the calamities here predicted were literally fulfilled as regards the mass of the nation in some period or other of Jewish history. Israel's hearken unto the voice of the LORD thy God, to observe to do all his commandments and his statutes which I command thee this day; that all these curses shall come upon thee, and over-and cursed shalt thou be in the field. 17. Cursed shall be thy basket and thy kneadingtrough. 18.

Cursed shall be the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy ground, the increase of thy kine, and the young of thy flock. 19. Cursed shalt thou be when thou comest in, and cursed shalt thou be when thou goest out. 20. The LORD shall send upon thee cursing, discomfiture, and rebuke, in all that thou puttest thine hand unto for to do, until thou be destroyed, and until thou perish quickly; because of the evil of thy doings, whereby thou hast forsaken me. 21. The LORD shall make the pestilence cleave unto thee, until he have survival of the Divine Judgment is due to the fact that Israel always possessed a "righteous remnant." In the deepest night of exile and despair, that loyal minority would kindle the light of repentance and hope in the souls of their People, and thereby render it indestructible.

16–19. These curses take the same verbal form as the blessings, v. 1–6, and express failure in every department of national life.

20–26. Disastrous years, fevers, droughts and ruinous defeat in battle.

20. cursing. The general term, particulars of which follow.

discomfiture. Inability to complete a task undertaken (Ibn Ezra).

rebuke. Failure to enjoy the fruit of one's labours through constant anxiety and vexation.

21. pestilence. Any dangerous epidemic.

22. shall smite thee. With seven plagues; five on men, and two on crops. The identification of the names of the plagues is by Macalister.

consumption. A wasting fever of the Mediterranean type.

fever. Malaria.

inflammation. Typhoid fever.

fiery heat. lit. "irritation," erysipelas.

24. powder and dust. An allusion to the sirocco, with its fogs of sand and dust.

25. a terror unto. Better, a horror unto (AJ), or, "a shuddering unto"; an awe-inspiring spectacle.

26. fray. Frighten, as Rizpah's mother-love did, II Sam. xxi, 10. So complete would be the rout, that the dead would lie unburied.

27–37. Incurable diseases, mental blindness, a helpless prey to cruel invaders, and ignominous exile.

27. the boil of Egypt. Cf. Deut. vii, 15.

28. astonishment of heart. Dismay; confusion of mind.

29. grope. lit. "be groping;" reduced to blind helplessness.

as the blind gropeth in darkness. "Rabbi José said, All my days I grieved at my not being able to explain this verse;

goest in to possess it. 22. The LORD shall smite thee with consumption, and with fever, and with inflammation, and with fiery heat, and with the sword, and with blasting, and with mildew; and they shall pursue thee until thou perish. 23.
And thy heaven that is over thy head shall be brass, and the earth that is under thee shall be iron. 24. The LORD shall make the rain of thy land powder and dust: from heaven shall it come down upon thee, until thou be destroyed. 25.
The LORD shall cause thee to be smitten before thine enemies: thou shalt go out one way against them, and shalt flee seven ways before them: and thou shalt be a terror unto all the kingdoms of the earth. 26. And thy carcase shall be meat unto all fowls of the air, and unto the beasts of the earth, and there shall be none to fray them away. 27. The LORD shall smite thee with the boil of Egypt, and with the tumours, and with the scurvy, and with the itch, whereof thou canst not be healed. 28. The LORD shall smite thee with madness, and with blindness, and with astonishment of heart: 29. and thou shalt grope at noonday, as the blind gropeth in darkness, and thou shalt not prosper in thy ways:

for, what difference can it be to the blind man, whether he gropeth in the light or in the dark? Until one night I was walking in the road, and met a blind man with a lighted torch in his hand. 'Son,' said I, 'why dost thou carry that torch? thou canst not see its light.' 'Friend' replied the blind man, 'true it is I cannot see, but as long as I carry this torch in my hand, the sons of men see me, take pity on me, and save me from pitfalls, from thorns and briers' " (Talmud). Thus, the apparently superfluous phrase in darkness was to emphasise the greatness of the calamity that would befall Israel. Even at noonday they were to grope as the blind do in the darkness, without a ray of light to exhibit their distress to the compassion of men.

30. not use the fruit thereof. See xx, 6. The helpless inhabitants would be at the mercy of insatiable conquerors, so that they could call nothing they possessed—not even their wives and children—their own.

31. before thine eyes. Whilst thou art looking on, unable to raise a hand to prevent it.

32. thy sons and thy daughters. History records several large deportations of Israelites to distant lands beyond the Euphrates.

34. be mad. i.e. be driven mad.

36. thy king. II Kings xxiv reports that Jehoiakim was carried captive to Babylon with 10,000 of his subjects.

and thou shalt be only oppressed and spoiled

30. Thou shalt betroth a wife, and another man shall lie with her: thou shalt build an house, and thou shalt not dwell therein: thou shalt plant a vineyard, and shalt not use the fruit thereof. 31. Thine ox shall be slain before thine eyes, and thou shalt not eat thereof: thine ass shall be violently taken away from before thy face, and shall not be restored to thee: thy sheep shall be given unto thine enemies, and thou shalt have none to save thee. 32. Thy sons and thy daughters shall be given unto another people, and thine eyes shall look, and fail with longing
for them all the day: and there shall be nought in the power of thine hand. 33. The fruit of thy ground, and all thy labours, shall a nation which thou knowest not eat up; and thou shalt be only oppressed and crushed alway: 34. so that thou shalt be mad for the sight of thine eyes which thou shalt see. 35. The LORD shall smite thee in the knees, and in the legs, with a sore boil, whereof thou canst not be healed, from the sole of thy foot unto the crown of thy head. 36. The LORD shall bring thee, and thy king which thou shalt set over thee, unto a nation which thou hast not known, thou nor thy fathers; and there shalt thou serve other gods, wood and stone. 37. And serve other gods, wood and stone. "Transportation to a heathen land would mean absorption into the religion, as well as into the life, of heathenism" (Welch).

פתח בס"ם v. 42.

37. a proverb. A taunt.
byword. lit. "the object of biting remarks."
38–44. Impoverished Israel reduced to dependence on the resident foreigner.
40. thine olive shall cast its fruit. "Thine olives shall drop off" (Moffatt).
41. shall not be thine. With transportation to a foreign land, estrangement from their fathers, Faith and People must inevitably follow. Such estrangement is deemed a curse in Mal. III, 24; see Leviticus, p. 473. Byalik calls attention to a similar estrangement of the children from their Faith and People in the present age, and considers it the supreme tragedy of the Spiritual Golus of the emancipation era.
43. the stranger. He who had received the charity of the Israelites, to him would they now have to look for commiseration. They must learn to live as servants where they had once been masters.
45–48. The reason for these terrible calamities.
45. because. A return to the keynote of this whole chapter, v. 15.

thou shalt become an astonishment, a proverb,
and a byword, among all the peoples whither the LORD shall lead thee away. 38. Thou shalt carry much seed out into the field, and shalt gather little in; for the locust shall consume it.
39. Thou shalt plant vineyards and dress them, but thou shalt neither drink of the wine, nor gather the grapes; for the worm shall eat them.
40. Thou shalt have olive trees throughout all thy borders, but thou shalt not anoint thyself with the oil; for thine olive shall cast its fruit. 41. Thou shalt beget sons and daughters, but they shall not be thine; for they shall go into captivity. 42.
All thy trees and the fruit of thy ground shall the locust possess. 43. The stranger that is in the midst of thee shall mount up above thee higher and higher; and thou shalt come down lower and lower. 44. He shall lend to thee, and thou shalt not lend to him: he shall be the head, and thou shalt be the tail. 45. And all these curses shall come upon thee, and shall pursue thee, and overtake thee, till thou be destroyed; because thou hearkenedst not unto the voice of the LORD thy God, to keep his commandments and his statutes which he commanded thee: 46. and they shall be upon thee for a sign and for a wonder,

46. for a sign and for a wonder. The calamities shall testify to the truth of the Divine interposition in history. As soon as they were prepared to acknowledge that what they suffered was not unmerited, there was still soundness in them, and they would receive mercy at the hands of God.

upon thy seed for ever. i.e. as long as they maintained their disobedience and rebelliousness. But, as stated in Deut. xxx, 2, 3, should they "bethink themselves" and "return," then would they reap the blessings of restoration and prosperity.

49–55. Measure for measure. Invasion by a far-off nation. The horrors of siege.

49. bring a nation against thee. A prediction, says Nachmanides, of the fall of the Second Temple under the Romans. The words, however, apply quite appropriately to the invasions by the Assyrians and Babylonians, as described in the writings of the Prophets.

50. fierce countenance. Unyielding to considerations of humanity or pity.

53. eat the fruit of thine own body. Hunger would so brutalise them; see II Kings vi, 25–29; Lam. iv, 10. This horror was repeated at the siege of Jerusalem by the Romans.

And he shall besiege thee in all thy gates, until thy high and fenced walls come down, wherein thou trustedst, throughout all thy land: and he shall besiege thee in all thy gates throughout all thy land, which the LORD thy God hath given thee. 53. wherewith . . . shall straiten thee. "As your foes are pressing you hard" (Moffatt).

54. his eye shall be evil. He would grudge to give even this ghastly food to those nearest and dearest to him.

56–68. Concluding Warning

58. fear this glorious and fearful name. The adjective "glorious" has reference to the majesty of God to Whom fear (i.e. reverence) is due; "fearful" denotes God's awe-inspiring nature. Name is occasionally used as a synonym for Deity, or as denoting the Divine Presence; cf. Lev. xxiv, 11.

59. wonderful. Extraordinary, exceptional.

among you, and very delicate, his eye shall be evil toward his brother, and toward the wife of his bosom, and toward the remnant of his children which he hath remaining: 55. so that he will not give to any of them of the flesh of his children whom he shall eat, because he hath nothing left him; in the siege and in the straitness, wherewith thine enemy shall straiten thee in all thy gates. 56. The tender and delicate woman among you, which would not adventure to set the sole of her foot upon the ground for delicateness and tenderness, her eye shall be evil toward the husband of her bosom, and toward her son, and toward her daughter; 57. and toward her young one that cometh out from between her feet, and toward her children which she shall bear; for she shall eat them for want of all things secretly: in the siege and in the straitness, wherewith thine enemy shall straiten thee in thy gates. 58. If thou wilt not observe to do all the words of this law that are written in this book, that thou mayest fear this glorious and fearful name, THE LORD THY GOD; 59. then the LORD will make thy plagues wonderful, and the plagues of thy seed, even great plagues, and of long continuance, and sore sicknesses, and of long continuance. 60. And he will bring upon thee again all the diseases of Egypt, which thou wast afraid of; and they shall cleave unto thee. 61. Also every sickness, and every plague, which is not written in the book of this law, them will the LORD bring upon thee, until thou be destroyed. 62. And

63. the LORD rejoiced over you. When a son walks in the right way, it is the father's joy to help him and to show him kindness. Should, however, the son fall into evil ways, then it is equally the father's "joy" to find some means—even painful ones—to bring him back to the right path. In like manner, God "rejoices" to bring upon sinful Israel the trials and sufferings of exile, in order thereby to purify and elevate him, and thus restore him to His favour.

64. shall scatter thee . . and stone. See on v. 36.

65. among these nations. Israel is to have no rest—never-ceasing anxiety, life in perpetual jeopardy, an unendurable present, and a future of undefined terrors.

failing of eyes. Usually taken to mean the gradual extinction of all hope; or, the eyes refuse their office, because they see only horror.

pining of soul. A mind tortured and restless.

66. life shall hang in doubt before thee. Like an object suspended by a tender thread and held in front of one's eyes—about to fall down and break at any moment; but see next comment.

ye shall be left few in number, whereas ye were as the stars of heaven for multitude; because thou didst not hearken unto the voice of the LORD thy God.
63. And it shall come to pass, that as the LORD rejoiced over you to do you good, and to multiply you; so the LORD will rejoice over you to cause you to perish, and to destroy you; and ye shall be plucked from off the land whither thou goest in to possess it.
64. And the LORD shall scatter thee among all peoples, from the one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth; and there thou shalt serve other gods, which thou hast not known, thou nor thy fathers, even wood and stone.
65. And among these nations shalt thou find no ease, and there shall be no rest for the sole of thy foot: but the LORD shall give thee there a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and pining of soul:
66. and thy life shall hang in doubt before thee; and thou shalt fear night and day, and shalt have none assurance of thy life:
67. in the morning thou shalt say, Would God it were even! and none assurance of thy life. "Thou shalt expect every moment to be thy last" (Driver). Better, thou shalt not believe in thy life; i.e. thou canst not believe that these happenings are happening to thee, that they are real; deluding thyself with the vain hope that it is all an evil dream (Steinthal).

67. in the morning thou shalt say. Even as he that suffers acute pain, yearns for the hours to pass. This v. graphically depicts the agonized uncertainty, protracted by day and by night. "One seems to hear the voice of the Wandering Jew" (Bertholet).

v. 67. קמץ בז״ק

68. bring thee into Egypt again. A culminating calamity. God repeals the prohibition mentioned in XVII, 16, and they would be returned to Egypt, to the degradation of their erstwhile Egyptian serfdom. At the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, both Titus and Hadrian consigned multitudes of Jews into slavery; and Egypt received a large proportion of those slaves.

with ships. In ships. They came forth from Egypt "600,000 men on foot," a disciplined host of free warriors, but would be carried thither cooped up in slave-ships. The Romans had a fleet in the Mediterranean, and this was an easier and safer way of transporting prisoners than by land across the desert.

sell yourselves. Better, offer yourselves for sale; ye will in vain seek and yearn to be bought as man-servants and maid-servants (Rashi).

no man shall buy you. Josephus records that when, at the Destruction of Jerusalem, the Roman troops grew weary of slaughter, 97,000 of the younger prisoners were spared. Those over seventeen years were sent to the mines, or to the arenas to fight as gladiators or against wild beasts; those under seventeen were sold as slaves; but the market was so glutted that, though offered at nominal prices, none would buy them! Those who remained unpurchased were sent into confinement, where they perished by hundreds and thousands from hunger.

at even thou shalt say, Would God it were morning! for the fear of thine heart which thou shalt fear, and for the sight of thine eyes which thou shalt see. 68. And the LORD shall bring thee into Egypt again with ships, by the way whereof I said unto thee, Thou shalt see it no more again: and there ye shall sell yourselves unto your enemies for bondmen and for bondwomen, and no man shall buy you.

beside the covenant . . . in Horeb. A reference to the parallel section of the Warning in Lev. XXVI.

Chapter XXIX

In this and the succeeding chapters, Moses sums up the argument in the previous discourses. He reviews the journey of Israel from Egypt to Moab. Israel now stands ready to enter God's Covenant; let none dream to escape the curse of disobedience. God's wrath will be manifest to all in Israel's Exile. Yet even then, Repentance will bring return from Exile. Let Israel note the simplicity of the Divine Commandment, and the issues of life and death dependent on obedience or disobedience of it.

VIII. NITZAVIM

(CHAPTERS XXIX, 9–XXX)

XXIX, 9–28. MOSES' THIRD DISCOURSE CONTINUED

Moses reviews the different orders of people before him, all assembled to enter into a Covenant with God : heads of tribes, elders, officers, all the men of Israel, the little ones, the wives, the strangers ; he thinks of others who shall hereafter take part in such solemn acts. He warns every man or woman, every family or tribe, against nourishing evil in their hearts, and trusting to escape in the general righteousness. He proclaims how the sinful individual shall be separated for doom, the land of a sinful tribe overthrown in a curse. But he adds words of mercy ; and he makes solemn appeals to choose life and not death (Moulton).

VIII. NITZAVIM

13–28. Israel, Present and Future, is a Unity

The Covenant is one which must be held to bind not only the living who were present that day, but their distant posterity as well.

15. for ye know. " For ye have experience of the idolatry rife both in Egypt and among the other nations bordering on Canaan; and can judge consequently of the necessity of including future generations in the terms of the obligation " (Driver).

came through the midst of the nations. The trying experiences they endured in their contact with Edom and Ammon, Moab and Midian.

16. abominations. Better, detestable things; a contemptuous designation for idols, with an implied reference to the immoral rites that went hand in hand with idol-worship.

their idols. lit. " inanimate blocks," fetishes.

silver and gold. The costly ornaments with which their worshippers beautified them (Talmud).

17. lest there should be among you. An elliptical phrase. The full sense is: " I adjure you to enter into this oath and covenant, for fear lest there should be among you. . . ."

gall. Heb. rosh, a poisonous herb.

gall and wormwood. Poison and bitterness—the consequences of idolatry. The sinner is here pictured as a bitter root bearing deadly fruit, destroying the life of a nation.

to Jacob. 13. Neither with you only do I make this covenant and this oath; 14. but with him that standeth here with us this day before the LORD our God, and also with him that is not here with us this day*iii: 15. (for ye know how we dwelt in the land of Egypt; and how we came through the midst of the nations through which ye passed; 16. and ye have seen their abominations, and their idols, wood and stone, silver and gold, which were among them:) 17. lest there should be among you man, or woman, or family, or tribe, whose heart turneth away this day from the LORD our God, to go to serve the gods of those nations; lest there should be among you a root that beareth gall and wormwood; 18. and it come to pass, when he heareth the words of this oath, that he bless himself in his heart, saying, I shall have peace, though I walk in the stubbornness of mine heart, to destroy the moist

18. bless himself in his heart. Congratulate or delude himself. Because of God's oath to Israel, this man flatters himself that he is secure, no matter how recklessly he indulges in evil.

in the stubbornness of mine heart. "Though I persist in the strong wayward impulses of my heart;" cf. Jer. XXIII, 17.

to destroy the moist with the dry. Or, "to sweep away the well-watered soil with the dry"; a proverbial phrase, denoting a hurricane of destruction that would annihilate the community through the sinfulness of individual members here and there. As often in Scripture, the consequences of the idolater's self-congratulation are here represented ironically as his purpose. Others translate: "to add drunkenness to thirst"; i.e. to increase desire by indulgence; as indulgence increases desire, and desire in turn hastens to satisfy itself by indulgence (Maimonides, M. Lazarus).

as at this day. As we see it to be the case now; cf. II, 30.

28. the secret things . . . that we may do. "The secret things (of the sin) are for God to discover, but the judgment when revealed is before us for ever as a warning" (Moulton). In Jewish thought, this v. has been made into a great law of life. There are limits to what mortal beings can know. Certain things are in the hands of God alone, and must be left with Him. But there are other things which are "revealed," and it is with these alone that we and our children ought to concern ourselves. These "revealed" things are the words and ordinances of the Torah, and to these we and all successive generations must render willing obedience. Benjamin Szold pointed out that the accentuation likewise emphasises this truth. If we follow the accents (גרשיים), this v. reads: "The secret things belong to the LORD our God and the revealed things; for us and our children it is to carry out all the words of this Law."

This v. is one of the fifteen passages of the Bible in which words (לנו ולבנינו ע) are dotted. The most probable explanation of these dots is, that they were intended to call and served other gods, and worshipped them, gods whom they knew not, and whom he had not given unto them: 26. therefore the anger of the LORD was kindled against this land, to bring upon it all the curse that is written in this book: 27. and the LORD rooted them out of their land in anger, and in wrath, and in great indignation, and cast them into another land, as at this day. 28. The secret things belong unto the LORD our God: but the things that are revealed belong unto us and to our children for ever, that we may do all the words of this law.*iv(ii)

MOSES' THIRD DISCOURSE: CONCLUDED

1–10. OMNIPOTENCE OF REPENTANCE: RETURN FROM EXILE

A fuller restatement of the vital lesson taught in IV, 29–31. Punishment is not God's last word unto Israel. If Israel seeks God, Israel will find mercy at the hands of the LORD, and be brought back to the Land of his fathers.

1. and thou shalt call them to mind. Better, then shalt thou bethink thyself (Hirsch, AJ). This brings the consoling prediction that Israel's woes and tribulations would lead to Israel's betterment (Hirsch).

2 הִדִּיחֲךָ יְהוָה אֱלֹהֶיךָ שָׁמָּה׃ וְשַׁבְתָּ עַד־יְהוָה אֱלֹהֶיךָ

2. shalt return. Israel's sufferings would educate him to a higher and holier standard of conduct. He would take to heart the hard lessons taught him by his exile, and would return in sincere repentance (תשובה) to God.

3. God will turn thy captivity. lit. "God will turn again thy turning"; i.e. He will change thy fortune, restore thee to thy former happy state (Luzzatto, Ewald). The Talmud renders it, "And the LORD thy God will return with thy captivity." When Israel was in exile, God was, so to speak, in exile along with him. The Divine Cause which it is Israel's mission to champion was in eclipse. Israel's return from exile meant God's return along with him; see p. 552.

4–6. Though the Israelites be scattered to the four winds of heaven, yet will God reunite them in the Land of the Fathers, and work in Israel a change of heart.

4. outcasts. lit. "those dispersed."

6. open thy heart. So that it be no longer closed up, impenetrable, and unreceptive of spiritual teaching. God would help Israel to fulfil his ideal of duty. The RV has

mand thee this day, thou and thy children,

tivity, and have compassion upon thee, and will return and gather thee from all the peoples, whither the LORD thy God hath scattered thee. 4. If any of thine outcasts be in the uttermost parts of heaven, from thence will the LORD thy God gather thee, and from thence will he fetch thee:

land which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it; and he will do thee good, and multiply thee above thy fathers. 6 And the LORD thy God will open thine heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love the LORD thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, that thou mayest live.*v(iii) 7. And the LORD thy God will put all these curses upon thine enemies, and on them that hate thee, which persecuted thee.

the LORD, and do all his commandments which

11–14. The Nature of God's Commandment

Israel should find it easy to return to God. For God's commandment is not too hard nor distant; but nigh, clear, and practicable. Sheer life and death, good and evil, are set before Israel. Obedience means blessing; disobedience, destruction. Choose life, and dwell in the Promised Land.

11. this commandment. In the collective sense, meaning all the laws repeatedly spoken of in Deuteronomy.

too hard. Or, "too wonderful," to understand and beyond one's power to do; nothing abstruse or esoteric, like the heathen mysteries (Hirsch).

neither is it far off. Out of reach, out of ken, far removed from the sphere of ordinary life.

12. it is not in heaven. It is not something inaccessible or supernatural, making it necessary for a man to scale the heights of heaven to find it, and bring it down to earth!

13. beyond the sea. In some distant land, among strange peoples.

I command thee this day. 9. And the LORD thy God will make thee plenteous in all the work of thine hand, in the fruit of thy body, and in the fruit of thy cattle, and in the fruit of thy ground, for good: for the LORD will again rejoice over thee for good, as he rejoiced over thy fathers:
10. if thou shalt obey the voice of the LORD
thy God, to keep his commandments and his statutes which are written in this book of the law; if thou turn unto the LORD thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul.*vi

11. For this commandment which I command thee this day, it is not too hard for thee, neither is it far off. 12. It is not in heaven, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go up for us to heaven, and bring it unto us, and make us to hear it, that we may do it? 13. Neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go over the sea for us, and bring it unto us, and make us to hear it, that we may do it? 14. But the word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth, and in

14. the word is very nigh. The word of God is on the lips of fathers and children, teachers and taught. Man can carry the Torah, unlike the Sanctuary, everywhere with him. "When thou walkest, it shall lead thee; when thou liest down, it shall watch over thee; and when thou awakest, it shall talk with thee" (Prov. VI, 22). R. Jose the son of Kisma applied those words to the Torah, thus: when thou walkest, it shall lead thee—in this world; when thou liest down, it shall watch over thee—in the grave; and when thou wakest, it shall talk with thee—in the world to come.

that thou mayest do it. Moses does not say it is easy, "but more justly and finely, that it carries with it the conscience and provocation to its fulfilment by man" (G. A. Smith).

15–20. PERORATION TO THE DISCOURSES OF DEUTERONOMY

A final reminder, as in XI, 26, that two ways lie before them, one leading to life and good, the other to death and evil. The choice lies in their own hands. Only if they choose wisely will they enjoy long life and prosperity upon the land which they were about to inherit.

18. denounce. Old English for "announce," "declare."

See, I have set before thee this day life and good, and death and evil; 16. in that I command thee this day to love the LORD thy God, to walk in his ways, and to keep his commandments and his statutes and his judgements, that thou mayest live and multiply, and that the LORD thy God may bless thee in the land whither thou goest in to possess it. 17. But if thine heart turn away, and thou wilt not hear, but shalt be drawn away, and worship other gods, and serve them;*m
18. I denounce unto you this day, that ye shall surely perish; ye shall not prolong your days upon the land, whither thou passest over Jordan to go in to possess it. 19. I call heaven and earth to witness against you this day, that I have set before thee life and death, the blessing and the curse: therefore choose life, that thou

therefore choose life. Jewish ethics is rooted in the doctrine of human responsibility, that is, freedom of the will. "All is in the hands of God, except the fear of God," is an undisputed maxim of the Rabbis. And "to subject our will to the will of our Father in Heaven" is the great purpose of man's life on earth. Josephus states that the doctrine of Freewill was maintained by the Pharisees both against the Sadducees who attributed everything to chance, and the Essenes who ascribed all the actions of man to predestination and Divine Providence. "Freewill is granted to every man. If he desires to incline towards the good way, and be righteous, he has the power to do so; and if he desires to incline towards the unrighteous way, and be a wicked man, he has also the power to do so. Since this power of doing good or evil is in our own hands, and since all the wicked deeds which we have committed have been committed with our full consciousness, it befits us to turn in penitence and forsake our evil deeds; the power of doing so being still in our hands. Now this matter is a very important principle; nay, it is the pillar of the Law and of the commandments" (Maimonides).

We are free agents in so far as our choice between good and evil is concerned. This is an undeniable fact of human nature; but it is an equally undeniable fact that the sphere in which that choice is exercised is limited for us by heredity and environment. As the earth follows the sun in its vast sweep through heavenly space, and yet at the same time daily revolves on its axis, even so man, in the midst of the larger national and cultural whole of which he is a part, ever revolves in his own orbit. His sphere of individual conduct is largely of man's own making. It depends upon him alone whether his life be a cosmos—order, law, unity ruling in it; or whether it be chaos—desolate and void, and darkness for evermore hovering over it. Thus, in the moral universe man ever remains his own master. Though man cannot always even half control his destiny, God has given the reins of man's conduct altogether into his hands. See Exod. xx, 11, Exodus, p. 219.

20. to love the LORD thy God. Note the three ascending stages in the godly life; viz. 1) to love God; 2) to obey God; 3) and to cleave unto God.

for that is thy life. To love God, to obey Him, to cleave to Him, is to have life and length of days. Ibn Ezra translates, with RV Text, "for he is thy life," and interprets the phrase in a mystical sense as, "God is our life."

mayest live, thou and thy seed: 20. to love the LORD thy God, to obey his voice, and to cleave unto him: for that is thy life, and the length of thy days: that thou mayest dwell in the land which the LORD sware unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give them.

E. THE LAST DAYS OF MOSES

CHAPTERS XXXI–XXXIV

The remainder of the Book deals with the close of Moses' life, and incorporates his Farewell Song and Blessing which recapitulate and enshrine in poetry his message unto Israel. One other Song of Moses, Psalm xc, "the Prayer of Moses the Man of God," may likewise have been the product of the latest period of the Lawgiver's life. It is a meditation on the lot of humanity, and contrasts the fleeting generations of man with the mountains at whose feet the Israelites wandered, and with the eternity of Him who existed before ever those mountains were brought forth. Stanley speaks of it as "the funeral hymn of the world"; and in Watts' noble version it has become a cherished spiritual possession of the English-speaking race:—

"O God, our help in ages past,
Our hope for years to come,
Our shelter from the stormy blast,
And our eternal home.

Before the hills in order stood,
Or earth received her frame,
From everlasting Thou art God,
To endless years the same.

A thousand ages in Thy sight
Are like an evening gone;
Short as the watch that ends the night
Before the rising sun."

1–8. Appointment of Joshua

Moses announces the approaching close of his leadership and the appointment of his successor. Though he speaks of his failing frame, none but words of strength and courage are on his lips as he installs Joshua in his place.

2. go out and come in. Though, when he died, his eye had not become dim nor had his natural strength abated, he could no longer attend to the activities of public life.

and the Lord hath said unto me. See on III, 27. This is referred to five times by Moses, and comes again and again as a pathetic break in the majesty of his periods. It forms a most important thread of connection through the different parts of the book (Moulton).

3. he will go over. You need have no fear that my impending death will weaken you. Joshua will lead you in warfare under Divine guidance.

5. do unto them. See VII, 1f; XX, 16f.

6. not fail thee. See on IV, 31.

7. in the sight of all Israel. So that Joshua's authority might not henceforth be questioned. Moses now repeats before all Israel the words he had formerly spoken to Joshua alone; III, 28.

9–13. Public Reading of the Torah

Moses having committed the Torah to writing, delivers it into the hands of the priests and elders—the religious and secular heads of the nation—and enjoins upon them to have it read periodically to the assembled people. Religion in Judaism was not to be the concern of the priests only, who are to share its truths with a small esoteric circle of Jordan. 3. The LORD thy God, he will go over before thee; he will destroy these nations from before thee, and thou shalt possess them: and Joshua, he shall go over before thee, as the LORD hath spoken.*ii 4. And the LORD shall do unto them as he did to Sihon and to Og, the kings of the Amorites, and unto their land; whom he destroyed. 5. And the LORD shall deliver them up before you, and ye shall do unto them according unto all the commandment which I have commanded you. 6. Be strong and of a good courage, fear not, nor be affrighted at them: for the LORD thy God, he it is that doth go with thee; he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee.*iii (v) 7. And Moses called unto Joshua, and said unto him in the sight of all Israel, Be strong and of a good courage: for thou shalt go with this people into the land which the LORD hath sworn unto their fathers to give them; and thou shalt cause them to inherit it. 8. And the LORD, he it is that doth go before thee; he will be with thee, he will not fail thee, neither forsake thee: fear not, neither be dismayed.

9. And Moses wrote this law, and delivered it unto the priests the sons of Levi, which bare the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and unto political leaders. The priests are merely its guardians and teachers, and the whole body of religious truth is intended to be the everlasting possession of the entire people. This commandment strikes the keynote of the spiritual democracy established by Moses. The Torah is the heritage of the congregation of Jacob; XXXIII, 4.

10. in the set time of the year of release. According to Tradition, the reference here is to the "Sabbatical year," called in xv, 1 "the year of release." The Feast of Tabernacles referred to is that immediately following the conclusion of the Sabbatical year. And there seems to be a special reason why that period was chosen for this public reading of the Law. It was in order to testify that, although there had been neither sowing nor reaping during that year, the Israelites were nevertheless sustained by the mercies of God, to Whose word they were resolved ever to remain loyal, whether in prosperity or adversity (Hoffmann).

11. thou shalt read. This is addressed to the nation, who delegates the performance of this duty to its representatives (Hirsch). In the days of Josephus, it was done by the High Priest. An early Mishnah declares it to be the function of the King.

12. men and the women and the little ones. "The men were assembled," says Rashi, quoting the Talmud, "to learn"; the women, "to hear"; the little ones, "to cause recompense to those who bring them." is come to appear before the LORD thy God in the place which he shall choose, thou shalt read this law before all Israel in their hearing. 12. Assemble the people, the men and the women

they may learn, and fear the LORD your God,

None realized more clearly than the Rabbis the spiritual power that comes from the mouth of babes and sucklings (Psalm VIII, 3). "The moral universe rests upon the breath of school children," is one of their deep sayings.

hear . . . learn . . . observe. Merely "to hear" the Torah read once every seven years in a public assembly would not be sufficient. It was to be "learnt"; i.e., made an object of study. Further, the Torah must be made the rule of life, and its teachings "observed."

13. and that their children . . . may hear, and learn. The "children" are identical with "the little ones" in the preceding verse. Their presence in such an assembly would mean their initiation into the knowledge of the Torah, and of the duties which it prescribes. Here we have another instance of the vital importance of religious education, so characteristic of the Book of the Farewell Orations of the Lawgiver. The Rabbis worked in the spirit of the Lawgiver when they determined to make the Torah the Book of the People by translating it into the vernacular, and expounding it for the masses. They went far beyond the requirement of reading to the people a portion of Deuteronomy every seven years. They divided the Torah into 156 portions, and had a portion read on each Sabbath in the Synagogue, so as to cover the whole Torah in three years. In the large and influential Jewry of Babylon, the custom prevailed of completing the whole of the Torah in the course of one year; and this eventually became the rule throughout the Diaspora. An appropriate selection from the Prophets—the Haftorah—early accompanied the Pentateuchal lesson on Sabbaths, Festivals and Fasts.

peared in the Tent in a pillar of cloud: and the pillar of cloud stood over the door of the

this people will rise up, and go astray after the strange gods of the land, whither they go to be among them, and will forsake me, and break my covenant which I have made with them. 17. Then my anger shall be kindled against them in that day, and I will forsake them, and I will hide my face from them, and they shall be devoured, and many evils and troubles shall come upon them; so that they will say in that day, Are not these evils come

v. 21. פתח בס״פ

19. write ye this song for you. The Song in the following chapter. Moses and Joshua were both to write it. According to Ibn Ezra, this command is addressed to each Israelite. The Rabbis deduced from this the commendation to each Israelite that he write for himself a copy of the Torah. In recent centuries, the custom has grown up for the sopher (scribe) who completes the writing of a Scroll to trace the final sentences of the Torah in outline merely. At the festive celebration called the Siyyum, each letter in those sentences is filled in by a different man, who thereby symbolically takes part in the writing of a Sacred Scroll.

and despise me. Or, "and provoke me to anger" (Targum, Rashi).

21. as a witness. For God. Whenever the people will murmur and ask, "Why has all this evil befallen us?"

18. And I will surely hide my face in that day for all the evil which they shall have wrought, in that they are turned unto other gods. 19. Now therefore write ye this song for you, and teach thou it the children of Israel: put it in their mouths, that this song may be a witness for me against the children of Israel.*vi (vii) 20.
For when I shall have brought them into the land which I sware unto their fathers, flowing with milk and honey; and they shall have eaten and filled themselves, and waxen fat; then will they turn unto other gods, and serve them,
and despise me, and break my covenant. 21.
And it shall come to pass, when many evils and troubles are come upon them, that this song shall testify before them as a witness; for it shall not be forgotten out of the mouths of their seed: for I know their imagination which they go about, even now, before I have brought them into the land which I sware. 22. So Moses wrote this song the same day, and taught it the children of Israel. 23. And he gave Joshua

(Chapter XXXII)

2) The Song of Moses

XXXII, 1–44

Moses began his ministry at the Red Sea with a song of praise and triumph, and he ends his life of service to God and Israel with another hymn of joy on the banks of Jordan, and in view of the Promised possession. Both songs are an anticipation of the glorious future beyond the wilderness-life. The majestic Farewell Song, distinguished by fire, force and the sweep of its rhetoric, is a didactic ode. Moses takes his stand in the spirit at a point of time long subsequent to his own death: he makes a retrospective survey of Israel's history, and develops the lessons deducible from it. The result is a vindication of the ways of God in His relations to Israel. The Divine lovingkindness and unchanging faithfulness are contrasted with Israel's faithlessness and ingratitude. God is the loving father, whereas Israel is the wayward, disobedient child. The successive disasters which would befall Israel are a just retribution for his senseless and ungrateful conduct. But although God appeared to have withdrawn Himself from Israel, let not the heathen exult and say that Israel lies helpless and crushed. God would in the end intervene for Israel, and the Lawgiver calls upon the nations to rejoice in the salvation of the People of God.

And let the earth hear the words of my mouth:

My speech shall distil as the dew;
As the small rain upon the tender grass,
And as the showers upon the herb:
3. For I will proclaim the name of the Lord:
Ascribe ye greatness unto our God.

1–3. Appeal to Universe for Attention

1. give ear, ye heavens, and I will speak. He appeals to heaven and earth as eternal witnesses of the Divine truths he is about to declare; see xxx, 19; Isa. i, 2.

2. doctrine. Better, teaching, message or instruction; cf. Prov. iv, 2. The message conveyed by the Song shall, like rain and dew falling on plants, penetrate to the hearts of the Israelites; refresh, stimulate and give birth to a new spiritual life. The Song, therefore, is not only one of warning, but of comfort also, to awaken new hope in a suffering Israel.

small rain. The tender grass needs the small drops for its revival. Even so is the Divine teaching tempered to meet the wants of the weak and the young.

showers upon the herb. The grown-up grass needs the strong forceful showers for its fructification.

"Nine times in the course of this single hymn is repeated this most expressive figure, taken from the granite crags of Sinai, and carried thence through psalms and hymns of all nations, like one of the huge fragments which it represents, to regions as remote in aspect as in distance from its original birthplace" (Stanley). It denotes the Divine unchangeableness and its refuge for men. Ages pass away, but the rock remains a place of safety in time of storm and flood. 5. they have . . . blemish. Better, Is corruption His? No! His children—it is their blemish (Maimonides, AJ). The Heb. Text is very difficult, and the Ancient Versions render little help. M. Friedländer took מומם as a parallel form to חנם, ריקם, with the meaning of "fault-laden": "Is corruption His? No, O ye His fault-laden children, ye perverse and crooked generation."

The sinning of Israel is not a blemish upon the goodness of God. He gave them a Law which would render them happy, but they chose sin and its subsequent sorrows (Leeser).

THE HALLOWING OF HISTORY

I

Israel is the author of the idea of History. The Egyptians and Babylonians left behind them annals of events, chronicles of dynasties, and boastful inscriptions of victories; but nothing that can be dignified by the name of historical writing. It is only in Israel that the whole human scene on earth was conceived as a unity, from its very beginning to the end of time. Thus Scripture does not begin with the Exodus, or even with the Call of Abraham, but with the Creation of the world and the birth of man. We are, of course, dogmatically told that "the writing of history begins, like so many other things, with the Greeks." But this is part of the Hellenic myth dominant in academic quarters. The Greeks could not rise to the concept of universal History without the belief in the unity of mankind; a conception they only learned centuries later through the Septuagint Version of the Hebrew Scriptures. Furthermore, the universe to the Greeks was not the creation of one supreme Mind, but the confused inter-play of blind natural forces going on forever in a vain, endless recurrence, leading nowhither. Hence, they could not see any higher meaning in the story of man. Such also has ever been the opinion of those who share the Greek view of God and the universe, as did the free-thinkers of the eighteenth century. To them, "history is little more than a register of the crimes, follies and misfortunes of mankind" (Gibbon). Not so the Teachers in Israel. They conceived of God as a Moral Power, and saw Him at work in the world. They traced the line of Divine action in the lives of men and

7. Remember the days of old,
Consider the years of many generations:
Ask thy father, and he will shew thee;
Thine elders, and they will tell thee.

nations. They saw in history a continuous revelation of Divine thought and purpose across the abyss of time. In clarion tones they proclaimed that Right was irresistible; and that what ought to be must be, and will be. They taught men to see the vision of "the kingdom of God"—human society based on righteousness—as the Messianic goal of history. Schiller's profound utterance, Die Weltgeschichte ist das Weltgericht ("History is one long Day of Judgment"), which would have been unintelligible to a Greek or Roman, is but a striking epitome of Hebrew thought. And no view of the course of history is worth anything that is not essentially one with the Biblical position. Froude has eloquently restated it in the noble words: "History is a voice forever sounding across the centuries the laws of right and wrong. Opinions alter, manners change, creeds rise and fall, but the moral law is written on the tablets of eternity. For every false word or unrighteous deed, for cruelty and oppression, for lust or vanity, the price has to be paid at last; not always by the chief offenders, but paid by some one. Justice and truth alone endure and live."

II

Israel, moreover, was the first to conceive of history as a guide to the generations of men, as is done throughout Deuteronomy, and to grasp its vital importance in the education of the individual as of the human group. A recent historian of British civilisation has well put it: "The past does not die; so long as spiritual continuity is maintained, the present life of a community is its whole accumulated past; and only by understanding that past can it understand itself or determine its future. A people, unconscious of its history, is like a man smitten with loss of memory, who wanders aimlessly, till he comes to grief" (Wingfield-Stratford). It is history that preserves men and nations

8 בְּהַנְחֵל עֶלְיוֹן גּוֹיִם בְּהַפְרִידוֹ בְּנֵי אָדָם
יַצֵּב גְּבֻלֹת עַמִּים לְמִסְפַּר בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל׃

from loss of memory, from loss of spiritual identity. "Man is made man by history. The Jew is what he is by the history of his fathers, and he would be losing his better self were he to lose hold of his past history" (J. Jacobs).

The field of Jewish history is immeasurably vast; the Jew is met with everywhere, and his story opens very near the beginning of human civilisation. And that story has, as no other, left its mark on the souls of men. "The first part of Jewish history, the Biblical part, is a source from which, for many centuries, millions of human beings have derived instruction, solace, and inspiration. Its heroes have long ago become types, incarnations, of great ideals. The events it relates serve as living ethical formulae. But a time will come—perhaps it is not very far off—when the second half of Jewish history, that people's life after the Biblical period, will be accorded the same treatment. The thousand years' martyrdom of the Jewish People, its unbroken pilgrimage, its tragic fate, its teachers of religion, its martyrs, philosophers, champions—this whole epic will, in days to come, sink deep into the memory of men. It will speak to the heart and conscience of men, and secure respect for the silvery hair of the Jewish People" (Dubnow).

III

Even a brief history of Jewish history, i.e. a critical estimate of Jewish historians, ancient, medieval and modern —cannot here be attempted. A few words might, however, be added on the task of the Jewish historian at the present day.

His primary aim should be neither to lament the past, nor to denounce, or to idealise it; but to understand it. He is, therefore, no longer to confine himself to the martyrdoms of the Jewish People, as the medieval chroniclers did; or even exclusively to the strivings of the Jewish spirit in the world of thought—which so largely claimed the attention of Graetz. Both the story of the martyrdoms and the spiritual strivings are, of course, basic. But, in addition, the historian to-day must seek to explain the position of the Jews in the national history of the countries where they dwelt. This calls, on the one hand, for a detailed study of Jewish communities—their institutions, cultural values, and religious endeavour; and, on the other hand, for a knowledge of the Jew's social, economic, and political relations to the general population. In this way alone can we in time hope to understand the "cross-fertilisation" of Jewish and non-Jewish ideas and influences in literature, folklore and life. The truth will then dawn upon the student that Judaism, in addition to being a body of doctrine and faith, a way of life and salvation, is also a civilisation, a civilisation that has made distinct contributions in every sphere of human life, human thought, and human achievement.

"The history of Israel is the great living proof of the working of Divine Providence in the affairs of the world. Alone among the nations, Israel has shared in all great movements since mankind became conscious of their destinies. If there is no Divine purpose in the long travail of Israel, it is vain to seek for any such purpose in man's life. In the reflected light of that purpose, each Jew should lead his life with an added dignity" (J. Jacobs).

8–14. The Answer of the Fathers and Elders

When God first allotted the nations a place and a heritage, as described in Gen. x and xi, He had respect to the special necessities of the Israelites by reserving for them an inheritance proportioned to their numbers.

9. for the LORD's portion is his people. Separated from the heathen, Israel belonged to God in a more intimate sense than any other ethnic group.

10. he found him in a desert land. This v. and those immediately following depict God's fatherly care of Israel. Israel is represented as an abandoned, starving child left to die in a wilderness (cf. Ezekiel XVI, 3–6). God finds and rescues him. Israel's history begins with the forty years' march through the desert—where he must have perished, had not God supplied the food and the necessary protection.

cared for him. Or, " gave him understanding " (Onkelos, Rashi) ; Israel's spiritual wants were cared for, inasmuch as he received the Law in that desert.

the apple of his eye. The pupil of his eye ; the Heb. phrase is equivalent to the English, " as his very life."

11. as an eagle. God's loving care for Israel is likened to the tender affection that is shown by the eagle towards its young when it teaches them to fly.

stirreth up her nest. When the time comes for the young to leave the nest, the mother-bird does not rouse them suddenly, but strikes her wings against the surrounding branches. Having thus gently awakened them, she " stirs up " the nest, and allures them to imitate her fluttering in flight.

9. For the LORD's portion is his people;
Jacob is the lot of his inheritance.
10. He found him in a desert land,
And in the waste howling wilderness;
He compassed him about, he cared for him,
He kept him as the apple of his eye:
11. As an eagle that stirreth up her nest,
That fluttereth over her young,
Spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them,
beareth them on her pinions:
12. The LORD alone did lead him,
And there was no strange God with him.*iii
13. He made him ride on the high places of the earth,
And he did eat the increase of the field;

fluttereth over her young. She hovers over them in loving solicitude, and has her wings in readiness to catch them, should they become exhausted.

spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them. If the young are too weak or too timid to fly, the eagle takes them upon her outspread wings and carries them. This is done to protect, as well as to aid, them. The arrow shot by the hunter must first penetrate the body of the mother-bird, before it can touch the young. In all this, we have a picture of the fostering care, the discipline and training to independence, that Israel received at the Divine hands in the initial stages of his world-historic career.

13-14. Israel would enjoy all the luxuries of a pastoral people in abundance.

13. ride on the high places. A figure of speech denoting the triumphant and undisputed possession of the land, even of its high mountain fastnesses, which the Prophet-poet foresees as an accomplished fact.

and he made him to suck honey . . . rock. Over and above the fruitful increase of the field, even from the rocks He had given them honey, and the flinty soil produced the olive tree. Palestine is by its flora (it has 3,000 species of flowers), and by its innumerable caves and fissures of the dry limestone rocks, well suited to honey-culture. "Honey might literally be found oozing out from among the rocks" (Driver).

15–18. Israel's Ingratitude

15. Jeshurun. This title of honour for Israel is formed from the root ישר, "to be righteous," and designates Israel under its ideal character as "the Upright One." It is used here ironically, as a rebuke to Israel's ingratitude and perfidy.

18. of the Rock that begat thee . . . gave thee birth. A figure as bold as it is beautiful. God is represented as a Father, to whom Israel owed its existence as a people; and, at the same time, as a Mother, travailing with her infant, and forever watching over it with tender affection.

19–25. The Merited Punishment

To gods whom they knew not,
To new gods that came up of late,
Whom your fathers dreaded not.

And hast forgotten God that gave thee birth.*iv
19. And the LORD saw it, and abhorred them, Because of the provocation of his sons and his daughters.
20. And he said, I will hide my face from them,
I will see what their end shall be:
For they are a very froward generation,
Children in whom is no faith.
21. They have moved me to jealousy with that They have provoked me to anger with their

And I will move them to jealousy with those

I will provoke them to anger with a foolish not a people. Measure for measure. Just as they had angered God by adopting a no-god, so would God anger them by bringing against them a no-people; i.e. a horde of barbarians, that did not deserve to be called a "people."

a foolish nation. Ignorant and, hence, barbarous and inhuman in its habits and methods (Ibn Ezra). And this people will win successes over Israel!

26–33. The Stay of God's Vengeance

God's resolve on Israel's annihilation was stayed by the consideration of the adversaries' taunts. Nothing could save Israel, but God's respect for His own Name.

22. For a fire is kindled in mine anger,
And burneth unto the lowest pit,
And devoureth the earth with her increase.
And setteth on fire the foundations of the mountains.

And bitter destruction;
And the teeth of beasts will I send upon them,
With the poison of crawling things of the dust.

It shall destroy both young man and virgin,

31. for their rock is not as our Rock. "All this the heathens have understood; viz., that God had delivered Israel into their hands and that, therefore, the victory belonged neither to them nor to their gods; as hitherto their gods were powerless against Israel's Rock" (Rashi).

32. the vine of Sodom. Neither is the victory over Israel due to God's approval of the deeds and spirit of the heathens. They are corrupt in root and fruit. The nations are compared to a vine whose stock is derived from Sodom and Gomorrah; hence, tainted by the corruption of which these cities are a type. Ancient writers (Strabo, Pliny, Tacitus and Josephus) speak of apples of Sodom that "have

34. is not this laid up in store with me. Such corruption and moral poison as is the life and example of the heathens could not remain forever unpunished. God would, therefore, interpose on His people's behalf. The punishment to be meted out to Israel's enemies has been duly written down and sealed in the Divine archives.

43. Conclusion of the Song

43. rejoice, O ye nations, with his people. Or, " sing aloud, O ye nations, of his people." The Poet calls upon the nations to join Israel in its song of deliverance. That deliverance has been so great that even the heathen, seeing it, must rejoice at it and celebrate it in song. " They will see His justice and His faithfulness and will gain new confidence in the stability and moral character of the forces which rule the world " (Harper).

his adversaries. They alone who had brought Israel to the brink of destruction are threatened with vengeance, and not the heathen in general who are invited to rejoice with Israel.

and will make expiation for his land, for his people. Or, " and doth make expiation for the land of His people " (AJ). The expiation is for the massacred innocent Israelites whose blood was in the land of Israel, and for other defilements wrought either by enemies or, earlier by back-sliding Israelites on the soil of the Promised Land.

44. Hoshea the son of Nun. Hoshea, the original name of Joshua, before he came into prominence as Moses' lieutenant and future successor (Num. XIII, 16), was still the name by which he was popularly known. "Why is Joshua here called Hoshea? It is to show us his modesty. Although he was now about to become the Divinely-appointed Leader of Israel, he still felt himself the same humble youth that he was in the days of his obscurity" (Sifri).

in the midst of the children of Israel. It seems that these words are intended to be emphatic. Moses had made Pharaoh acknowledge the greatness of God; the princes of Edom and mighty men of Moab trembled at this achievement (Exod. xv)—but all this was among those outside Israel. In Israel itself, both princes and masses remained unimpressed. Moses' work, therefore, was in this sense not a success—"ye sanctified me not in the midst of the children of Israel;" see on Lev. xxii, 32.

3) The Blessing of Moses

Chapter XXXIII

The Song opened the final day of Deuteronomy, and in the course of that day the long-expected summons comes. " The whole people understand the mysterious doom, and line the route by which Moses sets out on the journey from which there will be no return. Like a father laying his hands from a death-bed on the heads of his children, the departing Leader blesses the several tribes, as he passes along ; then turning to behold the whole multitude for the last time, Moses lifts his hands in general blessing :

' There is none like unto God, O Jeshurun,
Who rideth upon the heaven for thy help,
And in his excellency on the skies.
The eternal God is thy dwelling place,
And underneath are the everlasting arms.'

Simple, bare prose tells the rest : the solitary ascent into the mount, the long gaze over the Land of Promise, the death. But no wealth of poetic imagination could have made a close for Deuteronomy more harmonious with the body of the book. The life of the lonely Leader has passed out into solitude : and ' no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day ' " (Moulton).

CHAPTER XXXIII

33 1. And this is the blessing, wherewith Moses the man of God blessed the children of Israel before his death. 2. And he said,

1. and this is the blessing. This Blessing is a complement as well as a counterpart to the Song in the preceding chapter. Whereas the Song is an admonition, depicting the calamities that were to befall a wayward and disloyal Israel, here is all-blessing, foreshadowing a bright and happy destiny. As to form and contents, it is modelled on the Blessing of Jacob; Gen. XLIX.

the man of God. Moses is given this title in Josh. XIV, 6, and in the heading of Psalm XC, "A Prayer of Moses the Man of God." The title is sometimes applied to the Prophets; e.g., I Sam. IX, 6.

before his death. Just prior to his death, probably the very day on which he died; cf. Gen. XXVII, 7.

2-5. INTRODUCTION

God, revealing Himself majestically unto His people in the desert, gave them a Law through Moses, and united the tribes with God as their king. A similar opening is found in Judges V, Habakkuk III, and Psalm LXVIII.

The happiness and felicity of the tribes of Israel is all traced back to the Divine Revelation which God bestowed upon His people, as He came with them through the wilderness.

לָמוֹ הוֹפִיעַ מֵהַר פָּארָן וְאָתָה מֵרִבְבֹת קֹדֶשׁ מִימִינוֹ אֵשְׁדָּת
3 לָמוֹ׃ אַף חֹבֵב עַמִּים כָּל־קְדֹשָׁיו בְּיָדֶךָ וְהֵם תֻּכּוּ לְרַגְלֶךָ
4 יִשָּׂא מִדַּבְּרֹתֶיךָ׃ תּוֹרָה צִוָּה־לָנוּ מֹשֶׁה מוֹרָשָׁה קְהִלַּת

v. 2. תרין מילין קרי

2. the LORD came from Sinai. The mountain of Revelation, to make His abode in Israel's midst. Sinai was the starting-point in the manifestation of the Divine glory to Israel.

and rose. A metaphor of sunrise. God had "dawned" on them; had "risen" for them, and had shed forth the light of His Law upon Israel, so that henceforth they walked in His light.

from Seir. The hill-country of Edom, to the east of Sinai.

mount Paran. Perhaps the mountain-range forming the southern boundary of Canaan. The Divine Presence journeyed, as it were, with Israel from Sinai, through Seir, through Paran, and then finally through the desert; aiding and guarding them, even until they became established in the good inheritance Divinely promised to the Fathers.

of holy ones. As in Psalm LXVIII, 18, God is here poetically depicted as coming forth from the angelic hosts that surround His throne, in order to manifest Himself to His people.

a fiery law. A Law given out of the midst of the fire (Deut. v, 19-23, Targum); "a Law of fire" (Mendelssohn, Hirsch). This translation takes the Heb. אש דת, with the Massoretes, as two words. The second of these words, דת "Law," however, occurs only in the latest books of Scripture. Many translators, therefore, follow the Kethib and translate the phrase, "at his right hand were streams for them."

3. he loveth the peoples. i.e., the tribes of Israel; cf. Gen. XXVIII, 3. If the word "peoples" is taken literally, the meaning is that, although the Divine Law was given to Israel alone, God's love embraces all peoples. "The LORD is good to all; and his tender mercies are over all His works" (Ps. CXLV, 9.)

The LORD came from Sinai,
And rose from Seir unto them;
He shined forth from mount Paran,
And he came from the ten thousands of holy ones:
At his right hand was a fiery law unto them.
3. Yea, he loveth the peoples;
All their saints are in thy hand:
And they sat down at thy feet;
Every one received thy words.
4. Moses commanded us a law,
An inheritance for the assembly of Jacob.

their saints. Either of the "tribes," or of the peoples. If the latter, then the good and pious of all nations are meant, as well as of Israel. RV has "his saints;" i.e. Israel's Saints.

they sat down at thy feet. Like pupils in the presence of the master, ready to receive instruction.

received thy words. The next v. defines "thy words," i.e., "the Law which Moses commanded us, as an inheritance of the congregation of Jacob."

4. inheritance. Better, heritage; Heb. מורשה, not ירושה, "inheritance." The latter may be spent by the heir at his discretion. A מורשה, however, is an entailed estate, inalienable, and must remain in the family to be handed on from father to son undiminished. Such is the Torah unto Israel. It is transmitted from age to age and generation to generation, so that it is never forgotten.

for the assembly of Jacob. Better, of the congregation of Jacob. The words of this verse have deservedly become a national motto in Israel. They form part of the little child's Morning Prayer; see Authorised Prayer Book, p. 328.

all the tribes of Israel together. In the presence of the whole People gathered together to enter into the covenant at Sinai.

The above section, especially v. 1-3, is among the most difficult passages in Scripture. The different translations are, therefore, both numerous and uncertain. In a popular commentary it is not possible to take note of them all.

6-25. THE BLESSINGS OF THE TRIBES

6. Reuben

6. let Reuben live. The Heb. idiom is equivalent to "long live Reuben," or, "God save Reuben" (as in I Kings I, 25).

and not die. Living in Transjordania, he was exposed to constant attacks from numerous enemies.

let not his men be few. Better, in that his men become few (AJ). Let not the death of Reuben take place through a diminution in his numbers. At the first census taken in the time of Moses, the number of Reubenites capable of bearing arms was 46,500 men (Num. I, 21). At the second, it had dwindled to 43,730 men (Num. XXVI, 7). In David's time much of their territory was conquered by the Moabites. Mesha, in the 9th century B.C.E., when describing his victories against the Eastern tribes, does not even mention the tribe of Reuben.

5. And he was king in Jeshurun,
When the heads of the people were gathered,
All the tribes of Israel together.
6. Let Reuben live, and not die;
And let not his men be few.
7. And this is the blessing of Judah: and he said,
Hear, LORD, the voice of Judah,
And bring him in unto his people:
With his hands he contended for them;
And thou shalt be an help against his adversaries.*ii

7. JUDAH

7. hear, LORD . . . unto his people. "Hear, O LORD, the prayer of Judah when he goeth forth to battle; and bring him back to his people in peace" (Onkelos). Judah was the first to undertake the conquest of the unconquered portion of Palestine; and for some time, his possessions were an enclave, surrounded by the Canaanites. Hence this prayer that he be united to the other tribes.

with his hands he contended for them. Better, his hands shall contend for him (AJ). He needs and deserves Divine help, as he will be fighting the fight of all Israel.

8-11. LEVI

We note the omission of Simeon, who is joined with Levi in Jacob's Blessing, Gen. XLIX, 5. The probable explanation is that Jacob had foretold that both Simeon and Levi should have their territories divided up among the other tribes. And as Simeon's possessions consisted of only 19 unconnected cities within the territory of Judah (Josh. XIX, 2-9), the tribe of Simeon was regarded as included in Judah.

In blessing Levi, Moses prays that the privilege of guarding the Urim and the Thummim may remain with Levi, who had proved his fidelity to the Divine cause in the Wilderness.

9. who said of his father . . . children. This describes in emphatic language the disinterested spirit in which the tribe of Levi discharges its office: the disregard of even the closest family ties, when they interfere with the performance of religious duties. Thus, the Levites slew every man his companion and every man his neighbour, as a punishment for their worship of the Golden Calf; Exod. XXXII, 27.

and keep thy covenant. See Mal. II, 5-7 ("My covenant was with him of life and peace. The law of truth was in his mouth, and unrighteousness was not found in his lips; he walked with me in peace and uprightness, and did turn away many from iniquity. For the priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law at his mouth").

10. thy judgements. Such being the Levites' record, they are worthy of having the prerogative of teaching Israel the precepts of God as laid down in the Torah, and designed for the maintenance of justice between man and man. The God of Israel "is distinguished from the gods of Israel's neighbours, and towers above them as the God in Whose name justice was administered, and of Whom it could be said that He was not known where the laws of honour and good

The Temple itself was just within the rocky border of Benjamin, whilst its courts were in Judah.

The twin tribe, Ephraim and Manasseh, receives the temporal blessings of fertility of soil and military prowess, accompanied by uninterrupted enjoyment of the Divine favour.

12. Of Benjamin he said, growth of the moons. "The produce of the months"; i.e., the fruit and vegetation of successive seasons.

The territory of Zebulun stretched from what is now known as Lake Tiberias to the Mediterranean, which fact gave it an active share in the sea-traffic. Jacob's blessing is, "Zebulun shall dwell at the beach of the sea, and he shall be for an haven of ships."

18. And of Zebulun he said,
Rejoice, Zebulun, in thy going out;
And, Issachar, in thy tents.

18b-19. Issachar

in thy tents. In the enjoyment of rest; in the quiet pursuit of a peaceful life, possibly an agricultural one. While Zebulun chose adventure and enterprise, Issachar preferred "a stay-at-home" existence. The Talmud interprets "tents" as homes for the study of the Law. In I Chron. XII, 32, the men of Issachar are said to have been the religious teachers in Israel. Scripture here links Zebulun, the merchant and man of action, with Issachar, the student, the man of spirit; as if to show how necessary it is for the welfare of society that these two types should always work in co-operation.

a ruler's portion. Or, "commander's portion," a district worthy of a martial leader. The meaning of this and the following line is very uncertain.

he came with the heads. He took his part in the conquest of Western Palestine.

he executed the justice of the LORD. He (Gad) fulfilled that which he had promised; viz., to cross the Jordan and assist the other tribes to dispossess their enemies (Num. XXXII, 31f). This is probably a case of the Perfect of certainty—the future action being viewed as past. In this way he did his duty in carrying out the righteous will and ordinances of God who had decreed that Israel should inherit the land of Canaan.

22. Dan

22. lion's whelp. In the Blessing of Jacob (Gen. XLIX, 17), Dan is compared to a serpent for mischievous subtlety. Here he is spoken of as a lion for agility, as a young lion leaping forth from the crevices and caves of the rocks of Bashan, a land celebrated for the size and strength of its cattle (Deut. XXXII, 14). Both similes refer to the nimbleness and adventurous spirit for which the tribe of Dan was celebrated. Samson was a Danite.

23. Naphtali

23. satisfied with favour. Satiated with good will. "Ancient and modern writers vie with one another in praising the soil and climate of the territory owned by Naphtali" (Driver).

possess thou the sea. The sea of Kinnereth; i.e., Lake Tiberias.

the south. On the west side of the sea of Kinnereth, Naphtali's territory was "so styled in contrast to the main possessions of the tribe which were further north" (Driver). Its soil was specially fruitful in the region of Huleh and on the shore of the sea. The "fruits of Kinnereth" are celebrated in the Talmud.

24-25. Asher

24. blessed be Asher above sons. An exposition of the meaning of the name Asher ("happy"). He was to be blessed "above sons"; i.e., to enjoy exceptional prosperity.

acceptable. Favoured of his brethren, so that they delight in his good fortune.

dip his foot in oil. A metaphor for great abundance. The olive tree was specially fruitful in the territory of Asher.

22. And of Dan he said,
Dan is a lion's whelp,
That leapeth forth from Bashan.
23. And of Naphtali he said,
O Naphtali, satisfied with favour,
And full with the blessing of the LORD:
Possess thou the sea and the south.
24. And of Asher he said,
Blessed be Asher above sons;
Let him be acceptable unto his brethren,
And let him dip his foot in oil.
25. Thy bars shall be iron and brass;
And as thy days, so shall thy strength be.
26. There is none like unto God, O Jeshurun,
Who rideth upon the heaven for thy help,
And in his excellency on the skies.*vi

25. thy bars shall be iron and brass. Asher's dwelling shall be impregnable. His territory being in the far north and also on the sea-coast, it needed to be strongly fortified.

26-29. EPILOGUE: GOD, THE ABIDING SOURCE OF ISRAEL'S SECURITY, PROSPERITY AND VICTORY

Like the introductory section, v. 2-6, the epilogue celebrates the felicity, material and spiritual, of the nation as a whole, through the goodness and protecting care of God.

26. there is none like unto God, O Jeshurun. "There is no God, but the God of Israel" (Onkelos).

"When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee; when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee" (Isa. XLIII, 2). Not only is God a dwelling-place for His people, He is their unfailing support. His everlasting arms, which do not grow weary, are ever bearing them up and sustaining them.

And thou shalt tread upon their high places.*vii that is the sword of thy excellency. God's protection of Israel is Israel's excellent and triumphant sword.

yield feigned obedience unto thee. The insincere homage rendered by the vanquished to the conqueror. AJ translates, "shall dwindle away before thee."

tread on their high places. See on XXXII, 13.

"With such golden words Moses takes leave of his people. Israel should have been a brave mountaineer people, if Moses' will had been fulfilled. The land lies apart, surrounded by mountains, seas and deserts—a Divinely blessed corner of the earth that, with industrious cultivation and the security that comes from unity, could have flourished wonderfully. To the north and south of Judea were the trade routes of the ancient world. By its very position alone, it could have become the happiest people of the world, if it had made use of its position and remained faithful to the spirit of its Laws" (Herder).

4) The Death of Moses

Chapter XXXIV

Before his eyes close for ever, Moses beholds from afar the Promised Land from the top of Pisgah, and dies there according to God's decree. His incomparable rank as a prophet and unique place in the history of Israel.

1. went up . . . Nebo. From that height he came down no more.

"Amidst the tears of the people, the women beating their breasts and the children giving way to uncontrolled wailing, he withdrew. At a certain point in his ascent he made a sign to the weeping multitude to advance no further, taking with him only the elders, the high priest Eleazar and the general Joshua. At the top of the mountain, he dismissed the elders, and then, as he was embracing Eleazar and Joshua, and still speaking to them, a cloud suddenly stood over him, and he vanished in a deep valley" (Josephus).

unto mount Nebo, to the top of Pisgah. "Pisgah" was the specific name for a series of mountain-ranges in the high plateau of Moab. In Deut. xxxii, 49, as well as in Num. xxvii, 12, these ranges are designated by the more general name of הר העברים, i.e., "the mountain of the regions beyond." Nebo was the special name of one of these mountain-ranges (cf. Num. xxi, 20).

Chapter XXXIV

unto mount Nebo, to the top of Pisgah, that is over against Jericho. And the Lord shewed him all the land of Gilead, unto Dan; 2. and all Naphtali, and the land of Ephraim and Manasseh, and all the land of Judah, unto the western sea;
3. and the South, and the Plain of the valley of sware unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, saying, I will give it unto thy seed: I have caused

In the clear air of Palestine, he saw the Land lying before him. From the top of Pisgah all Western Palestine is in sight—the undulating forests of Southern Gilead, the snow-clad top of Hermon, mounts Tabor and Gilboa, Ebal and Gerizim, the heights of Benjamin and Judah, the Mount of Olives, and Zion, Bethlehem and Hebron and Beersheba. Rashi remarks that Moses was given something more than a mere physical glimpse of the Holy Land. He was shown all the land of Israel as it then was in its prosperity, and as it would be in the days of its adversity. He was given a prophetic vision of the main episodes in the future history of Israel; so that he saw Samson and Gideon, Deborah and David, and all the national heroes taking up his unfinished task of leadership.

He founded no dynasty: his own sons were left in deep obscurity" (Stanley).

unto this day. These words, as the whole of the latter portion of this chapter, were added by Joshua. This is the opinion of Rabbi Judah. Poetic and touchingly beautiful are the words of Rabbi Meir: "These verses, the Holy One, blessed be He, dictated, and Moses wrote them down in tears." Such also was the view of Philo:—"The Divine Spirit fell upon him, and he prophesied with discernment while still alive the story of his own death; told, ere the end, how the end came; told how he was buried with none present, surely by no mortal hands but by immortal powers; how also he was not laid to rest in the tomb of his forefathers, but was given a monument of special dignity which no man has ever seen; how all the nation wept and mourned for him a whole month and made open display, private and public, of their sorrow, in memory of his vast benevolence and watchful care for each one of them and for all."

7. nor his natural force abated. lit. "neither had his freshness fled." He suffered none of the infirmities of age, and the natural freshness of his body had not become dried up.

8. the mourning for Moses were ended. The days of mourning even for the best of men must have an end. It is wrong unduly to prolong them. The workman passes, but the work must be continued. "No sooner did the sun of Moses set, than the sun of Joshua rose" (Talmud).

9. spirit of wisdom. But another name for the Spirit of God (Ibn Ezra).

Moses had laid his hands upon him. Thus endowing him with a portion of his spirit, and imparting the necessary qualification to be his successor; Num. XXVII, 18.

10. and there hath not arisen . . . like unto Moses. The pre-eminence of Moses is one of the Articles of Maimonides' Creed. "To lead into freedom a people long crushed by tyranny; to discipline and order such a mighty host; to harden them into fighting men, before whom warlike tribes quailed and walled cities went down; to repress discontent and jealousy and mutiny; to combat reactions and reversions; to turn the quick, fierce flame of enthusiasm to the service of a steady purpose, require some towering character—a character blending in highest expression the qualities of politician, patriot, philosopher, and statesman—

"He had not to wait, or prepare, for communion with the Divine as is the case with other men. Such communion was his at any time he wished. Moses could approach God with the ease and freedom with which a man speaks unto his neighbour" (Rashi).

According to Jewish custom, the completion of any of the Five Books of the Torah is marked in the Synagogue by the congregation exclaiming, חזק חזק ונתחזק, "Be strong, be strong, and let us strengthen one another"—an echo of the words of the ancient warrior, "Be of good courage, and let us play the men, for our people and the cities of our God." (II Samuel, x, 12). Be strong. i.e. to carry out the teaching contained in the Book just completed.

Note G

DEUTERONOMY: ITS ANTIQUITY AND MOSAIC AUTHORSHIP

1. Deuteronomy and the Religious Revival under King Josiah (621 b.c.e.)

King Josiah was the grandson of idolatrous King Manasseh, whose reign of fifty-five years was the longest in the annals of the Jewish People, and the darkest. Manasseh was swayed by a fanatical hatred for the Faith of his fathers. He nearly succeeded in uprooting True Religion in Israel, and flooded the land with obscene and gruesome idolatries. The Temple itself did not escape profanation: the sacred Altar was desecrated; the Ark itself was removed from out of the Holy of Holies; and new altars were erected for various weird cults. His years were one long Reign of Terror to the loyal minority who attempted to withstand the tide of religious barbarism. "Manasseh shed innocent blood very much, till he had filled Jerusalem from one end to another," says the author of the Book of Kings; and, according to a tradition preserved by Josephus, day by day a fresh batch of the Prophetic Order was led to execution. The aged Isaiah, it is said, met a martyr's death by being sawn asunder in a forest-tree in which he hid himself when attempting to escape from the fury of the tyrant.

No wonder that, when two years after the death of Manasseh, Josiah, a child of eight, came to the throne, the sacred books and teachings of Israel's Faith had been all but forgotten. However, in the group of influential persons responsible for the education and policy of the young King, there was a strong revulsion of feeling from the apostasy of the previous two generations, and a sincere yearning for a return to the historical Jewish national worship. It was, no doubt, due to the fact of having grown to manhood under such influences, that Josiah decided in the eighteenth year of his reign to repair the Temple, which had been permitted under his predecessors to fall into a shameful state of neglect. In the course of this restoration of the Temple, a discovery was made that was to prove of far-reaching importance for the spiritual revival of Israel. Under the accumulated rubbish and ruins of the decayed Temple-walls, Hilkiah the High Priest came upon a scroll which he handed to the King's scribe with the words, "I have found the book of the law in the house of the Lord." Shaphan the scribe brought the scroll to King Josiah, saying:

> "Hilkiah, the priest, hath delivered me a book. And Shaphan read it before the king. And it came to pass, when the king had heard the words of the book of the law, that he rent his clothes. And the king commanded Hilkiah, the priest . . . and Shaphan, the scribe, . . . saying, Go ye, inquire of the LORD for me, and for the people, and for all Judah, concerning the words of this book that is found; for great is the wrath of the LORD that is kindled against us, because our fathers have not hearkened unto the words of this book to do according unto all that which is written concerning us" (II Kings xxii, 3–14).

The following questions arise in connection with this narrative:

a) What is here meant by "the book of the law"?

Jewish and non-Jewish tradition and opinion hold that the scroll brought to the King was the Book of Deuteronomy. Some interpret Hilkiah's words ("I have found the book of the law!") to mean that he had found the autograph copy of Deuteronomy (ביד משה in th account given in I. Chron. xxxiv, 14, being taken to mean, "written by the hand of Moses himself"). Hence the extraordinary interest of all concerned in the discovery of this Book of the Law, and the effect of such discovery on the conscience of the King.

Neither is it accidental that the rediscovery of Deuteronomy in Josiah's day coincided with the rebuilding of the Jerusalem Sanctuary. Throughout the Ancient East, books of religious law and sacred documents were deposited in Temples at their erection, and were often found when the buildings were repaired. Naville, the renowned Egyptologist, instances from the Egyptian "Book of the Dead" an exact parallel to the Hilkiah incident. He further adduces evidence that this custom was known and observed in Palestine at the time of Solomon. In that case, the copy of the Book of Deuteronomy in question would at least date from that reign. It had been immured in a foundation wall when the Temple was first built. In the time of Josiah, the breaches in the Temple-walls had become so considerable that great sums were required for "the carpenters, the builders and the masons; and for buying timber and hewn stone to repair the House" (II Kings xxii, 6). In the process of demolition, either the workmen must have come upon a foundation deposit, or the Book must have fallen out from a crevice; and the High Priest picked it up among the rubbish. In view of this general Eastern custom, and especially of the Egyptian parallel, "there is no longer any justification for seeing any mystery or mystification in the incident of the finding of the Book of the Law by Hilkiah, the High Priest" (Jirku).

b) How are we to explain the behaviour of the King?

The behaviour of the King—he is stirred to the depths of his being by the message of the Book, and yet that message is new to him—is easy of explanation. Though during the half-century and longer of the royal apostasy the public reading of the Torah had been interrupted, and though the Book itself had disappeared or had been destroyed by the idolatrous priests, men still knew of the existence of such a Book, and had sufficient idea of its contents to be able to recognise it when the old Temple copy was suddenly brought to light. But so little were its contents common knowledge that, on its first reading, the King was struck with terror at its solemn prediction of the evils which would overtake a sinful Israel. "The ignorance of the King, brought up by the priesthood, may well be accounted for by supposing him to have been vaguely taught the general precepts of the Law, but to have seen or heard for the first time this special Book" (Milman).

Ancient and medieval history records several instances of codes of law or sacred documents disappearing, and of their rediscovery generations, and even centuries, later. Such, for example, was the fate that overtook the code of Charlemagne in the ninth century. "Before the close of the century in which he died, the whole body of his laws had fallen into utter disuse throughout the whole extent of his dominions. The charters, laws and chronicles of the later Carlovingian princes indicate either an absolute ignorance or an entire forgetfulness of the legislation of Charlemagne" (Sir James Stephen). The general neglect of the Scriptures in the age before the Reformation furnishes a partial illustration of the disappearance of Deuteronomy; even as the recovery, at the time of the Renaissance, of the original Hebrew Text of the Bible for the Western peoples is a parallel to its re-emergence under Josiah. In our own day, wherever the extirpation of religion is part of the State policy, as in Soviet Russia, we can quite imagine men and women who may have a superficial knowledge of the observances and beliefs of Judaism, but who had never read, or heard of, Deuteronomy, or any other Scripture.

2. Doubts in Regard to the Discovery of Deuteronomy

Nothing could be simpler than the above explanation of the finding of the scroll of Deuteronomy during the repair of the Temple. Bible Critics think otherwise. For over 150 years, they have declared that Deuteronomy, the Book of the Farewell Orations of Moses, was not the work of the Lawgiver, but was a spurious production written during the generation of Josiah. Some of them maintain further that this spurious work was hidden in the Temple with the intention that it should be brought to light, reach the King, and influence him in a definite way.

Not a word of all this appears in II Kings xxii, which describes the finding of the Book of the Law in the Temple; and there is nothing in that account that can justifiably serve as a basis for so strange a hypothesis. Hilkiah speaks of "the book of the law," ספר התורה, i.e., the well-known Torah. He could not have used such a phrase—it would not have been understood—if it were not known that such a book had been in existence before. It is clear that the finding of the book was regarded as the discovery of an old lost Scripture, a book of the Law of Moses. It was this fact alone which gave it authority. The King, when the book had been read to him, rent his garments, and sent to inquire of the Lord what it portended for him and his people; for "great is the wrath of the Lord that is kindled against us because our fathers have not hearkened unto the words of this book." The King was thus convinced of the Divine character of the Book, and also of its existence in the time of his forefathers. And it was this conviction alone that led to the religious revolution associated with his name—a revolution which succeeded despite all the machinery of heathenism that would recoil from nothing to thwart it. Not a whisper of doubt as to the Mosaic origin of the book is heard on any side, not from priests whose revenues it seriously interfered with, nor from prophets on many of whom it bore hardly less severely. "It is plainly inconceivable that the whole nation should have at once adopted, without objection or criticism, a book of the existence of which no one knew anything before that time, a book which demanded radical modification of worship as well as of the whole religious life" (B. Jacob).

Though many of the Critics do not hesitate to bring the grave moral charge of forgery in connection with the Book, they are themselves not at all agreed on the question whether the author belonged to the prophetic circle or to the priestly class; whether the Book was the work of one man, or of a "school"; whether it was produced in the time of Josiah, Manasseh, Hezekiah or even earlier; whether it originally was the same as we now have it, or it consisted of merely the code of laws—the historical orations having been added later; whether that code of laws came from one hand, or represented the gradual growth of centuries; whether some portion of the Book was Mosaic, or none of it; and whether it even claimed to be a work of Moses, or it made no such claim.

It was the English deists of the sixteenth century who first set afloat the theory that Deuteronomy was an essential forgery of the subtle priest, Hilkiah. That theory will not bear serious examination. This priest whose ministrations in the Zion Sanctuary are not marked by any particular devotion or zeal, would not be the man to undertake to make it the one and only Place of Worship in Israel; neither was he the man to write those exhortations to godliness and humanity that have made Deuteronomy a pure stream of righteousness to the children of men. And surely this crafty ecclesiastic would not have invented laws (Deuteronomy XVIII, 6) which seriously infringed the vested privileges of the Jerusalem priesthood—unless we are to attribute to him a height of folly that would be psychologically inexplicable. In our generation, W. R. Smith, Dillmann, Kittel, Driver and many others have repudiated this absurd theory.

Even less convincing, but far more shocking to the moral sense, is the attempt to find the forger among the Prophets. A pioneer of nineteenth century Bible criticism in England, Bishop Colenso, thinks it likely that Jeremiah was the falsifier. "What the inner voice ordered him to do," Colenso has the shamelessness to write, "he would do without hesitation, as by direct command of God, and all considerations of morality or immorality would not be entertained." Verily, there are some things that do not deserve to be refuted: they should be exorcised.

It is refreshing to turn to the words of Rudolf Kittel written in 1925: "There is no real evidence to prove that a pious or impious deceit was practised on Josiah. The assumption of forgery may be one of those hypotheses which, once set up, is so often repeated that finally every one believes it has been proven. Then one seems ultra-conservative and unscientific not to believe it. Who, nowadays, would take upon himself the odium of being behind the times?"

3. Internal Evidence as to the Antiquity of Deuteronomy

The internal evidence against the late composition of Deuteronomy, and for its Mosaic authorship, is overwhelming. From whatever side the question is examined, we find that the Book and the history of Josiah's times do not fit each other. To take a few examples. In the reign of Josiah, or in that of his immediate predecessors, the injunction to exterminate the Canaanites (xx, 16–18) and the Amalekites (xxv, 17–19) who had long since disappeared, would have been as utterly out of date as a royal proclamation in Great Britain at the present day ordering the expulsion of the Danes (W. H. Green). And how can a Code belong to the time of Josiah which, while it provides for the possible selection of a king in the future, nowhere implies an actual monarchical government ? It finds it necessary to ordain that the king must be a native and not a foreigner (xvii 15), when the undisputed line of succession had for ages been fixed in the family of David. It furthermore regulates that the king must not " cause the people to return to Egypt," as they seemed ready to do on every grievance in the days of Moses (Num. xiv, 4), but which no one ever dreamed of doing after they were fairly established in Canaan. In brief, regarding this whole law of the monarchy, H. M. Wiener rightly says, " As part of the work of Moses, all is clear ; place it in a later age, all is confusion."

This same judgment must be pronounced in regard to dozens of other matters in Deuteronomy. Thus, Israel is treated in its unbroken unity as a nation : one Israel is spoken of. There is not the slightest hint of the great secession of the Ten Tribes which had rent Israel in twain. Furthermore, in Deuteronomy the hope and the promise is that Israel is to be, " high above all nations ; " and the Law actually contemplates foreign wars (xx, 10–15). This is quite understandable of the Mosaic generation, just about to embark on the conquest of Canaan. In the days of Josiah, however, it was a question whether Judah could even maintain its own existence. It had been brought to the edge of ruin by the Assyrian world-power, and within two decades of Josiah's day, its inhabitants were to be exiled to the banks of the Euphrates. Again, Edom is mentioned as the people to be most favoured by Israel ; whereas from the time of David onwards, Edom was Judah's bitterest enemy, and is unsparingly denounced by Jeremiah, as by Isaiah before him. Lastly, in a book assumed to be specially produced to effect reformation in worship, how are we to explain the presence of such laws as regulate birds' nests or parapets upon a roof? Or, for that matter, what relevancy is there, for such a purpose, in Moses' historical retrospect? "As part of the work of Moses, all is clear; place it in a later age, all is confusion."

4. Centralisation of Worship

The above considerations, and scores more of the same force and moment, have long been urged against the hypothesis of the late production of Deuteronomy. How is it that they have made so little impression upon the mass of the Critics?

The reason is as follows: the assumption that Deuteronomy is a product of Josiah's age is the basis of the theory on which the Critics have built their whole reconstruction of Bible history and religion. That theory—viz. the Centralisation of Worship in ancient Israel—they have raised to a dogma, which it is in their opinion sheer heresy to question. Till the time of Josiah, they tell us, the ancient Israelite could sacrifice at any place he desired; numberless local shrines, "high places," dotted the land; and, though there was a good deal of pagan revelry, natural piety was a living thing among the people. But with the appearance of Deuteronomy the local cults were uprooted, religion was separated from "life," and worship was centred in Jerusalem. There arose the idea of a Church; religion was now contained in a book; and it became an object of study, a theology. All these things, we are told, flowed from the centralisation of worship; and such centralisation was the result exclusively of the finding of Deuteronomy in the days of Josiah.

What is the truth in regard to centralisation of worship, and these claims of the Wellhausen school of Bible Critics?

Briefly, not a single one of the Critical claims in connection with their dogma of centralisation is in agreement with the historical facts. Centralisation of worship did not originate in the age of Josiah; it was not the dominant motive of his reformation; neither was there any freedom of indiscriminate sacrifice before his day.

a) Centralisation of worship did not originate in the age of Josiah. It was present from the beginnings of Israel as a nation (Baxter). One need not be a great Bible scholar to know that, four hundred years before Josiah, the splendid Temple of Solomon was built on Mount Zion. That Temple was built by "a levy out of all Israel" (I Kings v, 13); and for its dedication, Solomon assembles "the elders of Israel and all the heads of the tribes" (VIII, 1). It is the central shrine of the whole House of Israel. (Wellhausen says, "this view of Solomon's Temple is unhistorical," because no king after Solomon is left uncensured for having tolerated the continuance of "the high places." It is the old familiar argument (see Leviticus, p. 322), that the Law could not have existed because it can be shown that it was broken! According to such logic, there could never have been any Prohibition law in America.

And for centuries before Solomon, there was the Central Sanctuary at Shiloh. Elkanah, the father of Samuel, "went out of his city from year to year to worship and to sacrifice unto the LORD of hosts in Shiloh" (I Samuel I, 3). We are told of "all the Israelites coming hither" (II, 15); and that the presiding priest represented "all the tribes of Israel."

But even centuries before Shiloh, we have the Sanctuary at Sinai. Nothing in Scripture is more minutely or more solemnly described than the building of the Mosaic tabernacle. Hyper-critics have, in obedience to their programme, denied its existence. However, the study of comparative religions and their sacred structures has rendered their position absurd. Kittel's considered opinion is: "It is part of the knowledge which has been confirmed in recent times, that in Moses' day and during the Desert wanderings there was a sacred tent (Tent of Meeting), which was the religious centre of the congregation in the Desert."

b) Centralisation of worship was not the dominant motive in Josiah's reformation. Josiah's reformation from beginning to end was a crusade against the idolatry which had flooded the land, the Jerusalem sanctuary included; and the "high places" were put down as part of this stern suppression of all idolatrous practices. Of a movement for centralisation of worship as such, the narrative gives not a single hint. The whole condition of Jerusalem and Judah, as described in II Kings XXIII, was in flagrant violation of far more fundamental statutes than that of the central Sanctuary in Deuteronomy. And it cannot be repeated with sufficient emphasis that there are far more fundamental laws in Deuteronomy than this law concerning the Sanctuary. It has its place in chap XII, and recurs in the regulations for feasts, tithing, and priestly duty; but it is quite incorrect to say that this is the one grand idea which inspires the Book.

c) There was no freedom of indiscriminate altar-building in early Israel. The alleged legitimacy, before the reformation of Josiah, of sacrificing wherever one desired, is based upon a wrong interpretation of Exodus xx, 21 (in English Bibles, xx, 24). "An altar of earth thou shalt make unto Me, and shalt sacrifice thereon thy burnt offerings and thy peace offerings, thy sheep, and thine oxen; in every place where I cause my name to be remembered I will come unto thee and I will bless thee" (the last clause should be translated, "in whatever place I record my name, I will come unto thee, and will bless thee"). This law does not authorise worship "at the altars of earth and unhewn stones in all corners of the land," as claimed by W. Robertson Smith and those of his school. The law does not speak of "altars," but only of "an altar"; and that altar was to be erected "in whatever place I record my name": i.e., in any place sanctified by a special revelation of God. There is here nothing that conflicts with the command concerning centralisation of worship in Deut. xii. There we have the general rule of worship at the Central Sanctuary; but that general rule does not forbid that, under proper Divine authority, exceptional sacrifices might be offered elsewhere. The clearest proof of this is that Deuteronomy itself orders the building of an Altar on Mount Ebal, precisely in the manner of Exodus xx, 21. Critics unanimously assign Exod. xx, 21, to what they call "the Book of the Covenant," which they deem to be many centuries older than Josiah. But the "Book of the Covenant" has the same ideal of centralisation as Deuteronomy! It takes for granted a Central Shrine, and prescribes that three times in the year all males shall present themselves there before the Lord (Exod. xxiii, 17).

In view of all the above, one need not be surprised to learn that the alleged evil effects which followed the eventual enforcement of this ancient law of centralisation of worship are purely imaginary. "Centralisation is the necessary consequence of monotheism and of the actual or ideal unity of Israel. The regulation of life according to Divine Law, the rise of a canon and a theology, are incidental to the development of every religion that has ever controlled and modified the life of a people" (B. Jacob).

Not all Critics have remained blind to the true facts regarding the alleged lateness of the law of Centralisation summarised above. From the very first the hollowness of the Critical hypothesis was recognized by Sayce (Oxford), Hoffmann (Berlin), Naville (Geneva), Robertson (Glasgow) and W. H. Green (Princeton). Their protests were disregarded, but new recruits were found in Hommel, Dahse, Wiener, Moeller, Orr, Jacob and many others. In recent years, several outstanding scholars—Max Löhr, Th. Oesterreicher, W. Staerk—have come to realise that especially this fundamental pillar of the Bible Critical view has proved a delusion and a snare. In 1924, W. Staerk wrote :—" For over 100 years Old Testament studies have been under the spell of this hypothesis (i.e., centralisation of worship), which in its results has been fatal to the proper understanding of Israel's religion."

5. The Unity and Mosaicity of Deuteronomy

No Book of the Bible bears on its face a stronger impress of unity—unity of thought, language, style and spirit—than Deuteronomy. And there is no reason to doubt that the various Discourses proceed from one hand, and that the same hand was responsible for the Code of laws. The alleged discrepancies between some of its statements and those in the other books of the Pentateuch, are largely the result of what Delitzsch called " hunting for contradictions." These alleged differences between the historical accounts in the earlier books and the rhetorical presentation of the same matter in the Farewell Addresses of the dying Lawgiver, are all of them capable of a natural explanation.

In recent decades, attention has been called to the fact that in some portions of Deuteronomy Israel is addressed in singular (collectively), and in other portions in the plural ; and it is urged that this is evidence of dual authorship. Anyone who is familiar with the Prophetic writings knows that the singular and the plural constantly interchange. This feature is found likewise in other literatures, English included. H. M. Wiener adduces the following from Sir Walter Scott's " St. Ronan's Well " (the italics are Wiener's) :

> " Why, thou suspicious monitor, have I not repeated a hundred times . . . And what need you come upon me, with your long lesson. Thou art, indeed, a curious animal. No man like you for stealing other men's inventions, and cooking them up in your own way. However,

> Harry, bating a little self-conceit and assumption, thou art as honest a fellow as ever man put faith in—clever, too, in your own style, though not quite the genius you would fain pass for. Come on thine own terms, and come as speedily as thou canst.

As to the Mosaic authorship, the discoveries, since the beginning of this century, of the ancient Semitic codes confirm the antiquity of Deuteronomy. Thus, when King Amaziah punished his father's murderers, he refrained from having their families killed with them (II Kings XIV, 6), because the Law of Moses (Deut. XXIV, 16) forbade such procedure. To-day we know that the old Hittite law of the fifteenth pre-Christian century—contemporaneous with Moses—contains this same principle. Furthermore, the law concerning the rape of a betrothed or married woman in Deuteronomy has striking similarities to the law on the subject in the Hammurabi, the Hittite, and the Assyrian Codes. What reason, therefore, is there to assume that these laws of Deuteronomy are later than the Mosaic period? Paul Volz, who—together with Benno Jacob and Umberto Cassuto—has recently dealt a staggering blow to the Documentary Theory by demolishing all proof for the so-called Elohist source, has once again recorded his conviction that, on the strictly scientific evidence now available, Moses must have been a genius of the first order, a supreme Lawgiver who shaped an inchoate human mass into a great spiritual nation. Can we deny such a genius the ability to deliver his Farewell Discourses? "When we carefully examine the arguments that have been collected in the work of more than a century of criticism, we find that not a shadow of a case can be made against the authenticity of the Mosaic speeches" (Wiener). The same holds true in reference to the Code of laws. Max Löhr and W. Staerk see no valid reason why the Deuteronomic legislation should not be Mosaic. And they are not the only scholars who have come to see the force of Dean Milman's words: "If there are difficulties in connection with the Mosaic date of Deuteronomy, endeavour to assign Deuteronomy to any other period in the Jewish annals, and judge whether difficulties do not accumulate twentyfold."

Die-hard adherents of the Wellhausen school of Pentateuch criticism may derive what comfort they may from the following two concluding selections. The first is: "Speaking for all branches of science, we may say that a hypothesis which has stood for half a century has done its duty.

Measured by this standard, Wellhausen's theory is as good as the best. However, there is increasing evidence that it has had its day ; and that those scholars who, from the first, expressed serious doubts of it are right " (Kittel).

The other selection cuts at the root of the whole method of deciding historical questions merely by so-called literary tests It reads as follows: " Must there not be something essentially illusory in a method which never gives or can give any independent proofs of its conclusions ; and which too leads each new set of inquirers to reject what their next predecessors had been thought to have most clearly established ? " (Speaker's Commentary).

THE HAFTORAHS

FOR

THE BOOK OF DEUTERONOMY.

Before reading the Lesson from the Prophets, the following is said by the Maftir:—

בָּרוּךְ אַתָּה יְיָ אֱלֹהֵינוּ מֶלֶךְ הָעוֹלָם אֲשֶׁר בָּחַר בִּנְבִיאִים טוֹבִים וְרָצָה בְדִבְרֵיהֶם הַנֶּאֱמָרִים בֶּאֱמֶת בָּרוּךְ אַתָּה יְיָ הַבּוֹחֵר בַּתּוֹרָה וּבְמֹשֶׁה עַבְדּוֹ וּבְיִשְׂרָאֵל עַמּוֹ וּבִנְבִיאֵי הָאֱמֶת וָצֶדֶק׃

After the Lesson from the Prophets, the Maftir says the following:—

Before reading the Lesson from the Prophets, the following is said by the Maftir:—

Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the universe, who hast chosen good prophets, and hast found pleasure in their words which were spoken in truth.

Blessed art thou, O Lord, who hast chosen the Law, and Moses thy servant, and Israel thy people, and prophets of truth and righteousness.

[Sephardim conclude each Haftorah with the words:—

Our Redeemer! The Lord of Hosts is his name, the Holy One of Israel.]

After the Lesson from the Prophets, the Maftir says the following:—

Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the universe, Rock of all worlds, righteous through all generations, O faithful God, who sayest and doest, who speakest and fulfillest, all whose words are truth and righteousness. Faithful art thou, O Lord our God, and faithful are thy words, and not one of thy words shall return void, for thou art a faithful and merciful God and King. Blessed art thou, O Lord, God, who art faithful in all thy words.

Have mercy upon Zion, for it is the home of our life, and save her that is grieved in spirit speedily, even in our days. Blessed art thou, O Lord, who makest Zion joyful through her children.

Gladden us, O Lord our God, with Elijah the prophet, thy servant, and with the kingdom of the house of David, thine anointed. Soon may he come and rejoice our hearts. Suffer not a stranger to sit upon his throne, nor let others any longer inherit his glory; for by thy holy name thou didst swear unto him, that his light should not be quenched for ever. Blessed art thou, O Lord, the Shield of David.

For the Law, for the divine service, for the prophets, and for this Sabbath day, which thou, O Lord our God, hast given us for holiness and for rest, for honour and for glory,—for all these we thank and bless thee, O Lord our God, blessed be thy name by the mouth of every living being continually and for ever. Blessed art thou, O Lord, who sanctifiest the Sabbath.

The Haftorah (the Heb. term is haphtarah, " conclusion ") is the Lesson from the Prophets recited immediately after the Reading of the Law. Long before the destruction of the Second Temple, the custom had grown up of concluding the Reading of the Torah on Sabbaths, Fasts and Festivals with a selection from the " Earlier Prophets " (Joshua, Judges, Samuel and Kings) or from the " Later Prophets " (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel and the Book of the Twelve Prophets). We possess no historical data concerning the institution of these Lessons. A medieval author on the Liturgy states that a little more than two thousand years ago (168 B.C.E.), Antiochus Epiphanes, king of Syria and Palestine, forbade the reading of the Torah under penalty of death. The Scribes, thereupon, substituted a chapter of the Prophets cognate to the portion of the Law that ought to have been read. But, whatever be the exact origin of the Haftorah, there is always some similarity between the Sidrah and the Prophetic selection. Even when the latter does not contain an explicit reference to the events of the Sidrah, it reinforces the teaching of the weekly Reading upon the mind of the worshipper by a Prophetic message of consolation and hope.

DEVARIM

Isaiah I, 1–27

This Sidrah always precedes the Fast of Av, the anniversary of the Fall of Jerusalem, both at the hands of the Babylonians, and six centuries later at the hands of the Romans, with the consequent dispersion of Israel and the long drawn out suffering, not yet ended, that followed these calamities. The Haftorahs read on the three Sabbaths preceding that Fast are called "Haftorahs of Rebuke." For the third Sabbath, Devarim, the opening chapter of Isaiah—the Great Arraignment of Judah—has been selected, in order to warn all generations in Israel of the moral and social transgressions that led to the downfall of the Jewish State.

Isaiah, the son of Amoz, was a native of Jerusalem. His family seems to have been one of rank, and he moved in royal circles. His Prophetic ministry extended for close upon 40 years, from 740-701 B.C.E. These years were the most stirring that the kingdom of Judah had yet passed through; and, throughout that entire period, he was the dominant figure in the land. The momentous event of his time was the rise of Assyria. From being a mere garrison province of Babylon in northern Mesopotamia, Assyria had become a world power. The kingdoms of Syria and Israel fell before the Assyrians in 721; and only as by a miracle was Jerusalem delivered from their grasp in 701.

With the downfall of the kingdom of Israel, Judah became the sole representative and repository of true

Religion; and in the fate of that tiny land, the moral destinies of the whole world were involved. In this time of upheaval and spiritual travail, Isaiah brought to King and People the message of the holiness, omnipotence, and sovereignty of God ("Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of His glory."). With passionate fervour he sought to instil his own vital faith in God and Providence into the heart of his brethren, and interpret for them the crises of history in the light of Divine guidance and righteousness. His efforts brought him into violent conflict with the war party of his day; and throughout his life, he remained an implacable enemy of shallow "patriots" and opportunist politicians.

Great in thought and great in action, Isaiah united the profoundest religious insight with wide knowledge of men and affairs. The princely personality of the man is reflected in his style. His words are instinct with power, and he is the master of the sublime in universal literature. His moral passion, moreover, marks him as one of the world's greatest orators.

Chapter I

The Great Arraignment

Though Chapter I is not the earliest of Isaiah's prophecies (Rashi), its choice as the opening of the Book is most appropriate. It strikes the fundamental notes of Isaiah's teaching, and at the same time indicates the general line of Prophetic doctrine with a force and clearness unsurpassed in Scripture. The probable date of this prophecy is the time of Sennacherib's campaign in 701 B.C.E., when the Assyrians had overrun the kingdom of Judah, and were now besieging Jerusalem. A less probable date is 734, the year of the Syrian invasion.

doth not know. Does not wish to know (Rashi). Hosea too finds lack of " knowledge of the Lord " the source of all moral evil. High and low alike fail to understand the nature and significance of the spiritual gifts God had conferred upon Israel.

does not consider. i.e. does not try to understand. The Heb. התבונן is the Hithpael and may also mean, " does not understand himself." Know thyself is a moral obligation for nations as well as for individuals. The Jew can only know himself through his Judaism and his past; and the great majority of Jews of to-day are ignorant of the ideals of their Faith, their Scripture, their Sacred Language, and the story of Israel. Such lack of self-knowledge is, at all times, monstrous ingratitude to his Heavenly Father.

they have forsaken the LORD, they have despised the Holy One of Israel, they are estranged and that ye revolt more and more? the whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint. 6. From the soundness in it; but wounds, and bruises, and festering sores: they have not been closed,

neither bound up, neither mollified with oil.

Sodom; give ear unto the teaching of our God, ye people of Gomorrah. 11. To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me? saith the LORD: I am full of the burnt offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts; and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he-goats. 12. When ye come to appear before me, who hath required this at your hand, to

11. to what purpose. None must have known better than the Prophets that acts of worship both kindle and express true religion. But, it is their immortal merit to have proclaimed that the sacrifices of "judges of Sodom" are an insult to God; cf. Prov. XXI, 27. Throughout this section, it is not the offerings in themselves that are condemned, but the hypocritical character of those who bring the sacrifices. "The sacrifices were commanded to you that ye call Me to mind and refrain from sin; and, having sinned, that ye confess them at the offering of the sacrifice and repent of your evil ways. If ye do so, the sacrifices are a sweet savour unto Me; but, as it is now, I loathe them" (Kimchi); see Leviticus, p. 44–46.

Isaiah XL, 1–26

The Prophetic Reading of this Sabbath is the first of the seven "Haftorahs of Consolation" that follow the Fast of Av. They consist of sublime messages of encouragement that have sustained and fortified Israel during its ordeals of cruelty and persecution throughout the ages.

This chapter opens the Rhapsody of "Zion Redeemed" that occupies the second half of the Book of Isaiah. For the understanding of the historical situation, it is necessary to recall that the Babylonians had, in the year 586, taken Jerusalem, destroyed the kingdom of Judah, and deported the greater portion of its inhabitants to the banks of the Euphrates. After their exile had lasted 47 years, Babylon itself, the "mistress of the world," was about to fall at the hands of Cyrus, the founder of the Persian Empire. Great was the commotion among Babylon's subject peoples, not least so among the Jewish exiles. "Against their enslaver and oppressor, they saw uplifted the irresistible sword of God's instrument, this Persian prince to whose religion the Babylonian idolatry was hateful; a victorious warrior, a wise and just statesman, favourable to Babylon's prisoners and victims, and disposed to restore the exiles of Judah to their own land" (Matthew Arnold); see Genesis, p. 436.

In this supreme hour is heard the voice of God's Prophet, commanded to comfort Israel, and proclaim the Restoration to Zion.

1–2. The Proclamation of Divine Forgiveness.

1. comfort ye my people. This does not mean, "Be comforted, O my people"; but the prophets, or all who love Jerusalem, are commanded to comfort Israel. The Targum translates, "Prophets, prophesy consolations to My people." This opening word of this Haftorah, נחמו "Comfort ye," has given the name to the Sabbath, שבת נחמו.

2. speak to the heart of. "Speak tenderly."

double. More than ample. "These words of the Prophet are like balm upon a wound, or like a soft breath upon a fevered brow" (Graetz). "The Hebrew language and genius are seen in the Book of Isaiah at their perfection—this has naturally had its effect on the English translators of the Bible, whose Version nowhere perhaps rises to such beauty as in this Book" (Matthew Arnold).

3–5. The Prophet hears the sound of Heavenly voices announcing that Israel's Deliverance from exile is at hand. The message of the first of these celestial heralds is: "Prepare the way of the Lord." The return from captivity is conceived as a Divine triumphal march.

3. the voice . . . crieth. lit. "A voice! one is crying." A Heavenly voice cries to his fellows to make a road through the desert for the return of exiled Israel, with God as the Leader.

prepare. lit. "clear of obstacles." In the Orient, the custom of repairing roads for a royal journey continues to this day.

in the wilderness. The shortest line from Babylon to Judea was nearly all through desert.

4. every valley . . . plain. Whatever would obstruct the path of the returning exiles will be smoothed away, in order to make a level and easy road for the returning exiles.

exalted. Raised.

5. glory of the LORD. Israel's redemption will be "the talk of the world," and lead to a new recognition of the Divine among mankind.

6–8. Second herald: all earthly might is transitory—Israel's oppressors will perish; the word of God alone is eternal.

7. breath of the LORD. Probably refers to the sirocco, the scorching wind that often blights the spring vegetation in Palestine.

3. The voice of one that crieth, Prepare ye in the wilderness the way of the LORD, make level in the desert a high way for our God. 4.
Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain: 5. and the glory of the LORD shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the LORD hath spoken it. 6. The voice of one saying, Cry. And one said, What shall I cry? All flesh is grass, and all the good-liness thereof is as the flower of the field: 7.
the grass withereth, the flower fadeth; because the breath of the LORD bloweth upon it: surely the people is grass. 8. The grass withereth, the flower fadeth: but the word of our God shall stand for ever.

9. O thou that tellest good tidings to Zion, get thee up into the high mountain; O thou

the people. Here signifying the same as all flesh, and, in particular, Israel's enemies who will wither like grass.

8. the word of our God. God's immutable purposes as announced to Israel and mankind by Israel's Prophets—"the one permanent factor in human history" (Skinner).

shall stand for ever. The glory of human plans and achievements is as ephemeral as the flower of the field. The word of God alone is forever certain of triumphant fulfilment.

9–11. Third herald: the news announced in Palestine, "God is coming, bringing His People back to Zion."

9. into the high mountain. So that the glad herald may be heard from afar.

The everlasting God is omnipotent, and His understanding is unsearchable. They who trust in Him shall find in Him an inexhaustible source of life and energy."

Note H

THE AUTHORSHIP OF THE SECOND PART OF ISAIAH

Chapters xl–lxvi

These chapters differ considerably from those in the first half of Isaiah (chapters i–xxxix). There the Prophet is speaking to the citizens of the independent state of Judah; here the Jewish exiles in Babylon are addressed—whose Temple has been destroyed, whose city Jerusalem is desolate and forsaken, and the people themselves suffering the physical and moral miseries of captivity. Thus there is a span of some 150 years between the political and social conditions reflected in the two parts of the Book. Furthermore, the predominant note in the prophecies of the first part of Isaiah is warning, lest Israel suffer destruction through rebellion against God; the note of the second part is comfort—Israel having suffered more than due for its sins.

Are both parts of the Book the work of one hand, Isaiah, the statesman-prophet of Jerusalem? Or, Is the second part the work of an unknown prophet in Babylon, whose anonymous writings were later appended to the Prophecies of Isaiah?

This question can be considered dispassionately. It touches no dogma, or any religious principle in Judaism; and, moreover, does not materially affect the understanding of the prophecies, or of the human conditions of the Jewish people that they have in view.

Until the beginning of the nineteenth century, it was almost the universal belief that the whole Book of Isaiah is by one hand. As early as 200 B.C.E. (Ecclesiasticus XLVIII, 23–25), chapters XL–LXVI were looked upon as the prediction of national disaster by Isaiah, and the consolation which the Prophet bequeathed to his brethren who were doomed in later times to the fate of exile. In these chapters, it was held, the Prophet is by the Spirit carried forward out of his own age; so that, in spirit, he is living amidst the exiles one hundred and fifty years after his day. Prediction, though not by any means the whole of prophecy, is yet of its very essence. This is particularly true of the prophecies of Isaiah. Thus, he foretold the fall of the Northern Kingdom; and we read that he prepared a written record of his teaching in another connection and deposited it as a sealed document for future days. "Bind up the testimony, seal the instruction among my disciples. And I will wait for the LORD, that hideth his face from the house of Jacob, and I will hope in him" (Isa. VIII, 16, 17). Why then could not his Prophetic gaze penetrate the future that awaited his people across the generations, and send his exiled brethren a message of comfort and hope? There is thus nothing inherently improbable in the traditional belief; and, though it finds few modern supporters, it has had able defenders among scholars, Jewish and non-Jewish; to name only Luzzatto in the nineteenth century, and Kaminka in the twentieth.

However, nearly all scholars to-day assume that the author of the later chapters was not identical with the author of chapters I–XXXIX. Ibn Ezra was the first who maintained that they are the work of a contemporary of the events which they presuppose. And it has often been pointed out that neither the appearance of Cyrus nor the captivity of Israel is ever predicted in them; they are everywhere assumed as facts known to the readers. The name "Isaiah," it is argued, does not occur in the second part, nor any personal reference that could connect the author with the older Prophet. It is also held to be significant that, in the Synagogue, the order in which the Great Prophets were originally arranged was Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Isaiah—suggesting that those responsible for this ancient arrangement were conscious that elements were contained in the Book of Isaiah which were of a later date than the Prophet Ezekiel. For these reasons, among others, modern scholars refer to the author of chapters XL–LXVI as the Second Isaiah, or some equivalent term like Deutero-Isaiah, or Isaiah of Babylon.

None of the arguments for the dual authorship of Isaiah explain how the name of that Prophet whose outpouring brought about a resurrection of Jewish life in the Holy Land should have been clean forgotten; and forgotten by the very people who cherished the name of the earlier seer for prophecies which were of no direct concern to them (Kaminka). Neither is the newer view strengthened by those who would restrict the work of the Second Isaiah to chapters XL–LV, and confer the authorship of the remaining eleven chapters to "Trito-Isaiah," or divide them among a third and fourth Prophet of that later age. The arguments on which such further sub-division is based are extremely precarious. And even from the literary angle, that procedure disregards the "Law of parsimony" in Nature. The prophecies in chapters XL–LV reveal one of the world's greatest masters of literature; and no less so do the portions assigned by the Critics to "Trito-Isaiah." In grandeur, spiritual insight, and religious power, these chapters reach a level that is not surpassed by Isaiah of Jerusalem. It is no small strain on credulity to believe in two or three contemporary literary and spiritual geniuses of the first order (Wiener).

It may be added that the Critics are hopelessly at variance as to the place where those prophecies have been written. Some favour Babylon; others, Palestine, Egypt or Phœnicia.

Isaiah XLIX, 14–LI, 3

This is the second of the Haftorahs of Consolation. These Haftorahs are primarily chosen because of the message of comfort and hope they bring during the weeks that follow the Fast of Av. Yet, in addition, there is a fundamental similarity between the teaching of our Sidrah and Haftorah. The former stresses the vital duty for Israel to maintain its spiritual identity in the face of Canaanite idolatry. This, together with the recognition that man doth not live by bread only, and the proper understanding of the Divine discipline of suffering—would fit Israel for the role of "the Servant of the Lord," as conceived by the Prophet in this and other portions of his prophecies.

14–21. Zion's Despondency and Consolation

The great body of the Jewish people had lost hope of a national restoration. They thought that Israel's history was definitely closed.

15. these may forget. Even a mother's pity for her own helpless infant may fail, but not God's mercy. That is more enduring than the strongest human affection.

16. have graven thee. By a bold figure the Prophet poetically represents Zion as being engraved on God's hands, so that it and its ruined walls are continually in His mind.

destroyers . . . waste. Some take these words to refer to the garrison left in Palestine by the Babylonians, and now forced to depart by the Persians after their conquest of Babylon. Kimchi refers them to the wicked in Israel who were the cause of the nation's destruction. The Heb. words, מהרסיך ומחריביך ממך יצאו, have become a popular Jewish saying in the translation, "Thy destroyers and they that make thee waste come forth from thee"; i.e., Israel's worst enemies, and those who do most to tarnish Israel's fair name, come from Israel's own camp.

Another cause of despondency to the exiles was the doubt, "Is the ancient covenant-relation between God and Israel still in existence? Has not God, by exiling Israel, divorced Israel?" The answer is, "Where is your mother's get, which alone would make the separation final? It does not

"The Servant of the Lord": The Consciousness of His Mission

4-9. This is one of the four passages in the Second Part of Isaiah that either describe the "Servant of the Lord," or, as here, introduce him as the speaker. These passages are of exceptional beauty and religious depth, but presenting great difficulties of interpretation. The "Servant of the Lord" is Ideal Israel, the sanctified minority who are willing to suffer and die for their Faith. They are ready to bear all uncharitableness and persecution at the hands of

I called, was there none to answer? Is my hand shortened at all, that it cannot redeem? or have I no power to deliver? Behold, at my rebuke I dry up the sea, I make the rivers a wilderness: their fish stinketh, because there is no water, and dieth for thirst. 3. I clothe the heavens with blackness, and I make sackcloth their covering.

4. The Lord GOD hath given me the tongue of them that are taught, that I should know how to sustain with words him that is weary: he wakeneth morning by morning, he wakeneth mine ear to hear as they that are taught. 5. The Lord GOD hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious, neither turned away backward. 6. I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair: I hid not my face from shame and spitting. 7. For the Lord

gird yourselves about with firebrands: walk ye in the flame of your fire, and among the brands that ye have kindled. This shall ye have of

If fire and firebrands refer to idolatrous rites, there is here possibly "an allusion to the strange but apparently authentic fact that in certain forms of heathen worship the devotees, under the stress of excitement, become impervious to the ordinary effects of heat on the human body. If so, the boasted marvels of their fire-walking will not render them immune from the retribution of God" (Elmslie).

Chapter LI

1–3. The strain of consolation is resumed. The wonders of God's Providence in the past would once more be repeated. Let not the true believers fear that they are too few to rebuild Zion.

1. rock . . . pit. The Patriarchs, the founders of the race, are the quarry from which their descendants were digged.

2. Abraham. God's Promise to make him a great nation and a blessing to all the families of the earth has been fulfilled; so would the faith of the Righteous Remnant in Zion's restoration be rewarded.

when he was but one. When he had not even a child, God called him to make him a great nation; "Abraham was one, and he inherited the land," Ezek. XXXIII, 24.

3. hath comforted Zion. The verbs are perfects of certainty (the "Prophetic future"), and equivalent to shall surely comfort Zion, despite the fewness of those who hear the call of Zion.

51 1. Hearken to me, ye that follow after righteousness, ye that seek the LORD: look unto the rock whence ye were hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence we were digged. 2. Look unto Abraham your father, and unto Sarah that bare you: for when he was but one I called him, and I blessed him, and made him many. 3. For the Lord hath comforted Zion: he hath comforted
all her waste places, and hath made her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the LORD; joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving, and the voice of melody.

wilderness. The exiles, no doubt, hesitated to leave the fertile fields of Babylon, and argued that Palestine was now a barren wilderness. The Prophet, therefore, assures them that the barren districts in the Holy Land shall be made exceedingly fruitful (Ehrlich). Such marvellous transformations in the fertility of Palestine have been witnessed in our own day.

ISAIAH LIV, 11–LV, 5

This is the third of the Haftorahs of Consolation. Its central promise is: "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgement thou shalt condemn." The fulfilment of this promise is dependent on Israel's right choice in regard to the Two Ways, "Behold I set before you this day a blessing and a curse," with which the Sidrah opens.

11–17. OUTER AND INNER SPLENDOUR OF ZION

13. all thy children shall be taught of the Lord. Or, "all thy children shall be disciples of the Lord". Zion's peace will be based not on armed force, but on the God-fearing lives of all its inhabitants. In some ancient manuscripts the second word for "thy children" (banayich) in this verse was read as bonayich, "thy builders." This proclaims a wonderful truth: the children of an ation are the builders

And every Jewish child must be reared to become such a builder of his People's better future; every Jewish child must be fortified by a knowledge of Judaism, and trained for a life of beneficence for Israel and humanity. This verse ("All thy children shall be taught of the Lord,") is an important landmark in the history of civilisation. In obedience to it, Israel led the way in universal education. Thus, in his History of the World, H. G. Wells records, "The Jewish religion, because it was a literature-sustained religion, led to the first efforts to provide elementary instruction for all the children of the community."

SABBATH AND NEW MOON

Isaiah LXVI

An interpretation of this prophecy other than that adopted in the first four volumes of this Commentary, is that of H. M. Wiener. As it casts new light on many of the obscurities in this difficult chapter, it is here given: "In v. 1-4, the Prophet appears to be protesting energetically against the erection of some temple and its actual or projected sacrifices. Then in v. 5, he turns to some other party who had been faithful to God and had consequently been cast out by certain opponents who were their brethren. These opponents had said incredulously, 'Let the Lord be glorified, that we may see your joy.' The Prophet predicts that the result will rebuke their lack of faith. 'They shall be ashamed.' How will this come about? 'A voice of tumult from the city, a voice from the temple, a voice of the Lord that rendereth recompense to His enemies' (v. 6). In others word, there will be fighting in the city centering about the temple. The sequel will be the painless and unprecedented rebirth of the Holy Land, bringing comfort and joy as the result of the Divine intervention (manifesting itself in the Persian campaigns of Cyrus). What then are the temple against the erection of which the prophet protests, the two parties, and the city and temple connected with the fighting? The obvious explanation is that there was a proposal to build a temple of the Lord in or near Babylon. This led to violent divisions of opinion in the community. Its supporters held that the exile was permanent and a Jewish restoration out of the question. The Prophet was strongly opposed to this idea. . . . He assures the orthodox party that events will prove how right they were in their faith for the future. The city in which the voice of tumult is heard is Babylon and it too contained the temple, which is not a temple of God. It is probable that Isaiah LXVI was written considerably earlier than some of the other chapters of the Prophet of Consolation, at a time when ordinary observers could not discern the eventual triumphs and policy of Cyrus (Wiener)."

v. 3. קמץ בז״ק

3. The lit. translation of the first part of this verse is : "The slaughterer of an ox, a slayer of a man ; the sacrificer of the sheep, a breaker of a dog's neck ; the offerer of an oblation—swines' blood, &c." This is often explained to mean that he who offers the statutory sacrifices but is not animated by a sincere spirit is no better than he who takes a leading part in some horrible and unholy cult involving human sacrifices. No Prophet, however, would be guilty of such an exaggeration. More probably the Prophet has in mind those who combined outward observance of Jewish ceremonial with the destestable rites of some debased fetish-worship. There is no reason, however, to assume that these heathen worshippers indulged, or were permitted by the Persian authorities to indulge, in human sacrifices. The words מכה איש only mean "striketh a man" (Ibn Ezra), and not "slayeth a man." The Heb. root of מכה is used for "inflicting stripes," and may therefore here refer to sacred flagellations or scourgings which, as is well known, formed part of many pagan secret cults. He that sacrificeth an ox at God's Temple, complains our Prophet, is at the same time acting as flagellator or sacred scourger at heathen mystery worship !

4. their mockings. Because they—the apostate and obstinate transgressors—have chosen to do that which mocks Me (v. 3), I will choose for them suffering that will mock their hopes.

word. 3. He that killeth an ox is as he that slayeth a man: he that sacrificeth a lamb, as
he that breaketh a dog's neck; he that offereth
a meal offering, as he that offereth swine's blood;
he that burneth frankincense, as he that blesseth
an idol: yea, they have chosen their own ways,
and their soul delighteth in their abominations;
4. I also will choose their mockings, and will bring their fears upon them; because when I called,
none did answer; when I spake, they did not
hear: but they did that which was evil in mine
eyes, and chose that wherein I delighted not.

5. Hear the word of the LORD, ye that tremble
at his word: Your brethren that hate you, that cast you out for my name's sake, have said, Let
the LORD be glorified, that we may see your
joy; but they shall be ashamed. 6. A voice of cast you out. That refuse to associate with you (Cheyne). The Heb. root means, in later use, to excommunicate.

let the LORD be glorified . . joy. These are the taunting words of the irreligious and insolent opponents.

6. a voice of tumult. The Prophet already seems to hear the sounds of the coming judgment against the mockers.

v. 3. 8. כצ״ל

7-14. The Prophet again breaks off with words of comfort and hope to the faithful community.

7. Zion is the mother, and the verse describes the swift increase in her population through the return of her faithful children from all parts.

8. shall be a land be born in one day. Emphasises the rapidity of this remarkable rebirth. It will seem as if Zion were regenerated in one day.

9. The work of Restoration and salvation shall be complete. God will not leave it unfinished.

10. A call to the children restored, and those still in Exile, to rejoice with Jerusalem.

all ye that mourn over her. All those in Exile, or those of the Return who have been depressed at the slow realisation of their hopes concerning Zion.

12. Peace and prosperity shall stream into Zion, like a river that overflows its banks.

glory. Wealth.

to his enemies. 7. Before she travailed, she brought forth; before her pain came, she was delivered of a man child. 8. Who hath heard
such a thing? who hath seen such things? Shall
a land be born in one day? shall a nation be brought forth at once? for as soon as Zion
travailed, she brought forth her children. 9. Shall
I bring to the birth, and not cause to bring forth?
saith the LORD: shall I that cause to bring forth
shut the womb? saith my God.

10. Rejoice ye with Jerusalem, and be glad
for her, all ye that love her: rejoice for joy with
her, all ye that mourn over her: 11. that ye may
suck and be satisfied with the breasts of her
consolations; that ye may milk out, and be
delighted with the abundance of her glory. 12.
For thus saith the LORD, Behold I will extend
peace to her like a river, and the glory of the nations like an overflowing stream, and ye shall
suck thereof; ye shall be borne upon the side,
and shall be dandled upon the knees. 13. As
one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you; and ye shall be comforted in Jerusalem.

shall be borne upon the side. Continues the figure of the nursling in the preceding verse. The nations become their foster-mothers.

13. as one whom his mother comforteth. God's is not only a Father's love. "As the grown man, coming back with wounds and weariness upon him to be comforted of his mother" (G. A. Smith), finds there the comfort he seeks, so will God comfort the men of Zion. God is our Mother.

14. your bones shall flourish. Your bodily frames shall be filled with renewed youth and vigour.

15-16. The Prophet returns to the coming judgment of God against His enemies.

17. Once more a reference to the idolatries of the apostates.

behind one in the midst. The Massoretes read the feminine form אחת for "one." The reference therefore is to an asherah, a grove of sacred trees or poles set up near an altar for idol-worship in the garden. If the Keri is followed, and the word is read as written, אחר, the reference would be to a priest who led the company of worshippers.

the mouse. Forbidden like the swine; its flesh was, with that of the other "detestable things," eaten as part of the rites of this heathen cult.

14. And ye shall see it, and your heart shall rejoice, and your bones shall flourish like the
tender grass: and the hand of the Lord shall
be known toward his servants, and he will have indignation against his enemies. 15. For behold;
the LORD will come in fire, and his chariots shall

fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. 16. For
by fire will the LORD plead, and by his sword,
with all flesh: and the slain of the LORD shall

I know their works and their thoughts: the time

and they shall come, and shall see my glory. 19.
And I will set a sign among them, and I will
send such as escape of them unto the nations, to Tarshish, Pul and Lud, that draw the bow, to Tubal and Javan, to the isles afar off, that have
not heard my fame, neither have seen my glory;
and they shall declare my glory among the nations.

19. I will set a sign among them. i.e. the nations, by a mighty act of judgment and retribution. Those of the peoples that survive are represented as going to far-off lands to tell of God, His greatness and glory.

Tarshish. The town of Tartessus in Spain.

Pul and Lud. Probably districts in N. Africa.

Javan. Greece.

v. 23. סבירי׳ יבואו

20. Impressed by what they thus hear, these far-off nations shall bring to Jerusalem all the Israelites dwelling among them, and in a manner appropriate to the greatness of the occasion.

21. and of them also will I take for priests and Levites. Of the converted Gentiles and the Jews who are brought back by them, I will take to assist the priests and Levites in their service (Kimchi). This thought is quite in accordance with the universalist spirit in Isaiah.

20. And they shall bring all your brethren out of all the nations for an offering unto the LORD, upon
horses, and in chariots, and in litters, and upon
mules, and upon swift beasts, to my holy mountain
Jerusalem, saith the LORD, as the children of Israel
bring their offering in a clean vessel into the house of the LORD. 21. And of them also will I take for priests and for Levites, saith the LORD.
22. For as the new heavens and the new earth,
which I will make, shall remain before me, saith
the LORD, so shall your seed and your name
remain. 23. And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath
to another, shall all flesh come to worship before

22–23. In this new, and better, order of things, the race and influence of Israel will continue for ever, leading to the fulfilment of Israel's mission, i.e. the universal worship of the One God, with Jerusalem as the devotional capital of mankind.

23. from one new moon to another. lit. " as often as there is a new moon on its new moon, etc," i.e. on every New Moon and Sabbath ; New Moon by New Moon and Sabbath by Sabbath. This v. renders this chapter especially appropriate as Haftorah for Sabbath Rosh Chodesh.

v. 23. סבירין יבואו

24. A survey again of the conflict against evil, and its final defeat, through which the above great goal is reached. Delitzsch points out that, in effect, the thought is the same as in the concluding sentence of other sections of the second half of Isaiah—" there is no peace unto the wicked " (XLVIII, 22, and LVII, 21). Under the figure of the worm that dieth not, and the fire that is not quenched, we have here a symbolical representation of the lasting remorse that, on the realisation of their wickedness, troubles the souls of evil-doers. The knowledge of this, which will be clear to all (" And they shall go forth and look "), will become a restraining moral influence. It will be a factor in the attainment of the great consummation (the universal worship of the one true God) described in the previous verse.

me, saith the LORD. 24. And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcases of the men that have transgressed against me: for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh.

And it shall come to pass that from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the LORD.

they shall go forth. The worshippers.

According to ancient Jewish custom, v. 23 is read a second time after v. 24, so as to conclude the book (of which this is the last chapter) with words of comfort and encouragement. There is a similar direction in regard to concluding Malachi, Lamentations and Ecclesiastes. In each case, the last verse but one is reprinted in the Heb. text, and repeated during the reading in the Synagogue.

SHOFETIM

ISAIAH LI, 12–LII, 12

This is the fourth of the Haftorahs of Consolation: Israel shall be redeemed from exile, and be the means of extending God's salvation to all mankind. The Haftorah brings a programme of religion—to plant heaven and establish the earth for the children of men. The Sidrah, in one of its luminous commands—"justice, justice, shalt thou follow"—gives the fundamental prerequisite for all human living on earth.

12–16. THE ALMIGHTY GOD IS ZION'S COMFORTER

12. afraid of man. Such as the King of Babylon.
son of man. i.e. a member of the human race, of frail humanity.
made as grass. Given up to destruction.

V. SHOFETIM

Isaiah LI, 12–LII, 12

51 12. I, even I, am he that comforteth you: who art thou, that thou art afraid of man that shall die, and of the son of man which shall be made as grass; 13. and hast forgotten the Lord thy Maker, that stretched forth the heavens, and laid the foundations of the earth; and fearest continually all the day because of the fury of the oppressor, as though he made ready to destroy?
and where is the fury of the oppressor? 14. The captive exile shall speedily be loosed; and he shall not die and go down into the pit, neither shall his bread fail. 15. For I am the Lord thy God, which stilleth the sea, when the waves thereof roar: the Lord of hosts is his name.

13. oppressor. The Babylonian rulers. Ehrlich refers this to Cyrus, the great conqueror, who then filled the hearts of men, and also of the overwhelming number of the Jewish exiles, with alarm.

as though he made ready to destroy. "As if he intended to destroy you" (Ehrlich).

where is the fury of the oppressor? Cyrus has no intention to destroy you. On the contrary.

14. captive exile. Israel; lit. "he that is bent down."

pit. Grave.

15. stilleth the sea. Restrains its fury, so that its waves beat in vain against the shore. "By the roar and crash of the ocean on the beach, the Hebrew prophet sought to render the futile rage of the world, as it dashed on the steadfast will of God" (G A. Smith).

16 וָאָשִׂם דְּבָרַי בְּפִיךָ וּבְצֵל יָדִי כִּסִּיתִיךָ לִנְטֹעַ שָׁמַיִם וְלִיסֹד

v. 16. קמץ בז״ק

16. I have put. He Who had in the beginning created the heavens and the earth would now, through the Righteous Remnant, the sanctified minority in Israel, create a new heaven and a new earth. This v. is of wonderful depth, and is in fact a summary of Israel's place and function in the spiritual life of humanity.

put my words in thy mouth. God's message to man was through Israel. " As long as the world lasts, all who want to make progress in righteousness will come to Israel for inspiration, as the people who have the sense for righteousness most glowing and strongest " (Matthew Arnold).

covered thee. Wonderful as had been the Election of Israel, equally so has been Israel's preservation through all the fires and floods of history. Both such Divine Election and miraculous Preservation were for purposes that embrace all mankind. The Prophet now enumerates three of these purposes.

that I may plant the heavens. The new heavens and the new earth ; see LXV, 17. With the break-up of the heathen kingdoms and the restoration of Israel begins a new epoch for humanity. Heb. לנטע שמים, lit. " to plant Heaven." Heaven is here compared to a seed that will grow into a tree, and yield fruit and shelter to the children of men. And Heaven may be planted ! Whenever we teach a child by word or example a noble thought, deed, or way of life, we plant Heaven. In the same way, Heaven can be planted in the soul of a people, or peoples. Israel was chosen and Providentially preserved, in order that through Israel God might plant Heaven—i.e. righteousness and mercy—in the soul of humanity.

16. And I have put my words in thy mouth, and have covered thee in the shadow of mine hand, that I may plant the heavens, and lay the foundations of the earth, and say unto Zion, Thou art my people.

17. Awake, awake, stand up, O Jerusalem, which hast drunk at the hand of the LORD the cup of his fury; thou hast drunken the bowl of the cup of staggering, and drained it. 18. There is none to guide her among all the sons whom she hath brought forth; neither is there any that taketh her by the hand of all the sons that she hath brought up. 19. These two things are befallen thee; who shall bemoan thee? desolation and destruction, and the famine and the sword; how shall I comfort thee? 20. Thy sons have fainted, lay the foundations of the earth. i.e. to teach mankind what are the true foundations of human society: not "blood and iron," but Truth, Justice, Peace—ideals which the Servant of the Lord was to teach the children of men.

thou art my people. Israel to remain throughout history a witness of God among the nations.

17–23. THE END OF ZION'S TRIBULATION

17. awake, awake. From thy despair! Since her fall, Jerusalem is in a stupor, having drained the staggering cup of misfortune and ruin to its very dregs.

18. none to guide her. A drunken person needs someone to guide him, if he is not to stumble.

19. two things. In this verse and the two following, the Prophet pictures the misery wrought by the siege and destruction of Jerusalem: ruin (desolation and destruction), and the death of her citizens (famine and the sword).

how shall I comfort thee? Or, "by whom shall I comfort thee?" i.e. by citing which other nation whose sufferings have been as overwhelming as thine (Rashi, Ibn Ezra).

21. not with wine. But with affliction from God.

23. said to thy soul. Those who afflicted Israel have at all times demanded of Israel that it give up its soul for them to go over. This Israel has ever refused to do; only its back would it give for the oppressor to go over. Therefore it survived. When others are thus fallen, they rise not again; המה כרעו ונפלו (Psalm xx, 9).

Babylon has no permanent property in Israel whom it so heavily oppresses; therefore the Lord, who punished Israel by giving him over for a time to his enemies, will now restore him" (M. Arnold).

4. without cause. Without having acquired any right over Israel by services rendered to God.

KI THETZE

ISAIAH LIV, 1–10

The fifth Haftorah of Consolation. Its message is the everlasting mercy of God. "For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but My kindness shall not depart from thee." This entails for the Israelites the sacred duty of imitating God's ways of lovingkindness, by loyal observance of the precepts of humanity and pity proclaimed in the Sidrah.

JERUSALEM REBUILT

1. more are the children. Zion's cities shall be repopulated; Jerusalem desolate was like a woman forsaken. Now with her exiles returned, she is like the wife re-united with husband and children.

VI. KI THETZE

54 1. Sing, O barren, thou that didst not bear; break forth into singing, and cry aloud, thou that didst not travail with child: for more are the children of the desolate than the children of the married wife, saith the Lord. 2. Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations; spare not: lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes. 3. For thou shalt spread abroad on the right hand and on the left; and thy seed shall possess the nations,
and make the desolate cities to be inhabited.

2. enlarge. Because of the increase of Zion's population.
tent. i.e. Jerusalem.
thine habitations. The other cities of Israel. All of Zion's children who have become estranged from her, wherever they may be dispersed, shall renew their allegiance and return to her leading.

3. possess. i.e. dispossess those of alien race who have occupied the desolate Jewish cities during the Exile.

v. 4. קמץ בז״ק כ״ד v. 8. כ״א כימי

4. the shame of thy youth. The defeats and humiliations in Israel's earlier history.

thy widowhood. i.e. the Exile, when God, "Zion's husband," seemed to have withdrawn from her. "Widowhood" has a wider significance than in colloquial English, being used to denote a woman abandoned by her husband.

6. even a wife of youth, when she is cast off. Better, and a wife of youth, can she be rejected? (AJ).

7–8. God's anger is but momentary; cf. Psalm xxx, 6. Although the years of the Exile seemed interminably long, they will prove but a brief space in the vast sweep of Israel's history.

9–10. Yet another utterance of comfort.

9. for this. i.e. the Exile and the comfort. The Exile is compared to the Flood; and the comfort, to the Divine promise that the Flood should never recur.

4. Fear not; for thou shalt not be ashamed:
neither be thou confounded; for thou shalt not be put to shame: for thou shalt forget the shame of thy youth, and the reproach of thy widowhood shalt thou remember no more. 5. For thy Maker is thine husband; the LORD of hosts is his name:
and the Holy One of Israel is thy redeemer:
the God of the whole earth shall he be called.
6. For the LORD hath called thee as a wife forsaken and grieved in spirit, even a wife of youth, when she is cast off, saith thy God. 7. For a small moment have I forsaken thee; but with great mercies will I gather thee. 8. In a little wrath
I hid my face from thee for a moment; but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the LORD thy redeemer. 9. For this is as the waters of Noah unto me: for as I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth, so have I sworn that I would not be wroth with thee, nor rebuke thee. 10. For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed;
but my kindness shall not depart from thee,
neither shall my covenant of peace be removed,
saith the LORD that hath mercy on thee.

Isaiah LX

The Sidrah brings the close of the Second Discourse of the Lawgiver with the Divine promise to make Israel, "high above all nations." The Haftorah of the sixth Sabbath of Consolation gives the highest spiritual interpretation of that promise ("The Lord shall arise upon thee, and His glory shall be seen upon thee. And nations shall come to thy light"). It proclaims in ecstatic terms the glories which Jerusalem will enjoy in the era of Divine favour. The light of Deliverance, so long waited for, is about to shine. "Thick darkness enfolds the earth, the darkness which typifies alienation from God. But God has begun to reveal Himself anew—not as yet to the whole earth, but to its central people, Israel. As 'the children of Israel had light in their dwellings' when there was 'thick darkness in all the land of Egypt,' so now there are beaming over Israel the first rays of a newly risen sun" (Cheyne).

Isaiah LX

60 1. Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. 2. For, behold, darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the peoples: but the Lord shall arise
upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee.
3. And nations shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising. 4. Lift up thine eyes round about, and see: they all gather themselves together, they come to thee: thy sons shall come from far, and thy daughters shall be carried in the arms. 5. Then thou shalt see

1. arise. Zion is addressed: arise out of the night of despair and oppression.

thy light is come. Thy salvation is at hand (Kimchi).

2. shall cover. Better, doth cover. The Prophet sees the kingdoms of the earth breaking up amid gloom and misery; with Israel alone is light and joy in the Lord (M. Arnold).

3. come to thy light. From the outer darkness, to share the Divine light with Israel; or, "to walk by thy light" (Luzzatto), for out of Zion goeth forth the law of life to all children of men.

4. thy sons. "The coming of the Gentiles will satisfy Zion's desire for due appreciation of her spiritual pre-eminence; but the longing of her heart can only be satisfied by the restoration of her banished children" (Elmslie-Skinner).

8. doves to their windows. Having looked landward and watched the coming of the caravans, the Prophet now looks seaward and sees the white-sailed ships speeding across the Mediterranean to Palestinian harbours, as if they were a flight of doves returning to their nests. The emphasis is also on the swiftness of their flight, for "they fly more swiftly on their return to their nests with food for their young than when they departed" (Kimchi).

sea shall be turned unto thee, the wealth of the

and shall proclaim the praises of the LORD.
7. All the flocks of Kedar shall be gathered together unto thee, the rams of Nebaioth shall acceptance on mine altar, and I will glorify the house of my glory. 8. Who are these that fly

It is quite needless to make "their silver and their gold" refer to the nations. This only gives some non-Jewish commentators an opportunity to denounce the imaginary exploitation contemplated by the author of these chapters whom they call Trito-Isaiah, and his alleged appeal to covetousness and pride of race.

Isaiah LXI, 10–LXIII, 9

This is the last of the Haftorahs of Consolation. It is invariably read on the Sabbath before Rosh Hashanah. The opening words of the Haftora, reflect the spiritual exaltation which at that season possesses the soul of the loyal and God-fearing Israelite.

as the garden causeth the things that are sown in it to spring forth; so the Lord GOD will cause righteousness and praise to spring forth before all the nations.

11. as the earth . . . bud. "The Prophet compares the salvation of Israel from Exile to the sprouting of the seed from the earth. The seed decays in the earth, and yet it quickens with life; it then renews itself to something better and fresher than it formerly was, and in ever so much greater quantities than before. In the same way, Israel was many years in Exile, disintegrating and despairing; and yet when the hour of Redemption struck he sprouted, renewed his youth, and increased in number, dignity, and greatness beyond his earlier state. And all the nations shall witness and acknowledge this wonderful event" (Kimchi).

designs for Israel. But so sure are God's purposes of fulfilment that even if mortal instruments fail, God Himself will intervene for His people. The Prophet selects Edom, the ancient kinsman but bitter enemy of Israel who maliciously assisted in the destruction of Jerusalem (see Obadiah, Genesis, p. 492), as the type of enemies who knew neither righteousness nor pity in their dealings with Israel. In a short drama of wonderful forcefulness of phrase and pictorial power, a startled watchman perceives the majestic figure of a Divine Being approaching Zion. He asks the meaning of the blood-stained garments; and is told that it is God Himself returning from single combat, executing

" The image presented is one of the most impressive and awe-inspiring in Scripture, and it is difficult to say which is most to be admired, the dramatic vividness of the vision, or the reticence which conceals the actual work of slaughter, and concentrates the attention on the Divine Hero as He emerges victoriously from the conflict " (Skinner). Rashi draws special attention to the marked anthropomorphism of this passage, representing God under the image of a fierce, human warrior.

9. in all their afflictions, he was afflicted. This is the ancient Jewish interpretation, following the Traditional Reading (Keri) and not the Text (Kethib); it is defended by Ibn Ezra and Luzzatto, and is now adopted by most moderns. For the meaning, cf. Judges X, 16 ("The LORD's soul was grieved because of the misery of Israel"); and Psalm XCI, 15 ("I will be with him in trouble," עמו אנכי בצרה). God Himself suffers—the whole cause of the Divine is in temporary eclipse whenever Tyranny becomes mighty on earth, and vents its barbarism in afflicting Israel.

of the LORD, and the praises of the LORD, according

SABBATH SHUVAH

Hosea XIV, 2–10

Hosea is the Prophet of the Decline and Fall of Northern Israel. He is a deeply affectionate nature, whose message is the unwearying love of God to Israel. "Let Israel come back to God, and call upon Him in its anguish. Let Israel seek the Lord, it is still time"—such is the burden of his prophecy. The passion of his soul reaches its fullest expression in the concluding chapter of his Book. This is appropriately enough the Haftorah for the Sabbath of Repentance, שבת שובה, lit. "The Sabbath of O Israel, return unto the Lord." The very term, Teshuvah, i.e. "a turning away from sin and a turning towards God," is taken from the word שובה in its opening verse. The doctrine of Repentance which is founded on it, is of fundamental importance in Judaism; see Genesis, p. 59.

IX. SABBATH SHUVAH

Hosea XIV, 2-10

14 2. O Israel, return unto the Lord thy God; for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity. 3. Take with you words, and return unto the Lord: say unto him, Take away all iniquity, and accept that which is good: so will we render as bullocks
the offering of our lips. 4. Asshur shall not save us; we will not ride upon horses: neither will we say any more to the work of our hands, Ye are our gods: for in thee the fatherless findeth mercy. 5. I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely: for mine anger is turned away from him. 6. I will be as the dew unto Israel: he shall blossom as the lily, and cast forth his roots as

A Call to Repentance

2. return unto the Lord. God's love and mercy are unending. Even after the pronouncement of doom, there is hope and forgiveness for repentant Israel.

3. take with you words. God does not require gifts or sacrifices, but sincere confession and penitent words expressing the resolve to amend (Midrash).

4. Asshur shall not save us. Israel will no longer put their trust in alliances with foreign, idol-worshipping nations—Assyria or Egypt.

will not ride upon horses. A reference to the help looked for from Egypt; See I Kings x, 28; Isaiah xxx and xxxi.

5–7. God's gracious and loving reply to those words of repentance and faith. The blessings that will follow Israel's spiritual regeneration.

6. blossom as the lily. Israel shall be as the lily, a symbol of beauty and fruitfulness; but his roots shall be deep and unmovable as Lebanon.

fall therein. They stumble as if the ways were actually crooked, because their wrong thoughts and desires pervert the meaning of the Divine commands. Thus they do wrong and stumble, even when they would claim to be walking in the ways of the Lord.

Micah VII, 18–20

For the life of Micah, see Numbers, p. 427. He was a contemporary of Isaiah, and like him dreamt of the time when the nations would learn war no more. Micah was the Prophet of the poor, and fearlessly denounced luxury, irreligion and degeneracy. In these concluding verses of his Book, he revels in the thought of the Divine Forgiveness. These verses are also read, after the Book of Jonah, at Minchah on the Day of Atonement.

beauty shall be as the olive tree, and his smell

as the wine of Lebanon. 9. Ephraim shall say, What have I to do any more with idols? I have answered, and will regard him: I am like a a green fir tree; from me is thy fruit found.
10. Who is wise, and he shall understand these things? prudent, and he shall know them? for the ways of the LORD are right, and the just shall walk in them; but transgressors shall fall therein.

On Sabbath Vayyelech add the following:

MICAH VII, 18-20

7 18. Who is a God like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity, and passeth by the transgression of the remnant of his heritage? he retaineth not his anger for ever, because he delighteth in mercy

18. like unto thee. "The Prophet does not mean that other gods have a real existence, but speaks from the point of view of the other nations who believe that they do really exist" (Cheyne); Exod. xv, 11.

that pardoneth iniquity. This and other phrases are a reminiscence of the supreme revelation of the Divine Attributes accorded to Moses on Sinai—"merciful and gracious, slow to anger and abounding in lovingkindness and truth; keeping mercy unto thousands, forgiving iniquity, transgression and sin." These Thirteen Divine Attributes have always had a wonderful fascination for the Jew, and remnant of his heritage. The Prophets hold fast to the belief in a purified minority in Israel, a righteous nucleus that is indestructible. And historic Israel that has suffered all things, endured all things, and survived all things for its Faith, may well speak of itself as that Remnant, and daily pray: "O Guardian of Israel, guard the remnant of Israel, and suffer not Israel to perish, who say, Hear O Israel. O Guardian of an only nation, guard the remnant of an only nation, and suffer not an only nation to perish, who proclaim the unity of thy name, saying, The Lord our God, the Lord is One. On Sabbath Haazinu add the following:

Joel II, 15-27

are alive (Cheyne). The Rabbis declared, "Jacob our father is not dead; even as his children are alive, so is he alive." Jacob and Abraham are therefore equivalent to, "the seed of Jacob and Abraham".

The above three verses, with a slight interpolation between verses 19 and 20, are recited during the Tashlich ceremony (Authorised Prayer Book, p. 254), on the afternoon of the First Day of New Year; or, on the Second Day, if the First fall on Sabbath.

Joel II, 15–27

Joel, a Prophet of Repentance, of unknown date, depicts Divine Judgment under the form of a terrible locust plague, which threatens the land with destruction. The people fast and pray unto God, "and the Lord hath pity on his people"—an appropriate selection for the Sabbath before the Day of Atonement. Joel foresees the day when the Lord will pour out His spirit upon all flesh, "when your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions"—when youth shall have the knowledge of age, and age the enthusiasm of youth. Is not such religious illumination of all classes of society, such rejuvenation of the soul and renewal of the spirit, the main purpose of the Days of Repentance, culminating in the Day of Atonement?

15–17. All are to take part in public humiliation and fast.

15. trumpet. The ram's horn, the shofar, summoning the people to a religious gathering.

A swarm of locusts is appalling in its power of collective devastation. In quantity it is a thing incredible: it literally darkens the sky. Locusts are the incarnation of hunger, and a swarm clears the land of all vegetation as with a razor. The locusts are then driven by the wind into the desert or the Sea; and their dead bodies are often cast

23. the former in just measure. The Heb. המורה לצדקה, may also mean "the instructor in Righteousness," in which sense it has been taken by some Jewish and non-Jewish expositors; cf. Deut. XVIII, 15; Mal. III, 1, 23. (IV, 5 in English Bibles).

II Samuel XXII

This magnificent Song of Thanksgiving, which is almost identical with Psalm xviii, forms an appropriate parallel to the Farewell Song of Moses read on this Sabbath. David traces Divine Providence in his own marvellous escapes from persecution and peril, and renders thanks to God Almighty for his deliverance and victories. Such also was the last lesson that Moses endeavoured to impress upon Israel in his Song—trust in Providence, loyalty to the God, and gratitude for His infinite mercies. On the character of David, see Leviticus p. 364.

II Samuel XXII

This Haftorah is read on the Sabbath between the Day of Atonement and Tabernacles.

22 1. And David spake unto the Lord the words of this song in the day that the Lord delivered him out of the hand of all his enemies, and out of the hand of Saul: 2. and he said,

The Lord is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer, even mine;
3. The God of my rock, in him will I trust;
My shield, and the horn of my salvation, my high tower, and my refuge;
My saviour, thou savest me from violence.
4. I will call upon the Lord who is worthy to be praised:
So shall I be saved from mine enemies.

2–4. Invocation

2. my rock. David's early warfare had been mostly waged from mountain strongholds and hiding places, and he draws his figures of speech from those early experiences.

3. the God of my rock. Better, the God who is my rock (AJ). the horn of my salvation. My horn of salvation; i.e. the Power that saves and delivers me. "The horn is symbol of victorious strength, and is borrowed from animals who push with their horns" (Rashi).

4. I will call . . . enemies. Better, Praised, I cry, is the Lord, and I am saved from mine enemies (AJ). This verse is the theme of the Psalm.

5–7. Prayer in Peril

5. waves of death. Dire adversity threatened to engulf him.

ungodliness. Heb. Belial; here in the meaning of destruction, mortal peril.

6. Sheol. The nether-world, the grave. Sheol and Death are like hunters lying in wait for their prey with nets and snares.

7. his temple. In heaven (Kimchi).

8–20. His Prayer is Answered

" The manifestation of God's power to deliver is poetically described as the physical appearance of God Himself, accompanied by earthquake and thunderstorm. He is conceived as dwelling in the heart of the thunderstorm, surrounded by fires which break forth as lightning through the cloud " (Dummelow).

8. then. Forthwith earthquake, lightning and storm show God's power against His and Israel's enemies.

foundations of heaven. The mountains, which seem like pillars supporting the sky.

5. For the waves of death compassed me,
The floods of ungodliness made me afraid.
6. The cords of Sheol were round about me:
The snares of death came upon me.
7. In my distress I called upon the LORD,
Yea, I called unto my God:
And he heard my voice out of his temple,
And my cry came into his ears.
8. Then the earth shook and trembled,
The foundations of heaven moved
And were shaken, because he was wroth.
9. There went up a smoke in his wrath,
And fire out of his mouth devoured:
Coals were kindled by it.
10. He bowed the heavens also, and came down;
And thick darkness was under his feet.
11. And he rode upon a cherub, and did fly:
Yea, he was seen upon the wings of the wind.

9. "The startling boldness of the language will be intelligible if the distinctive character of Hebrew symbolism is borne in mind. It is no 'gross anthropomorphism,' for the Psalmist did not intend that the mind's eye should shape his figures into a concrete form. His aim is vividly to express the manifestation of the wrath of God, and he does so in figures which are intended to remain as purely mental conceptions, not to be realised as though God appeared in any visible shape" (Kirkpatrick).

11. upon a cherub. A winged angelic being; here the personification of the storm-cloud.

he was seen. Heb. וירא. In Ps. XVIII, it is וידא, "yea, he flew swiftly."

v. 15. ויהם קרי

12. pavilions. Better, his pavilion—a tent which shrouds God's Majesty.

13. at the brightness. Ps. xviii, 13, reads: "At the brightness before Him, there passed through His thick clouds hail-stones and coals of fire (AJ)."

14. Most High. Heb. Elyon. Abraham Geiger confidently asserted this Divine title to be of late origin, not earlier than Macabbean times. Its occurrence in the recently discovered Ras-Shamra Tablets proves it to be pre-Mosaic.

uttered his voice. Thundered; Ps. xxix, 3f.

16. foundation . . . bare. Nature is convulsed to its lowest depths. The drying up of the Red Sea is woven into the imagery of the storm.

17. drew me. The same word as is used of drawing Moses out of the Nile.

20. large place. The opposite phrase for "straits" and distress.

12. And he made darkness pavilions round about him,
Gathering of waters, thick clouds of the skies.
13. At the brightness before him
Coals of fire were kindled.
14. The LORD thundered from heaven,
And the Most High uttered his voice.
15. And he sent out arrows, and scattered them;
Lightning, and discomfited them.
16. Then the channels of the sea appeared,
The foundations of the world were laid bare,
By the rebuke of the LORD,
At the blast of the breath of his nostrils.
17. He sent from on high, he took me;
He drew me out of many waters;
18. He delivered me from my strong enemy,
From them that hated me; for they were too mighty for me.
19. They came upon me in the day of my calamity:
But the LORD was my stay.
20. He brought me forth also into a large place:
He delivered me, because he delighted in me.
21. The LORD rewarded me according to my righteousness:
According to the cleanness of my hands hath he recompensed me.

21–31. GOD'S DELIGHT IN GOODNESS AND MERCY

21. righteousness. David does not lay claim to perfect righteousness but to single-hearted devotion to God.

cleanness of hands. Obviously this Song must have been written before David's great sin.

יְהוָה כְּצִדְקָתִי   כְּבֹר יָדַי יָשִׁיב

v. 23. מִשְׁפָּטָיו קרי

24. perfect. Single-hearted (see Deut. xviii, 13) and with undivided devotion.

mine iniquity. Possibly this may mean, My besetting sin.

26. merciful. David had been merciful to Saul and his house, and God had been merciful to him.

perfect. Upright.

27. froward. Better, subtle (AJ). God shows His perfection to those who walk in His ways, but opposes those who oppose Him. The perverse man is given over by God to follow his own crooked way, till it brings him to ruin ; for example, Pharaoh (Rashi). The Rabbis, who made the Imitation of God a great ethical ideal, laid it down that such imitation must be confined to His qualities of lovingkindness and righteousness, and must not embrace His attributes of severity and rigid justice. Indeed they distinctly taught that among the things which God alone can use as His instruments, are jealousy (Deut. vi, 15) and the quality indicated in the words " with the perverse thou wilt shew thyself froward." These qualities are not for mortals to imitate (Schechter).

22. For I have kept the ways of the LORD,
And have not wickedly departed from my God.
23. For all his judgements were before me:
And as for his statutes, I did not depart from them.
24. I was also perfect toward him,
And I kept myself from mine iniquity.
25. Therefore hath the LORD recompensed me according to my righteousness;
According to my cleanness in his eyesight.
26. With the merciful thou wilt shew thyself merciful,
With the perfect man thou wilt shew thyself perfect;
27. With the pure thou wilt shew thyself pure;
And with the perverse thou wilt shew thyself froward.
28. And the afflicted people thou wilt save:
But thine eyes are upon the haughty, that thou mayest bring them down.
29. For thou art my lamp, O LORD:
And the LORD will lighten my darkness.
30. For by thee I run upon a troop:
By my God do I leap over a wall.

28. bring them down. Humble them.
29. darkness. Night of woe or danger.
30. by thee. By trust in Thee (Rashi).
upon a troop. See I Sam. xxx.
over a wall. The capture of Zion; II Sam. v, 6–8.
31. his way is perfect. "Rendering unto each man according to his deserts" (Kimchi).

tried. Refined, like pure gold.

32–43. Victory belongs to God.

33. guideth . . . way. Or, "who letteth my way go forth straight" (AJ).

34. hinds' feet. Agile, swift and sure. They are so contructed that they can stand on the narrowest and most slippery crags. Hence, the phrase means sure-footedness—an indispensible qualification in mountain-warfare, as David's largely was.

my high places. His mountain strongholds.

35. bow of brass. His is the ability to bend a metal bow; cf. Odyssey XXI, 409.

36. gentleness. Or, "condescension." Mendelssohn renders the word, "chastisement": God's punishment of David's failings has contributed to his greatness!

31. As for God, his way is perfect:
The word of the LORD is tried;
He is a shield unto all them that trust in him.
32. For who is God, save the LORD?
And who is a rock, save our God?
33. God is my strong fortress:
And he guideth the perfect in his way.
34. He maketh my feet like hinds' feet:
And setteth me upon my high places.
35. He teacheth my hands to war;
So that mine arms do bend a bow of brass.
36. Thou hast also given me the shield of thy salvation:
And thy gentleness hath made me great.
37. Thou hast enlarged my steps under me,
And my feet have not slipped.
38. I have pursued mine enemies, and destroyed them;
Neither did I turn again till they were consumed.
39. And I have consumed them, and smitten them through, that they cannot arise
Yea, they are fallen under my feet.
40. For thou hast girded me with strength unto the battle:
Thou hast subdued under me those that rose up against me.

37. enlarged. Given me free space for my foothold.

40. strength. He recognises that all his personal advantages are gifts of God.

43. spread them abroad. i.e. fling them away as worthless refuse.

46. out of their close places. Terrified into surrendering.

47–51. Concluding Thanksgiving.

47. God of the rock of salvation. Better, God, my rock of salvation (AJ).

" Vengeance is God's vindication of the righteousness and integrity of His servants. Such a thanksgiving as this does not show a spirit of vindictiveness in David, but is a recognition that God had pleaded his cause and maintained his right " (Kirkpatrick).

41. Thou hast also made mine enemies turn their

That I might cut off them that hate me.
42. They looked, but there was none to save;
Even unto the LORD, but he answered them

43. Then did I beat them small as the dust of the

I did stamp them as the mire of the streets,
and did spread them abroad.
44. Thou also hast delivered me from the strivings

Thou hast kept me to be the head of the

A people whom I have not known shall serve

49. And that bringeth me forth from mine enemies:
Yea, thou liftest me up above them that rise up against me:
Thou deliverest me from the violent man.
50. Therefore I will give thanks unto thee, O Lord, among the nations,

VEZOTH HA-BERACHAH

Joshua I

Israel's story did not close with the death of Moses. This is one of the lessons which the choice of this chapter as the Prophetical Reading for the last Sidrah of the Pentateuch is to teach. The reading of the first chapter of Joshua, which opens the section of Scripture known as "The Prophets," is to remind us that though Moses is dead, his work and message are eternal, and remain the undying task of all future generations in Israel to fulfil.

The Book of Joshua records the conquest of the Promised Land (I–XII); the Division of the Land (XIII–XXI—Israel's "Domesday Book") and Joshua's Farewell Addresses (XXII–XXIV).

XI. VEZOTH HA-BERACHAH

Joshua I

1 1. Now it came to pass after the death of Moses the servant of the Lord, that the Lord spake unto Joshua the son of Nun, Moses' minister, saying, Moses my servant is dead; 2. now therefore arise, go over this Jordan, thou, and all this people, unto the land which I do give to them, even to the children of Israel. 3. Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon,
to you have I given it, as I spake unto Moses.

Moses' Successor

1. the Lord spake. This characteristic phrase of Scripture is one of the most obvious indications of what we call "inspiration." We are not in a position to define the exact mode in which the Divine message was communicated. Was it an inner conviction borne in upon the soul, voiceless but clear and definite? We cannot tell. "How God reveals Himself to His chosen messengers will scarcely ever be understood. It is the greatest of mysteries; although that he reveals Himself is the greatest of certainties" (Marti).

Moses' minister. This designation, which is otherwise quite unnecessary, gives the reason why Joshua was worthy of such revelation: he had ministered unto Moses (Elijah Wilna).

2, Moses my servant. Not everyone who calls himself "servant of the Lord" does God Himself so designate (Sifri).

was with Moses, so I will be with thee: I will not fail thee, not forsake thee. Be strong and of a good courage: 6. for thou shalt cause this people to inherit the land which I sware unto their fathers to give them. 7. Only be strong and very courageous, to observe to do according to all the law, which Moses my servant commanded thee:
turn not from it to the right hand or to the left, that thou mayest have good success whithersoever thou goest. 8. This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein: for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success. 9. Have not I commanded thee? Be strong and of a good courage; be not affrighted, neither be thou dismayed: for the Lord thy God is with thee withersoever

10. Then Joshua commanded the officers of the people, saying, 11. Pass through the midst of the camp, and command the people, saying, Prepare you victuals; for within three days ye are to pass over this Jordan, to go in to possess the land, which the Lord your God giveth you to possess it.

12. And to the Reubenites, and to the Gadites, and to the half tribe of Manasseh, spake Joshua, saying, 13. Remember the word which Moses the servant of the LORD commanded you, saying, The LORD your God giveth you rest, and will give you this land. 14. Your wives, your little ones, and your cattle, shall abide in the land which Moses gave you beyond Jordan; but ye shall pass over before your brethren armed, all the mighty men of valour, and shall help them; 15. until the LORD have given your brethren rest, as he hath given you, and they also have possessed the land which the LORD your God giveth them: then ye shall return unto the land of your possession, and possess it, which Moses the servant of the LORD gave you beyond Jordan toward the sunrising. 16. And they answered Joshua, saying, All that thou hast commanded us we will do, and whithersoever thou sendest us we will go. 17. According as we hearkened unto Moses in all things, so will we hearken unto thee: only the LORD thy God be with thee, as he was with Moses. 18. Whosoever he be that shall rebel against thy commandment, and shall not hearken unto thy words in all that thou commandest him, he shall be put to death: only be strong and of a good courage.
